President vows to finish nuclear plant

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) -Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani said a nuclear power plant abandoned after the 1979 revolution by a German firm will be completed, state-run Iranian radio reported Monday.

Rafsanjani inspected the site of the Bushehr nuclear power plant, in southern Iran, on Sunday. He said Tehran remains determined to put the facility into operation with or without German help, according to the radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. Germany's Kraftwerke Union, a subsidiary of Siemens, began building the facility in 1975.

Clinton's energy tax faces opposition

WASHINGTON (AP)—The energy tax that President Clinton is poised to propose is certain to upset nearly everyone from consumers to oil producers and even windmill operators.

But administration officials, expecting a tough sell, say that could be a plus.

"It gets everybody mad," said an administration official who requested anonymity. "That's shared sacrifice. The question is how much will (industry and consumer groups) oppose it."

Administration and congressional sources, speaking in advance of Clinton's speech to the nation Monday night, said the president was moving in the direction of a broad-based energy tax. It would be pegged to the heat content of a particular fuel. It would apply to all fuels and could affect the cost of everything from driving a car to heating homes and factories.

The energy tax idea "is worse than a sales tax" on fuel, said John Hughes of the Electricity Consumers Resource Council.

Senate puts funding decision to voters

AUSTIN (AP) - Texans can vote May I on a share-the-wealth school funding proposal after the Senate agreed Monday to put the measure on a statewide ballot.

Asked about a likely contingency plan if voters turn down the proposed constitutional amendment, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said, "Suicide."

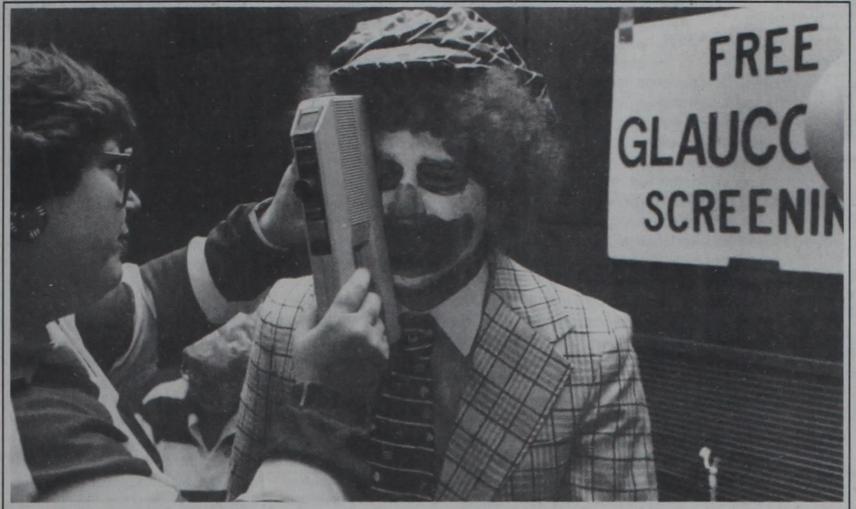

If a plan isn't passed by a June I court deadline, school districts face a cutoff of state public education money. Leaders have warned that would mean school closings, because public education relies on state aid and local property taxes.

The Senate voted 27-4 to concur in the House version of the so-called Robin Hood proposal, which would allow some local property tax money to be transferred from property-rich to poor school districts.

Clinton promises long-term gains through sacrifice

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Clinton, in his first primetime address from the Oval Office, summoned Americans to "a call to arms' on Monday, promising a plan to revive the economy through a painful package of tax increases and spending cuts.

"We have to face the fact that, to make the changes our country needs, more Americans must contribute today so that all Americans can do better tomorrow," the president said.

"But I can assure you of this: you're not going alone, you're not going first, and you're no longer going to pay more and get less," he said.

The speech previewed one he'll make to Congress on Wednesday night outlining details of his program to revitalize the economy and create jobs. It also spurred an intense public relations blitz to overcome resistance in Congress, and among the public to $500 billion in tax increases and spending reductions in popular programs over four years.

Clinton's speech amounted to a lecture on the nation's economic problems and the solutions he proposes to fix them. Using charts and graphs, he blamed the woes on the policies of Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

Over the past 12 years, he said, "the federal deficit roared out of control."

"Look at this," he said, pointing to one graph. "The big tax vision testing, massage samples, food of HIV positives in 1988. They were 26 cuts for the wealthy, the growth in government spending, and soaring health care costs, all caused the federal deficit to explode. Because more people have the HIV virus Our debt is now four times as big as it was in 1980."

