Brazil celebrates president's fall

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A day after impeachment, Brazil celebrated the fall of President Fernando Collor de Mello with all the fervor of its famous Carnival, complete with samba bands and street dances.

In Rio de Janeiro, a roar went up at the final congressional vote late Tuesday for the thousands who gathered around an outdoor screen in the downtown theater district.

Many rocked through the night to the strains of the national anthem played to a samba beat by a sound truck.

A crowd of 100,000 sang and chanted on the lawn in front of Congress in Brasilia, the capital, as legislators voted inside.

The commemoration began with the Chamber of Deputies' 441-38 vote to oust Collor, and stretched into the wee hours in cities across this country of 150 million.

Woman dies after release from prison

EDINBURG (AP) — A young Austin woman who spent almost a year in a Mexican prison, accused of purchasing illegal amounts of valium, died Wednesday morning, just hours after being released by authorities.

Jennifer Whitt, 24, who was released Tuesday night from the prison in Reynosa, Mexico, was taken to the emergency room at Edinburg Hospital about 2:20 a.m., said spokeswoman Cynthia Garza.

She died about 30 minutes later.

Ms. Garza said she could not give out any details until an autopsy was performed. Justice of the Peace Rene Torres, who ordered the autopsy, said a report wouldn't be ready for at least four weeks.

Perot spent millions during brief hiatus

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot continued to spend millions after he dropped from the presidential race in July, maintaining a 50-state organization and quietly preparing campaign advertising.

Those expenditures — $4 million in August alone — have put Perot in position for an "October surprise" return if he chooses to make that move on Thursday.

But they also underline a stark contrast between what the Texas billionaire has said publicly and what he has done privately since ending his independent bid for the White House.

At the same time he was spending the money, Perot was declaring that he wouldn't play a spoiler's role, that the chances of his returning were comparable to the likelihood that "a hurricane will go straight up in the air today."

Lawless approves 2 percent merit raise

BY SANDRA PULLEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech President Robert Lawless announced a 2 percent merit pool pay raise for Tech faculty and staff effective immediately at a universitywide faculty meeting Wednesday.

"This 2 percent (increase) is an indication that we want to move ahead and increase salaries," Lawless said. "This is the most we can responsibly do at this time."

Vice Provost Len Ainsworth said colleges and departments will receive an additional 2 percent in salary funding based on the number of filled positions within the department. The merit funding will be divided separately between faculty members and non-faculty employees.

"This will not be an across-the-board pay raise," Ainsworth said. "Although it is more difficult to distribute money based on merit, it rewards the people who are performing exceptionally at the university."

Ainsworth said employee merit will be based primarily on performance.

"We are still behind in salaries," said Faculty Senate President Benjamin Newcomb. "Every little bit helps though. At least the administration is trying to make the situation equitable."

Newcomb said the merit pay raise funding will probably come from the lapsed salaries of faculty and staff who left Tech last year.

Lawless also discussed with faculty the upcoming legislative session and Tech's request for state funding.

"The continued talk about cutting money from higher education is not based on logic," he said. "Higher education is not a place where there are big dollars."

Lawless said increasing faculty and staff salaries and increasing the Higher Education Assistance Fund are priorities in the Tech funding request.

Additional funds for the library, an employee retirement plan and special items will also be requested.

Special need items include the plant stress laboratory, wind research, Hispanic studies, the leather institute and activities associated with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"Back in the 1960s when the coordinating board selected the University of Texas, Texas A&M, the University of Houston and Texas Tech doctoral institutions they did not provide a funding mechanism for the programs," he said. "The special items request are a mechanism to provide funding for research."

Tech administrators will request $115 million from the Legislature for fiscal year 1994 and $123 million for 1995. Tech was allocated $101 million for 1993.

Lawless said state agencies have asked higher education institutions to decrease their funding requests.

"My job is to represent the needs of the university," Lawless said. "We have been listening to the guidelines and advice coming from the coordinating board in making our request."

Program to assist local crime victims

BY LYDIA GUAJARDO
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Lubbock will begin its Crimes Victims Assistance Program by the end of this year.

Program Director Pam Stephenson requested a $13,000 grant from the Lubbock City Council last week to start the program and help fund it for nine months.

