Tech officials rush to build arena

by Andrea Broyles/UD

Texas Tech Chancellor John T. Montford acknowledged Wednesday the proposed arena process has been rushed.

"The process is rushed, but it was intentional," Montford said. "It (the final plan) is doable by the October coordinating board meeting. If we waited until January, we could potentially miss an entire year of basketball."

Tech plans to construct a new arena completely owned by the university for the first time, and construction is scheduled to begin sometime late in the spring semester.

Planning for the arena has been in the early stages for some time, but the detail work began last spring.

In April, a Tech committee began the process of selecting an architectural firm to design the facility. The committee selected Rosser International of Atlanta.

Rosser was chosen because of the type of facility Tech wanted, said Geoff Wayne, Student Association president.

"Rosser tended to be the one who, athletically, especially at the college level, tended to have great experience," Wayne said.

They also had the best cost and time period for Tech as far as the cost and the expediency, Wayne said.

Following the selection of an architectural firm in June, Tech sent a committee to tour similar facilities around the country to determine what was wanted and needed in a new arena.

Included in the group were Wayne Myers, women's basketball coach Marsha Sharp, men's basketball coach

James Dickey, former Athletic Director Bob Bockrath, Regent Jim Sowell and Fred Krensen and Stewart Smith, both of Rosser, Wayne said.

In July, the Rosser staff met with various members of the Tech faculty, athletic officials, the athletic council, students and all of the deans, he said.

Also in July, Tech officials hired the facilities planning firm of Hellmuth, Obata & Kassabaum of Dallas to help choose a location for the site and HOK already was involved with Tech as the campus master planning firm.

Candidates line up for AD spot

by Heath Robinson/UD

Texas Tech University has yet to release an advertisement asking for applications concerning its vacant athletic director spot, but four people have already expressed interest in the position.

Applicants for the position include Dick Ellis, former Baylor University athletic director; Robert McBee, former athletic director at Eastern Illinois University; Brad Houvious, former athletic director at Arkansas State University; and L. Oval Jaynes, the current athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh.

On Aug. 29, Tech Interim President Donald Haragan announced the creation of an athletic director search committee, headed by interim executive vice president and provost John Burns.

Burns emphasized the four applicants have merely submitted their names and should not be considered finalists at this stage.

"These four people have sent in applications, and all have the necessary qualifications to fill our post," Burns said. "But we have yet to finalize our ads. Those ads will be released on Friday, so by no means does this constitute a list of finalists."

Haragan has indicated to the committee he would like to name a new athletic director by Dec. 1.

"Dr. Haragan has asked us to submit a list of finalists somewhere around Oct. 20," Burns said. "That list should range from two to four names. From that list, he has indicated a desire to have named a new director by Dec. 1."

"I think the target date of Dec. 1 might be optimistic, but I also think it is a realistic date," Burns said.

Serving as interim athletic director for Tech is Gerald Myers, an associate under Bob Bockrath. Bockrath departed Tech for the University of Alabama in June, and Myers has been serving as interim athletic director since that time.

Myers declined comment on the four applicants, but expressed an interest in returning to the job longterm.

"I am seriously considering applying for the job on a permanent basis," Myers said. "I have really enjoyed my time as the interim athletic director. It has been a great experience thus far."

The new athletic director for Tech likely will be faced with an ongoing NCAA investigation.

In February, the NCAA began an investigation of the Tech football and men's basketball programs for alleged improprieties. Ellis resigned from his job at Baylor in May, shortly after Robert Sloan was named as the new president at Baylor University.

While he served as the athletic director, Ellis endured an investigation of the men's basketball program.

After an internal investigation, the NCAA agreed to Baylor's self-imposed sanctions.

Included in the aftermath was the dismissal of basketball coach Darrel Johnson and some of his assistants as well.

For his part, Myers insists the ongoing investigation does not scare him away from the position.

"Oh no, it doesn't affect my desire for the job," Myers said. "Absolutely not."

The search committee has endured criticism for having no members directly related with the Tech football program to share its interests and expectations from the new athletic director.

Burns, however, sees an obvious reason for the omission.

"Well, if you look at it, the football team is too wrapped up in practice and their season to give the necessary time to this committee," Burns said.

Hussein fires at U.S. jet fighters

SULAYMANIYAH, Iraq (AP) — While leaders of a defeated Kurdish faction sought refuge in Iran, Saddam Hussein fired a new challenge at the United States on Wednesday, boldly targeting American warplanes enforcing a "no-fly zone."

A missile fired at two F-16 jet fighters patrolling northern Iraq missed its target, but brought Iraq and the United States closer to another showdown. The United States responded by sending bombers and stealth fighters to the volatile region, suggesting that a retaliatory strike was likely. Refugees fleeing for safety in Iran and Turkey gathered at borders, though only a few were permitted to cross. About 5,000 Iraqis entered Iran at Bashmaq, border guards said Wednesday, and several thousand more were believed to have crossed elsewhere. Border guards and some refugees at Bashmaq said commanders of a vanquished Kurdish group were among those who fled.