Monday night, Clinton promised to "chart a course that will enable us to compete and win."

He said, "My message to you is clear: The price of doing the Students, said the health fair's purpose is to same old thing is far higher than the price of change."

> He said change must begin at the top, and noted his recent announcements that he will cut the size of the White House staff

"If you join with me, we can create an economy in which all Americans work hard and prosper," the president said. "This is their annual screenings done here for free nothing less than a call to arms to restore the vitality of the American dream."

The president said that special interests already are out in force to block his program "Those who have profited from the status quo will oppose the changes we seek, every step of the way," he said. "They've already lined the corridors of power with high-

Jazz may have evolved since its birth in New Orleans and matured from its prohibition days in Chicago speakeasies, but jazz musicians are still getting in their licks.

Swinging jazz, with an abundance of brass, vocals and improvisation, is drawing in Lubbock crowds. They are ready to hear what they have been missing, and vocalist Carla Helmbrecht helps fill the void.

Helmbrecht, 25, is a Texas Tech speech-language pathology graduate student, who grew up in a musical family with a jazz-loving father.

She said singing jazz provides an emotional release she cannot get from any other music.

"Jazz is so free that you get out of it what you want, and since the players improvise, you know it comes from the soul," she said.

"Jazz is the greatest. I love it and hope to continue singing, but I'm just going to take it one day at a time and wait to see what happens."

Helmbrecht, who has been singing since childhood, made her stage debut at 16 in a Madison, Wis., high school and departed for Minneapolis a few years later to continue her musical career.

She left Minnesota's stages and headed for Lubbock to continue her education at Tech. It was two years before Tech music professor Alan Shinn could entice her back onto the stage.

UPD reported two sexual assault cases on Tech campus in 1991

> by SANDRA PULLEY THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Although Texas Tech's most recent University Police Department statistics show two sexual assaults occurred on campus in 1991, rape cases are more prevalent than official figures show, said a local law enforcer.

Floyd Price, a Lubbock Police Department crime prevention officer, said knows the rapist. "We get a small percentage of rape cases that are reported, and we know there's more," Price said. LPD filed 18 sexual assault reports in January, an increase of six cases from last January.

No rapes have been reported at Tech this year. Robin Brewton, a health education coordinator at Student Health Services, said she believes many cases are not reported because the victims are embarrassed.

"The statistics just are not there to show how many women are really raped," Brewton said.

Failing to report rape cases or any crime can deter police from stopping repeat offenders, Price said. "I'd like to stress that all crimes be reported," he said.

Brewton said Student Health Services, located in rapes often are not reported, especially if the victim Thompson Hall, and the peer education group Impact Tech sponsor rape awareness and prevention programs see RAPE, page 3

Thanks for nothing

The Texas Legislature never ceases to amaze us.

For those Texans who are unaware of the greatest crisis to face our state since the oil bust of the '80s, the Legislature put forth its feeble effort to solve it. The crisis is (sound familiar?) public school finance.

Friday the House passed its version of an amendment that will legalize the Robin Hood plan, which the courts deemed unconstitutional. In short, the plan allows the state to collect property taxes and redistribute the money equally. Hence the name "Robin Hood," taking from the rich to give to the poor.

The Senate approved the last formality Monday by agreeing to place the House version before the voters on May 1. If the amendment fails, the Legislature has until June 1 to present an acceptable plan.

Call it nitpicky, but isn't this the same plan that was absolutely unacceptable in the December special session that ended just 75 days ago? With few modifications, the earlier plan is theoretically identical to the current plan.

As voting Texans, we don't like that.

Public dissatisfaction for the Robin Hood plan was high before the courts ruled it unconstitutional. What makes legislators think the public will approve the plan in May?

As long-time critics of the Legislature's handling of the issue, we offer a solution they haven't come up with.

As of late last year, the Texas Lottery was 70 percent ahead of its projected earnings. That translates into a large deposit in the general revenue fund. Why not rewrite the lottery legislation to pump a percentage of the game's earnings into school finance? That percentage will be determined by the shortfall of the poorest school district's ability to provide minimum standards of education. Our plan will allow richer school districts to continue to provide additional benefits for their students, while the poorer districts will receive state aid to meet minimum standards without raising the already-high property taxes in those dis-

Stop the stereotypes

Almost everyone is guilty of stereotyping in one form or another. Some may do it more often than others, but the reality is that everyone has set definitions in their mind about how a certain person should look and act. Such is the case with AIDS.