If awarded, Lubbock's District Attorney's office will match the grant, which will be a one-time beginning fund. Forfeited drug money and possible funds set aside in the city's budget will comprise the grant.

"If the program is not approved then the money we were going to use will just go toward the purchase of new equipment for the D.A.'s office," District Attorney Travis Ware said.

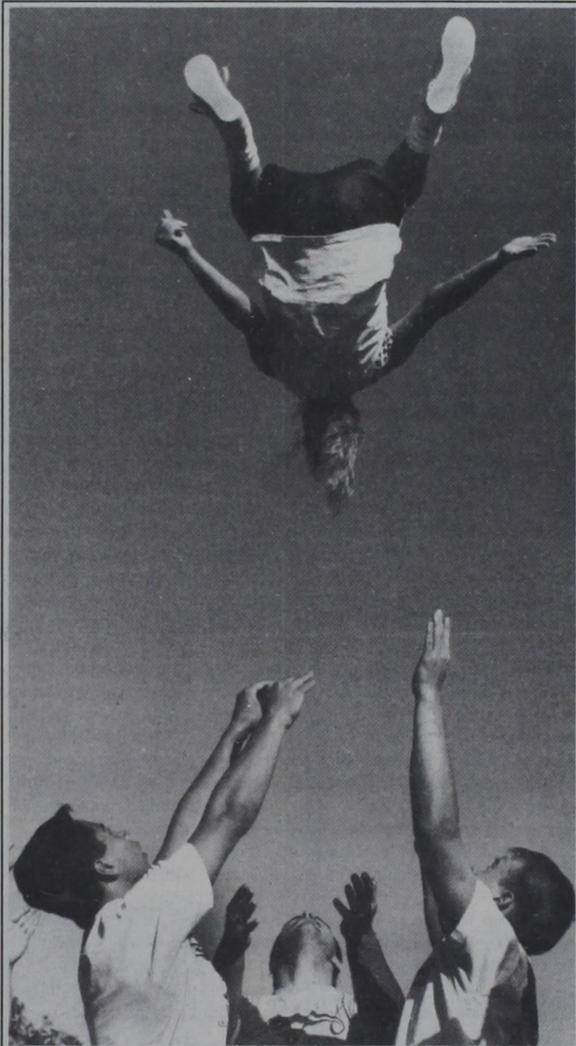

After nine months of operation, the program may apply for a $35,000 state grant issued annually.

The program will aid crime victims who do not fall in the categories covered by existing Lubbock programs.

"There are a lot of other victims that do not fall into present groups," Stephenson said. "We will help them with hospital bills, lost wages and help to follow up with their case."

Program volunteers will contact victims within 72 hours of the crime to help them in personal matters and to gather information for the crime investigation.

The organization will receive its non-profit charter before the city council meets again on Oct. 6. The council see CRIME, page 3

Local cable station to air 'Students View '92'

BY KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Lubbock Independent School District's student-operated television station will feature four student panelists from across the country in "Students View '92: The Presidency."

The live program will air nationally at 11 a.m. today from the LISD-Cox Cable Channel 12 studio, and will feature Jason Statucki of Santa Barbara, Calif.; Ann Futterknecht of Gainesville, Fla.; Ajai Dandekar of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and Elba Alejandro of Lubbock.

Through local cable access channels, it will reach about 24 million students and educators in more than 43,000 U.S. schools involved with the "Cable in the Classroom" program.

"Student's View '92: The Presidency" is intended to involve students in the political process by giving them an opportunity to discuss the presidential campaign and the issues surrounding it.

CNN anchorwoman, Cassandra Henderson, will serve as moderator for the discussion, which also will feature calls from students located in various areas around the country.

In a rehearsal session for the broadcast, the panelists and Henderson discussed opinions on issues that will highlight today's discussion.

Health care was among the issues the panel deemed important.

Futterknecht said employer-provided health care is necessary, however, she said she believes it is a solution that fails to address unemployed and homeless individuals.

"It's not that we don't want to deal with health care, but what about the homeless and the unemployed?" Alejandro said.