Saddam vowed he would no longer honor the "damned imaginary" no-fly zones last week after U.S. forces blasted air defense sites in southern Iraq with cruise missiles. The U.S. strike was an attempt to curb an offensive by Iraq and Kurdish allies against an opposing Kurdish faction in northern Iraq. The Saddam-allied forces prevailed, routing their foes in key cities and sending several thousand fleeing to Turkey and Iran.

Clinton looks to assist students' financial needs

by Ginger Pope/UD

President Clinton and the Democratic Party are working to get college students what they need most — more financial aid.

A new direct lending plan to make student loans cheaper and easier to receive tops Clinton's list of campaign strategies geared at the college-age voting market.

The plan could affect more than 2.5 million students, said Mark Nevins, communications director for the University Democrats.

"Students would be allowed to apply for loans straight from the government," he said. "This would eliminate a lot of paperwork."

The application would go from the financial aid office to the Department of Education, and if approved the money could be transferred electronically, he said. Colleges and universities have to contact the Department of Education in order to be a part of this program.

Texas Tech is not involved with this program, but if the university decides to participate, it would be a benefit to both administration and college students, Nevins said. The direct loan program could provide competition with guaranteed loans from big banks.

A proposal for a scholarship allowing students to get a $1,500 tax credit for two years of school is another of Clinton's considerations.

The scholarship proposal is geared more toward two-year colleges, but it has the potential to benefit Tech students also, Nevins said.

Clinton recently vetoed a Republican budget proposing $30 billion in cuts to student aid and has proposed a $10,000 tax reduction for middle-class families.

"College student issues are near and dear to Clinton," Nevins said. "What better way to get a brighter future than to have an education?"

Todd Bearden, member of the College Republicans and a senior political science major from Richardson, said he has received financial aid and has not seen any problems with aid before or after Clinton took office. Even though Clinton's ideas sound good, there has not been much change, and any politician is going to make statements to gain support.

Tech Republicans change command

by Joe Brower/UD

On Tuesday, Texas Tech's College Republicans gathered for their first meeting of the year — a meeting for a group that had been rumored to not exist anymore.

Part of the confusion can be attributed to the recent changes in command.

In April, chairman Dan Isett stepped down, as did their advisor Dan Burns, said Todd Bearden, press liaison for the College Republicans.

"I wasn't able to attend all the meetings, and I didn't think I was informed enough to remain their adviser," said Dan Burns, former College Republicans advisor and assistant director of operations for the University Center.

The meetings consisted of the basic overview of group business with the addition of a new face. For a group that doesn't exist, its numbers are quite staggering.

"At our meeting, about 30 people attended, but roughly our total group membership of those who are registered is around 400," Bearden said.

The agenda the group develops often times is based on the scenario of that year.

"This year is an election year, so we are mainly focusing our attention on going out and supporting the candidates," he said.

For some of the members of the group, working for a campaign means making a few phone calls and other miscellaneous jobs, but for others it goes a step further.

"Our chairman, Dan Isett, stepped down so that he could work as campaign manager of his brother Carl's campaign for the House of Representatives," Bearden said.

Burns clarified any questions that may still be lingering about the group's status.

"Part of the reason why the College Republicans were so hard to get in touch with this year is because they didn't re-register with the Student Organization Services in time," he said.

This has raised questions as to their effectiveness in this election year.

"It shows that they are not as organized as the County Republicans," said Mike Turner, president of the University Democrats. "It will reflect on their performance on campus, and I think that they won't be able to help their candidates as well as they would like to."

Their View

Campus groups spur success for all Tech students

Nakia Alford/columnist

The day before I went away to college, my mother began telling me all about the many glorious and not so pleasant days she had at Texas Southern University.

She reminisced about all the great time she spent with the circle of friends that she had met.

Also, she told me how disappointed she would be to get her Sunday dinner on campus, that consisted of a sandwich in a brown bag and Kool-aid with no sugar. After 24 hours, 30 minutes and two seconds of her stories, she gave me some friendly advice: "Get involved on your campus."

I arrived here at Texas Tech a year ago, and I know that was one of the best pieces of advice my mother ever gave me.

When I first arrived, I could not believe how big this campus was. I felt very alone because everyday I stepped out my room and all I saw was strange faces coming toward me.

It seemed that no matter how loud I screamed hello, people passed me by without any remote recognition. With all these feelings, I began to look for ways I could get involved on this campus.

Soon I came in contact with some very important organizations: Visions of Light Gospel Choir and Black Student Association (BSA).

My involvement in these two organization allowed me to gain support in several different ways.

First, my involvement allowed me to meet many people and make some valuable friends and also maintain fellowship with fellow Christians.

This helped me to decrease stock I was earning in MCI, or, in other words, stop making long distance calls so much. Secondly, I was able to do something beside studying.

Through my involvement BSA, I got the chance to work on different leadership committees and learn a lot about many important issues. In Visions of Light, I got the chance to travel to Austin to sing in a gospel program that includes many different colleges from around the state of Texas.

These organizations were such a positive influence on my life that I have returned to each one.