An Alabama pediatrician worked in his small town for years caring for young children and earning the trust of many residents. Through the years, as AIDS gradually became a larger issue, the doctor began exercising more frequently. He rode his bicycle every day and participated in other various exercises to keep healthy, and thus lost weight.

Not too long after, someone planted a rumor in the city that spread quickly. This once-trusted pediatrician had AIDS. Proof? He was getting much skinnier and hadn't been seen around the town as much.

It doesn't make much sense to infer that someone has a horrible, deadly disease just because a person is losing weight. At first the doctor didn't feel he had to defend himself, but after many tests and public announcements the truth was revealed. He did not have AIDS, nor did he participate in any conduct that related to AIDS.

This leads to a recent case in Bogata where a high school counselor announced that at least six students in their small town high school were infected with AIDS. She gave names of at least 20 students she thought may have it. All of the names could not be matched up with Texas drivers licenses nor could they be traced to have been born or died in Texas. In other words, the names were bogus, but she still says she is right.

Her claims ignited a horrible scare in the town and attracted national attention. The question is, why did she do this? What could she gain? Why do people blame innocent victims of this disease based on appearance or hearsay?

It is difficult to understand the satisfaction a person can receive from sitting in class or walking down the street, and upon seeing two males or females together — who may be a little skinny or pale — make the assumption that they have AIDS. Leaving the thoughts and assumptions in the mind is one thing, but announcing an opinion like this and attracting media attention nationwide is degrading and unfair. Yes, AIDS is frightening, but finger-pointing and name-calling doesn't make it go away. "Better the other guy than me" is the attitude, it seems. People's habits and appearance don't signify they have AIDS. It's time people do something about the disease rather than play guessing games as to who is infected with it.

JEROME O'CALLAGHAN

Not long ago when I asked a group of freshmen what the faculty are paid to do around here, I was surprised by the immediate consensus that emerged. The answer was simple: teach. That assessment was way off the mark. Freshmen suffer from the naive belief that teaching matters, and that about when you look at external good teachers will be rewarded for their effort. The fact of the matter is that faculty are supposed to do three things at Tech: teach students, publish their research and provide general service to the university. In practice the name of the game is research. Any claim that teaching is a priority at Tech is, at best, grand delusion, at worst, simple fraud.

Striking evidence of Tech's lack of commitment to its teaching mission can be found in the Report of the Faculty Senate's Ad Hoc Committee on Teaching (popularly known as the Howe Report). This document is a surprisingly lucid analysis of Tech's teaching record. Its conclusions are worth repeating: there is a "widespread faculty perception that teaching has become an unrewarded and under appreciated activity. [This] climate contributes to minimal teaching effort, to neglect of curricular improvement and development and to a deemphasis on student/faculty interaction that will undercut student focused on research; teaching (good, retention efforts." The report points out that in the 1980s several structures designed to support good teaching were abolished; "the mass extinction of such teaching structures should prompt some soul searching, if it reflects a deemphasis their classroom duties. Down the on teaching, then it is a tendency to be deplored."

Just as significant as the content of the report is the reception it received on campus. While the report includes a long list of recommendations (30 pages worth), I doubt that 5 percent of these suggestions have even been attempted. The reason is obvious, few faculty have even read the document. Few administrators care to find out what needs to be done. The Faculty Senate took very little time to decide that it was a great report and, well, "that's all folks." Destined for administrative oblivion, the Howe Report stands as a reminder of what Tech could do, if teaching mattered.

There is plenty to be embarrassed evaluations of Tech's performance. Admission standards are nothing to write home about; according to Barron's Profiles of American Colleges (1991) Tech's standards are "less competitive." Again in The Right College (Arco's): "less competitive." Take a look at Peterson's Guide to Four Year Colleges (1992): "moderately difficult." The most telling observation comes from the Insider's Guide to Colleges (1992): "the quality of education tends toward the mediocre ... in general students do not have to work very hard." Can this record be a point of pride in the administration? Probably not. But then again which administrator would even notice these reviews? Lip-service aside, most are concerned with My own experience in the College of Arts and Sciences tells me teaching is of little or no significance in the evaluation of faculty. The reward structure is mediocre or incompetent) is a dreary issue lurking in the distance, an unpleasant topic that few care to examine carefully. New faculty in Arts and Sciences are well-advised to devote as little time as possible to road research is what counts with those who matter. High quality teaching, on this campus, does not matter much.