The panelists said President Bush and Bill Clinton have addressed the issue with comprehensive plans, but that voters will be faced with choosing the most effective plan.

"It's not that they don't want to help," Alejandro said. "The question is which plan is most effective."

The panelists also will tackle unemployment and welfare during the discussion.

"We have to worry about the multitude of people being laid off from jobs that will never exist again," said Dandekar.

He said job training programs will need to increase to prepare workers for the changing job market.

The panelists said changes should be made in the unemployment program, but that those changes will be difficult to come by.

"People are becoming accustomed to a lifestyle on welfare instead of using it as a second chance," Dandekar said. "We absolutely must reform it."

When Henderson pointed out family values as a growing issue in this year's campaign, the panelists said they believe it is a matter that does not belong in the White House.

Alejandro said diversity among families makes the issue vary from family to family.

"Not everyone has a two-car garage with a brown station wagon anymore," Alejandro said.

Futterknecht said voters have to see CABLE, page 3

Black feminists have different perspective than whites, prof says

BY MIGUEL BONILLA
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Spanish professor and occasional lecturer in Mexican-American feminist issues Susan Stein describes herself as a middle-class Jewish woman who has no place talking about issues concerning minority women. Yet, she has some beliefs regarding this topic.

"We've never been allowed to see black people as beautiful," Stein said. "It's absolute aesthetic schizophrenia. You don't look at a person and say 'big ears', you look at the whole person."

The "whole person" is what several women of color are aiming for, while still maintaining their own cultural identity. Ever since the feminist movement of the 1960s, women of color have discovered that they have a different political and ideological perspective than do many mainstream white feminists. They have their own distinct cultural backgrounds that influence their agenda.

"We live in a society that has loathed and feared women and minorities. We are taught to perceive black, brown and white instead of perceiving human," Stein said. "Racism permeates everything. It has institutionalized itself into everything."

Phaedra Mayes, a Spanish major from Killeen, says that an example of the racism that affects women of color on campus is the idea of beauty that many people have. She said that because the ideal beautiful woman is eurocentric, she has a difficult time getting items that cater to her distinct black dimensions.

"When I go shopping, it's hard. Clothes are generally made for tall, skinny women. Women who don't have the same proportions as I do," Mayes said. "And the thing is, most black women have the same proportions as I do. You've got to go to the eastside of Lubbock to get certain products that are made for you."

Mayes also says black women at Tech are deprived of makeup and hair salons that are targeted toward blacks. These services are located on the far eastside of Lubbock, not as easily accessible as the several hair salons located across from the campus that do not cater to blacks.

Students learning through elders

775th point of light shining bright in West Texas

BY JULIE ANDRES
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's award-winning Youth Exchanging with Seniors project is past the pilot stage and is attracting the interest of community volunteers from across the nation.

President George Bush named Y.E.S. the 775th Daily Point of Light for the Nation in May.

Daily Points of Light are recognized by the president six days a week and constitute the programs and people who successfully address pressing social problems through direct and consequential acts of community service.

Through the program, high school students help senior citizens weekly with household work, errands and community projects.

In return, the young people learn from the life experiences of their elders, which helps create a bridge of better understanding between the generations.

"The program is designed to enhance the independence of rural senior citizens while closing the generation gap between the elderly and young," said Elizabeth Haley, College of Home Economics dean.

The project has received grants totaling $300,000 in a three-way collaboration with Tech, Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center and the Texas A&M Agricultural Extension Service, she said.

Twenty counties in rural Texas and about 450 Future Homemakers of America and 4-H Club members are active in the program.

The youth providers have volunteered more than 2,500 hours in assisting about 200 senior citizens.

Haley said other community groups may become involved as the program is replicated.

Betty Stout, an associate professor of home economics education and co-director of Y.E.S., said she receives calls from around the country regarding replication of the project.

She said the Y.E.S. pilot is complete and continuation of the project will be directed by the extension agents and teachers involved.

"We keep in contact with (participants) and provide technical assistance," Stout said.

A new goal for the center involves a five-month feasibility grant to help determine plans for replication of the project around the state and country, Stout said.

Program officials are trying to increase the amount of senior involvement in the program, possibly through the Department of Aging.