This year I am proud to say that I am the president of the Black Student Association, and that I will be singing even louder in the Visions of Light Gospel Choir. I am no longer just seeking involvement, but now I hope to encourage involvement.

I want to say to everyone at Texas Tech: Academic achievement is a necessity, but being involved on your campus is a start to something great as well. It's a start to changing what is going to be your small space in the world for at least four years of your life.

Nakia Alford is a sophomore nursing major from Dallas and president of Texas Tech's Black Student Association.

Freshman Council offers students voice

Kristin Ketcham/SA vice president

Texas Tech is an outstanding university that holds many opportunities for new students. Freshman Council is one of the few student organizations on this campus with a membership made up entirely of first-year students.

This organization provides its members with insight into the internal workings of student government at Tech. The Freshman Council focuses on facilitating the transition from high school to university student government. This council works closely with the Student Senate, as well as to fulfill their own commitments and responsibilities. The following are the top-10 reasons to join Freshman Council:

10. The incredible sponsors (senators Matt Freeman and Blythe Harrell)
9. The meetings do not conflict with your favorite TV show.
8. Earn respect from upperclassmen.
7. The opportunity to work with Student Senate and executive officers from the Student Association.
6. Another great excuse to get away from your new roommate.
5. The chance to give something back to Texas Tech.
4. The opportunity to serve as a representative for the entire freshman class.
3. Seventy percent of Freshman Council members later become involved in the Student Senate or executive positions.
2. Becoming part of this organization could improve your dating life.
1. Because everyone wants to do it.

If you are interested in running for Freshman Council position, a statement of intent must be filed at the Student Association Office, room 230 in the University Center, no later than 5 p.m. Friday. Elections will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 24 in the University Center and 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. in all residence halls. If students have any questions, regarding freshman elections, call the SA Office at 742-3631.

State View

San Antonio Express-News on state ethics policy:

Gov. George W. Bush's move to restrict lobbying activities of former employees puts him in a class by himself. He is the first Texas governor to do so. That shouldn't be lost on state legislators.

Bush last week announced he will limit the lobbying activities of staff members who leave his administration. The tough new policy also prohibits senior staff members from working in the governor's office if their spouses are registered lobbyists.

The governor joins a handful of state officials who also seem to understand that the perception of influence-peddling is unacceptable.

House Speaker Pete Laney and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock have similar policies in place.

Surely other legislators can see the need to follow Bush's lead. They now are free to work as lobbyists as soon as they leave office. As such, the perception lingers that former lawmakers would enjoy greater access to the Statehouse. Does anyone really believe they don't?

The public, meanwhile, is left to wonder if the lobbyists will cross the line between a perceived conflict of interest and a real one.

The Legislature in 1991 passed an ethics law barring former members of state boards and commissions and former high-level state agency employees from representing clients before their former boards or agencies during the first two years after leaving their state jobs.

A glaring omission leaves lawmakers untouched. That should be remedied.

Austin American-Statesman on corporal punishment:

Corporal punishment, better known as paddling, is no longer allowed in Georgetown schools, and that's a good thing. More school districts in Texas should ban that cruel and outdated form of discipline.

As painful and humiliating as a paddling is for the student, two administrators at Lake Travis High School found out it can be harmful to the person dishing out the beating, too.

An assistant principal and the baseball coach at Lake Travis were fired this year after paddling a student for skipping athletic class.

In that case, the two were dismissed because they failed to follow established policy that required parental permission and the assistant principal, not the coach, to administer the paddling.

The student's father said he never gave permission for his son to be paddled.

In Central Texas, Georgetown joined Austin and Round Rock in not allowing paddling in school.

Most other school districts in the region do have policies that allow corporal punishment within certain guidelines.

Paddling is a vestige of an earlier time, when discipline was as much a part of the school curriculum as arithmetic. Whacking kids with a board doesn't help them become better students or better people. In fact it can have the opposite effect.

Amarillo Globe-News on White House ethics:

Why should Americans be surprised any more when they read about scandals surrounding key players in the Clinton administration or in the president's re-election campaign?

Richard Morris, the married architect of the president's "family values" message has quit amid allegations that he conducted a year-long affair with a Washington, D.C., hooker.

Susan McDougal, convicted in the complicated Whitewater land deal involving President and Mrs. Clinton, now has been cited for contempt for refusing to tell a grand jury whether the president lied under oath during the Little Rock, Ark., trial. She plans to go to jail.

Henry Cisneros, in Texas, admitted to making payments to a former mistress. And we've had congressional investigations into matters relating to the White House travel office and the egregious mishandling of FBI files by White House personnel.

Yet polls continue to show that character doesn't seem to matter in this election. In the eyes of millions of Americans, the economy concerns them most.

Tech professors receive salaries with low rank

To the editor: This letter is with reference to Andrea Broyles article in The University Daily on Chancellor Montford's salary (9/3/96). In her article, Broyles said that Tech professors are paid an average of $60,660 per year. I am not sure where her data came from, but they are not consistent with what I found in the university library. Perhaps she was referring to compensation rather than salary. Your readers may be interested in the latest comparative salary.