Respect for student needs is also sadly lacking. The university has, for a variety of well-rehearsed reasons, herded its freshmen and sophomores into 200-, 300- and 500-seat lecture halls for many years Permanent University Fund. This now. Predictably, freshmen and sophomores are slow to pick up on the insult. Calling them students and treating them like cattle, the university (the College of Arts and Sciences is the worst offender) starts to notice rampant apathy, poor grades, and significant drop-out

Teaching takes a back seat

Despite the occasional homily from the president, an odd pilotprogram or two, the practice continues. No administrator in my memory has called for smaller class sizes (say a 50-seat limit) for the usual monster courses (history, political science, English). Even in the era of the notorious "ServicePlus" program, respect for the customer/student does not stretch that far. Treating even the lowliest freshman as an individual with particular educational needs and desires seems like the smart thing to do, if you are committed to high quality student education. There are few signs of such a commitment at Tech.

The department that I served in, political science, has already offered two upper division courses in a 100 seat lecture hall. More upper division courses are likely to follow. (Perhaps one day the Coliseum will be renamed the "Senior Seminar Room.") Let's not forget that monster classes mean more reliance on minimally-prepared TAs, less student-faculty contact, and less satisfaction on all sides. Can anyone here spell alienation? Must we follow UT's bad habits in everything?

There is a reason for relegating teaching to a far-distant back burner. don't care much about teaching. Like many institutions of comparable size Tech is out to prove that it is a research University above all else. That should impress the folks in Austin. However, if you know the politics, history and geography of Texas, you know that Tech's ability to develop a research reputation is, to put it mildly, extremely constrained.

First there is the matter of the fountain of cash guarantees extra income to UT and A&M alone among public state universities. These two behemoths can weather Austin's various budget crises with relative ease.

They can make investments in major research projects that are roughly equal to Tech's entire annual budget. Until Tech has access to PUF, its potential as a research institution in this state is Closely connected to PUF is the matter of attracting "star faculty." (Isn't it interesting that the term "star faculty" is inevitably used to refer to famous researchers, preferably big-grant getters?) Tech is in no position to compete on this front either. Everyone knows that most Tech faculty are, relatively speaking, underpaid.

Whatever you think about the state of education at Tech, let's not forget that taxpayers pay most of the bills around here (tuition accounts for the smaller part of university revenue). Has anyone stopped to wonder what exactly the taxpayers are paying-for? Is it possible that students, parents and taxpayers want small introductory classes, teachers devoted primarily to teaching and graduates who have had real contact with their professors? Imagine four years of college without multipleguess exams. Sounds radical. Too radical for most of the Tech adminstration.

So students, if you've started to suspect that some of the faculty you're probably right. The wise young academic on this campus can adopt a simple motto: I don't care, I don't have to.

> Jerome O'Callaghan is a former Tech political science assistant professor. He now teaches at State University (N.Y.) College at Cortland.

Animal rights for all animals

To the editor:

I find it interesting that people will get so emotional about topics involving food on the table and maintaining healthy wildlife populations — topics of necessity - when there are so many real 'animal rights' tragedies under our noses every day that animal righters are not doing anything about. Instead of trying to convert everyone to a vegetarian lifestyle because you believe raising livestock for meat is the '90s version of slavery and hunting causes pain as well as waste if not all the carcass is used, how about trying to raise consciousness about the importance of responsible pet ownership?

All that energy you put into espousing ideas that a majority of the population thinks is absolutely ridiculous could be directed into spay/neuter programs to decrease animal overpopulation, education about the importance of vaccinating pets, and helping people realize dogs and cats are not throw away items and when they are not taken care of will die of disease, starvation or end up as grease spots in the middle of the road.

It seems to me that some of your deep concern for animals would manifest itself in these areas lest anyone consider you a hypocrite. Talk about not being able to see the forest for the trees!

In Lubbock alone, 1,000-1,200 animals are euthanised every month. Go to the local animal shelter and look at all the dogs and cats whose days are numbered and then see if you can cry over the meat counter at to the conspiracy theories of Mr. your local store.

Working for a solution

To the editor:

For the past four months, the names of Alpha Kappa Psi and Kappa Alpha Psi have been used interchangeably in the local media. While the brothers of Alpha Kappa Psi applaud KAPsi's fight against racism on campus, Alpha Kappa Psi has been misidentified with an issue in which we have, up to now, not been involved.