"The appointment by the president is an encouragement for people to volunteer, and a nice recognition of the people who are already involved," Stout said.

Joyce Watts, a Seminole High School home economics teacher, said 15 to 20 of her students currently are involved in the new teen/elder program.

"We were going to do the program year-round but we haven't had an extension agent to help with the program in over a year, so that makes it a little difficult," she said.

Close the door, Magic

Bad move, Magic.

When the sun was still shining on Los Angeles sports, Earvin "Magic" Johnson retired on top of the world. He has now decided to try to bring back what he once had by returning to the L.A. Lakers for the 1992-93 NBA season.

He was forced to retire, but why come back now at age 33? When Magic was playing he was the best there was, but when he retired it was a the right time. Twelve years is enough.

The Great Western Forum in Inglewood, Calif., could turn into a big top, Magic's performance being nothing but a sideshow. But will this great athlete rekindle what he once had? Probably not. He has not played a full NBA season in more than a year. Can he stand the grind?

He is playing with a different Los Angeles Laker team. Kareem is gone. James Worthy is still a star, but older. Pat Riley has moved on to the contender for the 1990s, the New York Knicks.

Why would he do this? Yes, he was forced to retire, but it also came at the right time in his career. He was just beginning to decline and heading down the trail of becoming a has-been when he was diagnosed with HIV.

It just seemed his retirement occurred at dusk in L.A. But all the questions will be answered in the first week of training camp.

He will not expect any special treatment, but he will get it. He will play for the team, but he also will get all the publicity.

The big question is: Will he start? If he comes back and starts, then the rest of the team may feel slighted.

Magic is a team player, and arguably the best passer the game has ever seen, but he is past his prime. Magic can expect to be defended just as hard and played just as aggressively by everyone in the league.

The worst part of the Magic retirement/re-entry is that he has never failed in his basketball career.

When he dons the purple and gold 32, he may fail. Sure, he played well in the Olympics, but what player wouldn't have played well on that team?

Magic should have followed in the footsteps of his good friend Larry Bird and retired when he was beginning to decline.

Human dignity in death

Retired physician Jack Kevorkian assisted in a fifth suicide Saturday, raising cries for a Michigan law banning such practice. However, should physician-assisted suicides be banned?

Biblically, suicide is a sin, but we need to ask ourselves, where does life end, and when are we artificially prolonging it?

With today's technology and treatment, many people are able to maintain a heart beat through machines or drugs, but the life they lead is less than normal and often undesirable. These people could stay alive for years, and never leave their beds, part from their machines or smile when a grandchild visits them.

The people who received Kevorkian's help in killing themselves were all in the late stages of terminal diseases, and consequently suffered much pain.

The last person Kevorkian helped was a 52-year-old woman with terminal lung cancer.

For these people with probably less than one year to live, the chance of finding a cure within months is next to zero.

Their decisions to commit suicide are ones that were not entered into lightly or quickly. Kevorkian consulted with these people and their families.

He never forced a person to commit suicide, he didn't encourage it, he just made it possible. Ultimately the decision was left to the people who died.

And it was a decision that allowed them to die in dignity. For these people, the picture of them wasting away from such illnesses was not one that they wanted engraved on their children's or grandchildren's minds. The visits their families made were not ones they wanted the families to dread.

Instead they wanted to be remembered as the people they were, not emaciated forms their grandchildren were afraid to kiss.

Our world is not perfect. People will continue to kill themselves. But these people did not commit suicide on a whim.

They thought about it, consulted their families and made a decision to leave their family with an image of them far better than one of gunshots to their heads.

No holds barred in Bush's campaign

LESLIE GELB thought he was spending too much time on foreign affairs. Then, to save Tokyo's hurt, he rescheduled the trip.

But against all State Department advice he brought along the heads of the Big Three auto manufacturers, who largely created the gigantic trade deficit with Japan, so he could pretend to be battling the Japanese for American jobs. Bush's closest aides flinched privately over the spectacle of the president bashing on bended knee.

The Foreign Policy President dawdled through six winter months over aid to the ex-Soviet Union. Few Americans wanted or expected him to do much, because the principal burden of reform must rest with the Russians themselves. But he did nothing, for fear of being accused of squandering dollars on foreigners.