The following figures are from the March/April issue of Academe, the journal of the American Association of University Professors. This organization publishes an annual list of salary and compensation for U.S. college faculty. It is interesting to note that the average salary for all Texas Tech faculty (not including graduate teaching assistants) for 1995-96 was $48,900.

The value of compensation, i.e., salary plus benefits, was $60,000. By ranks, salaries were professor — $65,100; associate professor — $45,800; assistant professor — $37,300; and instructor $25,700. Compared nationally, Tech salaries fall into the bottom 20 percent of universities at the associate professor, assistant professor and instructor levels. Professors come out slightly better, in the fourth quintile, between 20 and 40 percent from the bottom.

Perhaps it is more instructive to compare Tech salaries with those of other institutions in Texas. Using the institutions of the former Southwest Conference for comparison, Rice University has the highest average salaries at $74,600 a year and The University of Texas-Austin follows at $60,300. Tech is in last place among eight universities, trailing the University of Houston and Texas Christian University, which are tied for sixth place with average salaries of $54,700. Despite a series of small salary increases made during the Lawless presidency, Tech still lags well behind the universities with which we generally compare ourselves.

Tech students work hard to receive good grades

To the editor: After the hearty laugh I received reading the letter written by Estreicher (Your View 9/6/96), I felt that I needed to clear up a certain point that he attempted to make. As a student, I rarely hear the phrase "happy with 'C.'" Usually, I hear my fellow students saying something to the effect of "I'll have to bust my butt this semester — I'm trying for a four-point." The reason Professor Estreicher hears this phrase so rarely is because his reputation precedes him. As a former student of his, I know exactly why his students would be happy with a 'C.' Aside from the fact that I personally disagreed with his teaching style, I must look at the grading policies of the physics department where a grade of 58 percent will receive a 'C.' I would not consider this the action of a department with high expectations from its students. Nobody wants to have a 'C,' but when one strives for the best while the odds are stacked against him or her, and there are only a finite number of hours in the day to study for a class, then the minimum accomplishment required by the state does not seem to be too terrible a fate.

Celebrating Independence

by Ginger Pope/UD

From buildings to people, Hispanic culture influences many areas of Texas Tech.

Sophia Rodriguez, president-elect for the Hispanic Student Society and a senior elementary education major from Wichita Falls, said a month of activities has been planned for Tech students to experience the Hispanic culture.

Hispanic Heritage Month begins at 7 p.m. today with a reception in the University Center Ballroom.

The Hispanic Student Society has been planning these events in conjunction with the UC Cultural Exchange Program, Rodriguez said.

The Hispanic Student Society wants to promote the Hispanic culture year round, but the activities planned for this month are a focus on the promotion of the Hispanic culture, she said.

"These events are to help establish more cultural awareness among students," she said. "We also want to arouse Hispanics with a desire to come together to preserve the past and to promote a positive future."

Many people often lose their heritage as a result of just living in the United States, she said.

"It is important to know who you are and where you come from," she said.

These events will benefit everyone, and everyone is invited, she said.

"Hispanic culture is important in all areas of the U.S., but there are closer ties here in this area," Rodriguez said. This can be an educational process for people to learn about another culture and gain more respect for the beauty of the Hispanic culture, she said.

This year's events have been scheduled around 1810 Diez y Seis de Septiembre, or Sept. 16, 1810, Mexico's Independence Day, Rodriguez said. Monday is the 186th anniversary of Mexico's independence.

The Hispanic Student Society was originated so Hispanics could come together and provide service to the community as well, she said.

It is important to know who you are and where you come from.

Sophia Rodriguez, president of Hispanic Student Society

The UC did not work with the Hispanic Student Society last year, but they have enjoyed the involvement this year, Solloway said.

Hispanic Heritage Month events include screenings of "Like Water For Chocolate" Friday and "Mi Familia (My Family)" Tuesday in the UC Allen Theatre.

There also will be a panel discussion on the history of Mexico at 7 p.m. Monday in the UC Lubbock Room and a UC Programs Coffee House in the UC Faculty Club at 7 p.m. Sept. 22.

Other events include the Piñata Fest in the UC Courtyard Sept. 25 and the Salsa Contest and St. Patrick's Ballet Folklorico Oct. 2.

Solloway said she would like to learn more about the Hispanic culture. "I like learning about the Hispanic culture," she said. "It seems so lively and festive."

"They have neat traditions and are very interactive with music and dancing."

Solloway encourages everyone to come because understanding other people's backgrounds can make it easier to get along.

Jill Robinson, chairwoman of the UC Cultural Exchange Program, said the whole idea behind these types of events is to bring different cultures to Tech and give students a different taste of life.

There are so many issues to deal with in our society and all things seem to lead to different cultures, Robinson said.

The Hispanic Heritage Month begins today and ends Oct. 15.

Arena

The master plan is a five-year maintenance plan for the campus. HOK is charged with deciding where new projects should go as well as tracking renovations. This plan is updated yearly and is to be submitted to the board on Nov. 8.

"We were asked to evaluate the arena and how it fit with the university," Mann said. "A big part of the location was the points the arena will offer like the food court and meeting rooms."