We are a coed professional business fraternity. Our membership is roughly 50-50 male/female and predominantly white. Like other student organizations on campus, we have watched the events surrounding "Party in the Projects" with great interest, especially since race relations are an issue that directly affects productivity in the work place.

Alpha Kappa Psi recognizes that racism continues to be a problem in our businesses and society. We believe a large part of the problem is simple ignorance — people who don't endeavor to understand each other can hardly work together.

With that in mind, Alpha Kappa Psi has been working with minority groups on campus to sponsor a race relations workshop.

We hope that by educating ourselves and fellow students, we can help break the barriers of ignorance that divide our society. The Feb. 27 workshop is open to anyone, and we encourage everyone to come.

A response to paranoia

To the editor:

How long do we have to listen John B. Sherrill?

First he attempts to claim the "greedy" Republicans are trying to scuttle the economy for reasons clear to no one but him, now he is trying to tell us that the Board of Regents wants to surreptitiously finance evil capitalist food chains with university money by raising football ticket prices.

I suspect that the Board of Regents elected to allow a private company to open an outlet in the UC because it was found to be cheaper than trying to maintain their own food outlet, what with manager training, equipment maintenance, supplies and other goods. These costs are built in to the arrival of a private business chain, because such chains have the infrastructure to support those costs. A university does not; a university has other priorities.

A private food service is better and cheaper through greater efficiency, but Mr. Sherrill's paranoid hatred of the free-enterprise system has blinded him to the superiority of the profit-motive. I'm sorry he thinks the world is out to get him, but the Board of Regents, whatever one may think about their other policies, is not trying to "subsidize" a viable private corporation as Mr. Sherrill tries to claim. How long will Mr. Sherrill continue to embarrass himself with his wild, fevered diatribes?

To Mr. Sherrill personally: If you choose to respond to this letter, DO NOT, as you did last time, write me at home.

If you want to say something to me, send it to the editor of this paper, not to my mailbox. Your letter to me was a serious breech of editorial page protocol.

Explaining the rules

To the editor:

On Feb. 4, the Student Senate passed a concurrent resolution that will allow for the reallocation of one organization's funds to other deserving groups for the 1992-93 school year.

Priority will be given to those groups that have already spent 100 percent of their funding and can prove a need for extra funds. Interested organizations should submit a one-page letter requesting the funds to the Student Association office by Friday at 5

The letter should explain why extra funds are needed and exactly how the funds will be spent. All requests should be signed by the organization president, treasurer and adviser. The Budget and Finance Committee will consider only those requests submitted by the 5 p.m. deadline.

All organizations with a valid need for extra funding are encouraged to submit a request.

Astros' Finley starts charity organization

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane's generosity spilled over to one of his players Monday when center fielder Steve Finley donated $250,000 to begin his own charity organization.

Finley, who signed a 3-year, $10.4 million contract last week, said the goal of the fund is to encourage children to stay in school and live a drug-free life. McLane has spent $69 million to sign five players, including Finley, since

Free agent signee Greg Swindell, who grew up in Houston, bought an 18seat box and will distribute the tickets to family and friends throughout the

Finley and his wife, Amy, also said they could purchase 20 full season tickets and use them as incentives for children who complete designated challenges. "I was in a position in my life to have role models who encouraged me to stay in school," said Finley, whose parents are teachers. "In college, when I could have signed a pro contract, my wife and my parents encouraged me to stay and get my degree."

That's the encouragement Finley wants to pass on to others.

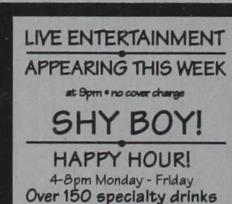

"We'll have a series of challenges based on grades and attendance," Finley said. "Not everyone can be a top student but everyone can go to class."

Other players, Craig Biggio, Ken Caminiti, Jeff Bagwell and Casey Candaele, also are purchasing tickets to distribute to various groups.

"What you are seeing is a spontaneous response to a better atmosphere around here," General Manager Bill Wood said. "All the players and their agents were excited about the atmosphere that's taken over this place."

Finley completed his second season with the Astros in 1992 with a .292 batting average and he ranked seventh in the league with 170 hits and was second with 13 triples.

A local supermarket chain bought $600,000 worth of tickets last week and will resell them to customers for $2 each.