That is, he did nothing of consequence until his aides got word of an impending Clinton aid proposal.

They frantically stitched together a Bush plan, and the president unceremoniously ran to the cameras an hour ahead of Clinton — and, his aides admitted, without even knowing the cost to the American taxpayer.

Still stymied by presumed public unhappiness with the foreign adventure, Bush tried to ignore the Serbian slaughter of Bosnian Muslims. He hid behind the patently phony argument that any strong action would quickly land the U.S. in a Vietnam-styled quagmire.

Only recently did he begin to take the actions he spent months dismissing. By then, through his fearful inaction, he had sacrificed Bosnian lives and American leadership.

With little political incentive to please American blacks, Bush ignored refugees and starvation in Haiti and Somalia. In so doing, he forfeited America's moral leadership.

For the first time since 1945, America has no moral basis for urging humanitarianism on others, and cannot credibly importune Europeans to care for refugees from Yugoslavia and Romania.

For no reason other than to gain votes in Texas, where F-16 fighters are produced, Bush recently rushed to sell the aircraft to Taiwan. His decision violated a solemn agreement with China — thereby diminishing America's ability to dissuade others from making questionable arms sales.

Only in the Mideast did Bush retain the mantle of statesmanship that he had earned by organizing Desert Storm, escorting the Soviet Union away from communism and helping Germany to unite.

By pressing Israel to stop West Bank settlements, Bush lost votes at home. But bringing about Arab-Israeli talks, he gained the respect of all — until he yanked a reluctant James Baker, the force behind the talks, out of the State Department and into the presidential campaign.

After a promising beginning, Bush's record has become sadly clear: To keep his office, the Foreign Policy President has stroked the lesser instincts of Americans — and squandered America's credibility, moral leadership and power.

UT - tortillas = Texas Tech

To the editor:
 Tuesday's UD headline stated that Tech receives less state money per student than either UT or Texas A&M. At first glance, this seems unfair. But when one reads letters from students advocating the ritualized throwing of tortillas, the legitimate reason for the funding disparity becomes obvious.

Eagle Forum supports gays

To the editor:
 I was at first shocked at the lack of research that went into the statements in the editorial on the "outing" of Phyllis Schlafly's son John which appeared in The UD Monday, but then as I read and reread the article I became even more confused. Obviously the author of the editorial must have had some point to make when he sat down and began to write. It appears, however, that some form of confusion or delirium overcame the writer immediately after he finished the fourth paragraph, and he was unable to make a clear statement. We were therefore subjected to a mass of information, which made little or no sense. My irritation at this fact aside, there are a few things I would like to say about this editorial.

The article implies that Phyllis Schlafly and the Eagle Forum members are among the "gay bashers" and "hate mongers" of the world. Nothing could be further from the truth. Schlafly has said, "The media has tried to paint all Republicans with 'hate.' We don't hate anybody."

Phyllis Schlafly supports the Republican Party platform, which makes three statements about homosexuals. The platform takes a position against same-sex marriages, against affirmative action hiring preferences for gays and lesbians, and in support of the traditional rule that homosexuality is incompatible with military service. Says Schlafly, "Those are all the mainstream majority views in this country. It is a gross distortion to call that gay bashing." (Alton Telegraph, Sat., Sept. 19, 1992) Eagle Forum members would agree with Pat Buchanan who has said, "My disagreement is with the gay rights agenda. I don't think John Schlafly's personal life is anybody's business but his own." (The Telegraph, Sept. 22, 1992)

The problem that the writer of the UD editorial seems to have is with the Republican Party platform disagreement with affirmative action programs in the workplace for homosexuals. Republicans do not believe that homosexuals deserve any special rights under the Civil Rights Act. John Schlafly, the person in question, said recently in an interview with the Washington Times, "I think gays and lesbians should have the same rights as all other Americans have, and I think most other conservatives think that, but they draw the line at what they see as the demand for special rights." (Washington Times, Sept. 19, 1992) Who better to make the point that although homosexuals deserve the same basic rights as everyone else, no one special interest group, including homosexuals, deserve preferential treatment?