The arena works well with other projects on campus as well as the current design of Tech's Spanish architecture, he said.

The biggest regulation the designers and builders will face will be to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, he said.

This will require them to ensure that all entrances and seating spaces are handicapped accessible.

The Tech Board of Regents unanimously approved the arena proposal Aug. 20.

Board members have been continuously briefed on the developments of the process, Wayne said.

The SA is in the process of circulating information about the arena to the student body, he said. SA representatives have met with members of student organizations and are mailing information to all on-campus students.

Pat Grigsby, president of UC Programs and a sophomore math major from Montrose, Colo., agrees with Montford's admission that the process has been rushed.

"I think as far as general students are concerned, it was rushed because the information wasn't given to us," Grigsby said, clarifying that this is his opinion and not that of UC Programs.

Students will vote Oct. 1 to decide whether to allocate $3 per credit hour from the General Use Fee toward funding the arena.

School Homecoming bonfire explosion rocks Amarillo-area town

AMARILLO (AP) — Authorities believe someone deliberately caused the explosion of a homecoming bonfire in Stinnett that injured at least four people and sent debris flying across the campus of West Texas High School.

Stinnett Police Chief Randy Hooks said he believed foul play was involved in the Tuesday night incident, but "at this time, we do not know what caused the explosion, it is still under investigation."

The State Fire Marshal is investigating in this town about 50 miles northeast of Amarillo, he said.

Three of the victims injured in the blast were treated and released at Golden Plains Community Hospital in nearby Borger.

The fourth — Greg Drennan, 34, a school district maintenance director — was being transferred from Golden Plains to Amarillo's Northwest Texas Hospital. His condition was not immediately available.

He may have been "hit in the head with a flying piece of wood," a spokeswoman at the Stinnett Police Department said.

The explosion occurred about 8:10 p.m. in the midst of a crowd of 250 to 300 people, strewing debris for hundreds of yards, authorities said.

"Our school area covers three to four blocks, and from what I understand, we do have debris pretty much over the school area," a Stinnett police dispatcher said.

Jerry Blagg, whose daughter is a cheerleader at the high school, said the explosion occurred seconds after torches were thrown on the bonfire, constructed out of pallets of wood stacked 25 to 30 feet high.

"As soon as it blew up, everyone took out running," Blagg said. "It was a pretty traumatic experience."

George Fisher, who was attending the bonfire with his wife and two grandchildren, said the explosion had "a lot of force."

"Boards and pallets were flying through the air, from the bonfire to the nearby tennis courts, some 20 yards away," he said.

Austin Selby, 18, said the blast created a lot of hysteria.

"People were running around screaming and looking for their kids."

Baylor president receives turmoil for religious views

WACO (AP) — A number of Baylor University faculty members are accusing newly installed President Robert Sloan of weeding out those who don't meet his strict religious standards, the Texas Journal of The Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday.

They say professors have been denied tenure, lecturers fired and job candidates run off for not being sufficiently devout, the newspaper said.

Critics say Sloan's attempts to create a conservative religious atmosphere threaten to damage the Baptist-affiliated university's reputation and stifle intellectual freedom.

"The new president has an interest in having an ever-stronger Christian evangelical religious fervor on campus," Michael Bishop, chairman of Baylor's journalism department, said.

"He wants to select faculty members who come out of a narrow Baptist tradition that he's comfortable with, but that is foreign to the historic tradition of Baylor. I believe that religious credentials under Robert Sloan have surpassed in importance academic qualifications."

Sloan, 47, says nothing has changed in the year since he took the helm.

"Baylor for 151 years has been committed to its Christian heritage," he says. "I have the same commitment that every one of my predecessors has had."

Baylor, the largest Baptist university in the nation, is legally free to choose its faculty based on religious criteria and always has done so, giving preference first to Baptists, then to other Christian denominations except Mormons.

In recent decades, however, many church-affiliated universities have grown more secular, partly to cultivate their academic reputations. Baylor has been no exception.

When Sloan — the first Baptist minister to head the school in 34 years — allowed the school to hold its first-ever dance in April, it widely was viewed as a sign that Baylor was falling even more in line with secular universities.

"Is there a wolf in sheep's clothing? Is that a diversion? I think it is," said Lanelle McNamara, a Baylor alumna and former professor who now practices law in Waco.

There already is talk in academic circles that Baylor is becoming more "BC," or "biblically correct," says Glenn Linden, a Southern Methodist University history professor and former president of the American Association of University Professors in Texas.

Baylor Alumni Association President Lyndon Olson is concerned the turmoil will detract from fund-raising. The controversy, he says, "has a life of its own now. And I don't know what the reality is at this point."

Sloan's predecessor, Herbert Reynolds, had a reputation as a critic of fundamentalists and defender of academic and religious freedom. Now Baylor's chancellor, Reynolds declined to comment on the turmoil. But he emphasized he has "high regard for our faculty and staff here."

Sloan proposed changing the wording of faculty-recruitment advertisements to emphasize Baylor's preference for hiring Baptists and Christians. He defended the move as an effort to be more honest with job candidates.

But many faculty members saw a shift to give religious qualifications priority in hiring over academic credentials. The Faculty Senate issued a statement condemning the new wording, saying it could have a chilling effect on recruitment. Sloan canceled the ads, but in a letter to all prospective faculty members, he spends two pages emphasizing Baylor's Christian priorities and his belief that "Baylor University can remain true to its heritage."

Hurricane Fausto heads for Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Tropical Storm Fausto became a hurricane Wednesday, and meteorologists said it could threaten Mexico's Baja Peninsula.

Mexican weather officials attributed torrential rains along Mexico's Pacific coast to the storm.

Wednesday morning Fausto had sustained winds of 75 mph with gusts of up to 92 mph.

It was moving west-northwest at about 11 mph and was expected to strengthen gradually over the next 48 hours before weakening, the National Weather Service in Miami predicted.

The advisory said if the storm heads northwest more than expected, hurricane watches and warnings may be required for the southern end of the Baja Peninsula.

Mexico's National Meteorological Service attributed heavy rains along the coasts of the states of Guerrero, Colima, Jalisco and Michoacan to Fausto.

Russian explosion caused by hammer

MOSCOW (AP) — A missile warhead exploded in the Russian Far East last weekend when soldiers tried to break open the casing with a hammer in hopes of finding precious metals, a leading newspaper reported Wednesday.

All three died when the warhead of a S-125 Neva surface-to-air missile exploded Sunday morning.

The daily newspaper Izvestia said some newer models do have components containing gold and platinum. The warhead the soldiers tried to open was an older model without precious metals.

Sunday's incident was just the latest example of carelessness and corruption inside Russia's demoralized armed forces, Izvestia said, describing the problem as severe in the Russian Far East.

"Thefts of weapons, munitions and explosives have acquired an unprecedented scale in Far Eastern military units," it said.

The conscripts were able to steal the warhead because the officer in charge left the keys unguarded, according to Izvestia.

Poland wants vodka name changed

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland is famous for vodka and Chopin, but not everyone is sure they should go together.

Three years after the Polmos spirit company launched a new luxury vodka named after Poland's most famous composer, the culture ministry said Wednesday it wants to ban use of Frederic Chopin's moniker on the bottles.

"It is something very harmful if the image of the great composer is being used to promote a vodka," ministry spokesman Krzysztof Czerwiecki told The Associated Press.

But Andrzej Sawczuk, head of Polmos' marketing office, disagrees, saying the two are a natural fit.

"This is a highly luxurious product, successfully competing against such brands as Smirnoff. By no means does it bring harm to Chopin's name," he said.

Sawczuk adds that Chopin vodka, which sells here for about $13 in tall chic bottles made of frosted glass, is very popular in Scandinavia, Great Britain, Japan, and Australia.

"We have no reason to be ashamed of it," he said.

Culture Minister Zdzislaw Podkanski sent a letter Aug. 26 to the patent office demanding it withdraw permission for Polmos to use the 19th century composer's name.

"I consider this situation as offending the memory of our great compatriot, harming our national culture and Poland's image abroad," the letter said.

But Sawczuk, whose company sponsors the Chopin Society, said the timing of the move couldn't be worse.

College of Architecture adds international flavor

by Sheree' Keith/UD

Some world travelers and Harvard graduates have chosen Texas Tech's College of Architecture as their new home this semester.

John Edgar, who now teaches undergraduate lecture and design courses, has learned to combine two of his favorite pastimes — travelling and architecture.

Studying the different kinds of architecture found around the world has helped him develop his own talent in the field, and he recommends his students do the same.

Edgar, who lived in Australia during his youth, has visited Africa, the Orient and Europe and has been around the world several times, he said.

"They (students) should experience the way the people live, work, and walk in the buildings," he said. "I strongly recommend travelling."

Although this is his first semester in a Tech classroom, this is not Edgar's first association with the school.

Edgar worked with Tech last year while teaching at Midland College. He was in charge of the architecture program, which offered students classes that coincided with architecture classes at Tech, enabling students to transfer to Tech as juniors.

Edgar said his main motivations for becoming a permanent member of Tech faculty were his interest in regional design and his desire to cultivate his own skills.

"I want to develop my teaching skills at the first and second year of college," Edgar said. "It made sense to come to Tech."

Edgar's new position as Tech faculty member may have softened the blow of Tech's football victory against Edgar's alma mater, Oklahoma State, Saturday.

"I went to Oklahoma in the Jimmy Johnson-era," he said.

Now everyone beats Oklahoma, Edgar added.

Although he's teaching at a different school, Edgar said the scenery is the same: Lubbock is a lot like Midland — flat.

The large student body and diverse faculty have presented quite a change for Edgar, who described his move from a small, two-year junior college to Tech, population 24,000, as "a quantum leap to Lubbock."

Joining Edgar in the College of Architecture is Canada-native Martin Hogue.

Hogue originally comes from Montreal, Canada. He graduated from the University of Montreal, where all of his classes were conducted in French.