Finally, let it be said that the author of the UD editorial in question, not the members of Eagle Forum, seems to be the one who wants homosexuals out of the workplace. He says that there are enough "bad apple" gays to stigmatize the group, that many of them just want to see how much they can "get away" with. He feels that heterosexual workers are constantly subjected to the homosexual worker's lascivious tales of sexual conquest and that the heterosexual worker has no redress in such situations. Perhaps the author should step back for a moment from the drawing board cluttered with disjointed ideas.

Eagle Forum does not wish to withhold the rights of homosexuals, nor does it participate in gay bashing.

It could best be summed up by John Schlafly, "My life points to the fact that family values people are not hostile to gays and lesbians. The media too often portrays them as bigots or buffoons. In fact they are well-meaning people who are trying to create a better world." (The Washington Post, Sept. 19, 1992) continuing to cover current issues in state university funding. And after reading Sandra Pulley's front-page article in Tuesday's UD, one might encourage every student to look even further into what universities across the nation are spending per student. One can learn, for example, how general levels of spending are seen to compare with so-called national quality rankings.

The current report of U.S. News, for example, compares levels of spending in its 25 "best universities" with those in four quartiles of other "national universities." Thus across five groupings one can compare the spending per student in, for example, Rice University ($19,931), the University of Washington ($15,419), Texas A&M ($8,048), Texas Tech ($5,864) and UT-Arlington ($4,125).

Clearly, from these and other figures it becomes evident that educational spending per student is an important factor in overall quality. It is also very evident that spending per student in the state universities of Texas, even at its best, is nothing terrific to write home about. Thus, if we are interested in trying to comprehend the fuller picture, it is essential that we rise above any level of petty politics or provincial rivalry and view things in really broad terms.

After all, every one of us is going to be "competing" during the coming decades with far more than just our fellow Texans.

Tech's Air Force ROTC seeks quality people, future officers through scholarships

BY STEPHEN ARMOUR
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's Air Force ROTC program is offering academic scholarships through the program.

Maj. Mike Withers, an instructor for the freshmen Air Force ROTC class, said many students apply for ROTC scholarships in high school, although many of them do not receive the scholarships until they are in college.

"The Air Force holds out the money for college students with an established track record," Withers said. "They have more money available for the scholarships than they have qualified people to receive them."

To receive scholarships through Air Force ROTC, students must be enrolled in the program and must have completed at least one semester at Tech. Students also must complete qualifying exams, including a physical fitness test. Lt. Col. Rebecca Starbuck, an instructor for the senior Air Force ROTC class, said students who receive the scholarships will commit four years to the Air Force as a commissioned officer.

"In some fields, jobs are difficult to find, but when students graduate from Air Force ROTC, they leave with a job," she said. "They leave with leadership, management and supervision."

Students enrolled in any major may apply for the ROTC scholarships, however, those majoring in engineering and computer science will have a better chance, Withers.

"The Air Force needs more people in these fields," he said. "We do have a good number of people with a technical background, but we'll consider anyone who is doing well in any field. Our No. 1 freshman last year was a history major, and he got a three-year scholarship in history."

The Air Force also needs people with degrees in nursing, mathematics, computer science, environmental engineering and physical therapy, Withers said. Scholarships also are available to minorities such as blacks, Hispanics and American Indians. Students must maintain a minimum 2.65 GPA to apply.

"Of course, the higher the GPA, the better," Withers said. "The GPA requirement depends on the program the student is enrolled in. It could be as low as a 2.5 GPA to maintain the scholarship."

Starbuck said the scholarships are not designed to be a "one failure and you're outta here" situation.

"We will work with the students to help them bring up their GPA," she said. "If a student is having a difficult semester, we understand and don't want them to lose their scholarship because of this."

Withers said the Air Force realizes that some programs, such as engineering, are five-year programs, and try to work around the programs.

"If a student has, for example, a two-year scholarship but needs an extra year to complete their degree, they can get the extra year, even if they have already completed their ROTC classes and are just completing their university requirements," he said.

Students will not be commissioned until they have completed all course work for their degree, Starbuck said.

"We try to work with the students and their education plans," Withers said. "We have them fill out paperwork to plan out their education so we can plan the best ROTC program to suit their needs."

"Our main concern is that the students finish their degree with the best GPA possible because their GPA is important for their career in the Air Force and for their future plans like graduate school," he said. "We want them to get the best degree they can and have a high standing."

The Air Force also offers numerous follow-up scholarships for students who want to continue their education after graduating.

It offers a fully-funded graduate degree program, which pays the students as officers, but their jobs are attending school. Students can enter any degree program offered.

Another follow-up opportunity involves tuition assistance, which allows officers to attend school during off-duty hours. The military pays for 75 percent of the tuition.

"This is how I got my master's degree," Withers said. "The Air Force thinks higher education and having a graduate degree is very important."

All ROTC scholarships pay for tuition, books and fees. They also provide students with a stipend of $100 a month.

Crime

will review the organization's program plan and may vote on whether to approve the grant.

"It is a long overdue program," Ware said. "We have needed a program like this for many years."

Ware said other cities have similar programs, but that Lubbock's is not based on an old program format.

"Arlington's program has been looked at and has proved to be efficient in the metropolitan areas," Ware said.

Once the program receives funding, it will be housed in the police department. The close connection between the police and crime assistance program will accelerate the information gathering process and, indirectly, the investigation.

Councilman Alex "Ty" Cooke said he wants the council to make sure the organization is not a duplicate of other city programs. If it is not a copy, he said, it would be a necessary program for Lubbock.

consider what kind of Supreme Court appointments the next president could make because a number of family value-oriented issues are decided in the high court.

Also on the panelists' list of concerns are environmental problems.

While the group agreed that U.S.

businesses should maintain environmentally safe operations, they said it is difficult to create an equilibrium between the economy and the environment.

"It is a difficult balance," Statucki said.

The members said environmental concerns should be addressed.

"It's not going to do any good for America to become the only country that recycles," Alejandro said.

Hispanic art goes on display in UC as part of heritage month

BY MIGUEL BONILLA
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The snake, the serpent and the eagle; these all are signs of Hispanic art seen throughout the ages.

Carlos Medrano, adviser for the Association for the Hispanic Arts, said Hispanic art does not have an exact definition. Medrano said Hispanic art is what local Hispanic artists and students are making and drawing from their past.

Such art will be on exhibit from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday in the University Center Courtyard, as part of Hispanic Heritage Month.

The exhibit will present artwork in several different types of mediums, such as sculptures, paintings, drawings and watercolors.

"You can kind of tell what Hispanic art is," he said. "You can see it almost anywhere you go, from the murals in LA to the barrios of South Texas. They express situations, moods and feelings, unique to Hispanic life."

To Medrano, there are similarities in the artwork of the famous muralist Diego Rivera and the artwork seen throughout the United States in predominantly Hispanic areas. An example of the similarities is the full figured women seen in a lot of Hispanic artwork.

"You can see the connections. The question is, where did they get their teachings for that type of artwork? I guess it's in their blood," Medrano said.

Another individual who agrees with Medrano is the president of the Association for the Hispanic Arts, Gerald Santiago, a design communications major from Midland. He says Hispanic art is definitely an aspect of a person's culture that cannot be avoided.

"It's part of your heritage," Santiago said. "It'll show up in whatever you do."

Crystal shines in new movie

BY JENNIFER SANDER

MOVIE REVIEW

Mr. Saturday Night

Billy Crystal has once again proven his extraordinary acting and comedy abilities in his own, "Mr. Saturday Night." Crystal not only plays an excellent lead role in the film, he also directs and produces.

The genius of this movie lies in the fact that it is not only a side-splitting, Crystal comedy, but also has a surprisingly serious, emotional plot as well. "Mr. Saturday Night" is best described as pure entertainment and a genuine comedy. It is easy to see the love Crystal has for the old-time comedians, and this movie is a tribute to the real comedy greats of the past.

Crystal plays, Buddy, also known as Mr. Saturday Night. He was a comedy hit in the 1930s through the 1950s and 1960s. He begins his career as a young boy, who loves the stage and thrives on the feedback from the audience after he tells a good joke. The best way to describe Buddy is as a filth comic, who gets his laughs from obscenities and making fun of other people, especially his family.