Hogue, a Harvard graduate, said he likes surrounding himself with motivated people eager to learn.

Lubbock is a drastic change for Hogue who, after living in Canada for several years, moved to Florida to work with a private architecture firm.

The job offer from Tech was his most interesting offer compared to others received, he said, calling his new position as architecture professor a "solid opportunity."

It met his professional expectations for teaching and seemed like a good place to start building a career.

Coming to Lubbock presented more than a change in career, it also was a culture shock. His home town of Montreal is several times bigger than Lubbock.

Montreal's great sense of history and pride for the people is unparalleled in Lubbock, he said.

He said Lubbock does not have the same sense of history because it is not as old.

Another thing Hogue noticed about Lubbock is the lack of public transportation and the difficulty of walking or biking anywhere.

"I'm sure there are really nice things in Lubbock, but I'll have to dig and find them," he said.

Hogue currently teaches design studio at the freshman, sophomore and junior levels.

In the future he would like to have his own design firm and continue to teach at Tech. For now he is on a one year contract with the possibility of renewal.

David Owers completes the list of three new faces to join the College of Architecture this semester.

Owers, a visiting lecturer of architecture, earned his degree from Harvard before working on architecture projects in the Middle East and England.

"He brings a great deal of professional background to Tech," said Martin Harms, dean of the College of Architecture.

Owers currently is working with graduate students and will give a lecture in the architecture department's lecture series. He will be at Tech until October.

"I'm sure there are really nice things in Lubbock, but I'll have to dig and find them."

Bosnian factions attempt to get citizens to vote

KONJIC, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — After years of war, Muslims have a chance to make a choice in a free election. But despite rallies, posters and TV appearances, opponents of the ruling party have made little headway.

In this town of 12,000 people southwest of Sarajevo, opponents of the leading Muslim Party for Democratic Action say they have had plenty of chances to campaign — they just haven't seen many results.

Across Muslim territory, only two opposition groups stand to gain a small chunk of the governing party's votes in Saturday's election.

One is the Joint List, an eclectic five-party coalition spanning socialists and conservative agrarians. The other is the European-minded Party for Bosnia-Herzegovina led by former Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic.

Both are strongest among secular, educated, urban voters. More common among Muslims is the attitude of an elderly Konjic woman who identified herself only as Habibija.

"I'll vote for Alija," she said, referring to President Alija Izetbegovic, head of the ruling party. "Whom else should I vote for?"

It's an issue not only in Muslim territory, but all over Bosnia. Serbs, Croats and Muslims are lining up behind the parties that led them into — and through — the 3 1/2-year war. The Serbian Democratic Party. The Croatian Democratic Union. And Izetbegovic's party.

In campaign ads and rallies, the three parties controlling Serb, Croat and Muslim areas accuse their rivals of dividing the people and putting their respective nations in danger.

"The nationalist parties are still using the people's fear," said Ahmed Tufekdzija, a motel manager who heads the Konjic branch of the opposition Liberal Party.

The Liberal Party calls for a unified, multi-ethnic Bosnia, democratization, privatization, and the return of refugees to their prewar homes. But according to recent polls, Liberals will garner only about 1 to 1 1/2 percent of the vote.

"We are trying to teach people that they have a choice," Tufekdzija said.

Voters are unimpressed.

"It's the international community that said it's necessary to have a lot of parties," said Ibrahim Babic, a 45-year-old imam, or Muslim clergyman, in Zenica, central Bosnia.

During the war, Konjic, an ethnically mixed town, was attacked by two sides. Croats shelled it from one end, while the Serbs lobbed mortars from beyond the hills.

Early in the war, the minaret of its mosque was sheared off, leaving a ragged stump.

Many Serb and Croat residents left and refugees moved in, raising the Muslim population from just over half to about 90 percent.

Tufekdzija and other foes of the ruling party count on their personal ties to win votes.

But voters are even more familiar with the ruling party, known by the initials SDA.

On recent weekends, country roads have been clogged with buses heading to party rallies. "SDA" is stenciled in white on roads leading into Konjic.

Green-and-white SDA banners hang over streets, posters blanket buildings, and graffiti cover walls.

In Sarajevo, too, the ruling party has put on a show of strength. On Wednesday, vehicles carrying the party's flag jammed the capital's streets. Drivers blew their horns and yelled party slogans.

"Alija — we love you," said a gigantic flag held between two cars heading a column of vehicles.

Loud music played, interrupted by calls of "Vote for the SDA in the name of Allah," blaring from cars with megaphones. Portraits of Izetbegovic were plastered on windshields.

Singers mourn Monroe's death

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — One last time, the sprightly bluegrass standard "Rawhide" was given a workout with Bill Monroe in the house.

Country singer Ricky Skaggs launched into a rendition of Monroe's trademark instrumental near the end of Wednesday's solemn funeral for the "father of bluegrass."

"If this is inappropriate, we're sorry. Pray about it and get over it," Skaggs said before playing the rollicking tune with the help of Marty Stuart, Vince Gill, Roy Husky Jr. and Stuart Duncan.