As Buddy grows older and his career dies out, he is replaced by a new comic generation, and is unable to let go of his successful past. Every line that comes out of his mouth is a joke or an insult. He loves to be the center of attention, and keeps trying for that spot until his old age.

He goes on about his past successes, never wants to admit that he is wrong, and stays on the road playing clubs. He hurts his family along the way, but through his constant attempt to be the best, it is still easy to see what is really important to him — family, even though he shows it in discreet ways.

The movie is a constant battle between a die-hard, old-fashioned comic and the fast paced, ever-changing world of show business. The story is built around the relationship between Crystal and his brother, Stan, played by David Payner. Payner's role is one many people will easily identify with, especially those that have to share the spotlight with a sibling. Their relationship is a side-splitter and a tear-jerker combined.

The supporting cast also gives excellent performances. Julie Warner, who plays Buddy's wife, Elaine, and Helen Hunt, who plays Annie, Buddy's talent agent, give outstanding and hilarious performances.

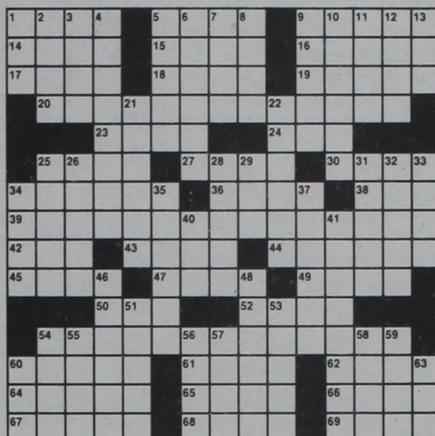

Crystal is a genius at mixing a serious plot with his well-known comedy talents. A laugh is found every few minutes, but expect a couple of tears to fall every now and then, too.

Lady Longhorns hand Raiders first conference loss

AUSTIN (Special) — The No. 10 Texas Lady Longhorns continue to cause problems for the No. 14 Texas Tech women's volleyball team.

The Red Raiders dropped their first Southwest Conference match of the season to the Lady Longhorns in three games 13-15, 4-15 and 13-15 in front of 1,576 at the University of Texas Student Recreation Center.

"We didn't pass the ball very well," Tech coach Mike Jones said after the match. "They (the Longhorns) made mistakes and we did not capitalize on them."

With the loss Tech dropped to 10-2, while Texas upped its record to 9-2.

The win for the Lady Longhorns marked the 32nd time Texas has triumphed over Tech since SWC play began in 1982.

The match ended with Kim Gosselin's attack being blocked by Texas giving them the win at 13-15 in the third and final game.

The score was tied three times in the third game with Tech tying the score at 11 after a Chris Fehrle kill.

The closest the Raiders came to the Longhorns in the second game was when Jill Slapper and Kristen Sparks combined on a block giving the Raiders the lead at 4-3.

Texas got back the serve with Hibben doing the honors.

Hibben and the Longhorns rattled off the last 13 points for the 15-4 victory.

"I have no idea why we didn't pass the ball very well," Jones said. "They scored 13 or so points and we only rotated twice."

The Raiders committed 22 errors in the match, while Texas had 19.

Ruegg led both teams in kills with 12, hitting .391 for the match.

Gosselin added 10 kills in the losing effort, while Kristen Sparks was held to three.

Angie Breitenfield and Hibben led the Longhorns in kills with 10 apiece. Breitenfield hit .304 for the match.

Both Rochelle Kaaia and Ginger Carter saw extensive action at the Red Raider setter position with Kaaia garnering only 20 assists in the match.

Ruegg

Gosselin

The Longhorns got the serve back but Erica Ruegg responded with a kill giving the Raiders the serve.

Tech took the lead by two after Lady 'Horns setter Heather Pfluger's kill went out making the score 13-11.

Texas came back to tie the score at 13 after a Raider attack was blocked by the Lady 'Horns.

In the first game, Tech took the lead after Erica Hibben's attack went out making the score 13-12. But Texas came back to score the last three points.

The game ended when a Gosselin attack went long making the final score 15-13.

"We should have won both games one and three," Jones said. "In the past we would have been happy to play with them but not tonight."