Monroe's closed casket, with his white cowboy hat on top, was just a few feet away on the flower-covered stage of Ryman Auditorium, the former home of the Grand Ole Opry.

The service included eulogies by two pastors, but also celebrated the musical legacy of Monroe, who died Monday at age 84 of complications from a stroke he suffered in April.

Gill, Skaggs and Stuart — each deeply influenced by Monroe's music — also accompanied vocalists, including bluegrass great Ralph Stanley, country stalwart Connie Smith and Emmylou Harris.

"We love him and we're going to miss him," Skaggs said, his voice breaking.

Monroe is credited with developing bluegrass in the 1940s, assisted by his Blue Grass Boys, especially banjo player Earl Scruggs.

Among the estimated 1,500 mourners were musicians Steve Earle, Alison Krauss, Amy Grant and Billy Ray Cyrus.

Mourners filed past the body prior to the service, and then Monroe's mandolin was set center-stage on a pedestal, highlighted by a spotlight.

He will be buried Thursday.

Rush's new release receives upbeat review

by Kirk Baird/UD

After nearly a three-year absence, veteran '70s rock group Rush returns to the record shelves with the band's latest release, Test For Echo.

At just under 54 minutes, this 11-track compact disc marks somewhat of a departure from Rush's previous disc, '93's Counterparts.

That's both good news and bad news for fans of the group: Echo's more streamlined approach and fewer keyboards produces a harder edge the band has not had since its early work. Gone too, however, are the melodic sensibilities and substantial moodiness those keyboards brought the band's work.

Rush makes up for it, however, with harder-edged guitar work as well as some simple-but-effective acoustic guitar work to fill the voids between riffs.

It's a seamless combination that's similar to much of today's guitar-driven modern rock, which should come as no surprise since many of the people who worked on the disc — including producer Peter Collins, who has worked with Rush previously — have worked with groups such as Nirvana, R.E.M. and Candlebox.

Apparently the Canadian power trio — Geddy Lee, bass, vocals; Alex Lifeson, guitars; Neil Peart, drums, percussion — isn't quite ready to ride that Brontosaurus into the sunset.

And with strong efforts such as "Half The World," "Resist," "Carve Away the Stone" and the radio-friendly title track, "Maybe That's a

Artist: Rush
Title: Test For Echo

UD Rating: ★★★1/2

Good Thing."

According to some Internet notes about the disc from Peart, Test For Echo derives its title from the aspect that "everybody needs an 'echo.' Some affirmation to know they're not alone."

Consequently, the disc is filled with Peart's lyrical diatribes against the human condition:

"Half the world cries/ Half the world laughs/ Half the world tries/ To be the other half."

In this respect, Rush fans take solace: The man who once used bickering forest trees as an allegory for solidarity is in fine lyrical form — such as the song "Virtuality," which derides the Internet: "I can save the universe in a grain of sand/ I can hold the future in my virtual hand."

Musically, the gifted three's exploration into unfamiliar sonic territory is, by and large, a success with the harder sound a nice juxtaposition to Lee's improving-but-still-nasal vocals. Lifeson continues to show that creating a solid piece of guitar work does not have to involve a blazing or blaring guitar solo (young bands please take note).

Lee provides his customary excellent bass work, adding nice touches of musical craftsmanship here and there. And Peart... well, if you know anything about rock 'n' roll, you know his standing as one of the more respected drummers in the industry (rest assured, his status remains unchanged).

All in all, Rush not only passes its latest Test but helps disprove the adage: You can't teach an old dinosaur new tricks.

'Like Water For Chocolate' first in international series

by Darcy Rosie/UD

The University Center kicks off the fourth annual International Film Series Friday with the highly acclaimed movie "Like Water For Chocolate."

The film begins at 7:30 p.m. Friday and will be shown in the UC Allen Theatre.

The cost is $3 for students and $4 for the general public. Stacey Monk, a UC activities specialist, said the film is making its second showing at Tech because of its popularity.

The award-winning Mexican film — based on the novel written by Laura Esquivel — is about a young woman who has an uncanny power that enables her to magically transmit her feelings and passions to everything she cooks.

"First and foremost, this is a Mexican film," Monk said. "It's a love story. It's a story about overcoming tradition."

Students should take the time to discover foreign films, she said. "It would be a great supplement to what students learn in class," she said.

The plots in international films are really quite similar to the mainstream movies released in theaters, but with more emphasis on plot lines and themes, she said.

"These films represent real life stories and situations," she said. "If you like movies with good plots, then these are the kind of movies you would want to see."

The stories are about love and cooking, bizarre customs, revolution, political issues, social issues, family ties and folklore and tradition, she said.

"These are award-winning films that people should see," she said.

The series offers movies made by independent filmmakers from around the globe.

Aside from movies made in the United States, there will be films from Mexico, France, Russia, Iran and Ireland.

The series runs both the fall and spring semesters with four films being shown each semester.

"Burnt by the Sun," a movie about Russian life during the Stalin era will be shown Sept. 27.

"The War Room," a behind-the-scenes look at the 1992 Clinton campaign, shows Oct. 25.

Concluding the fall schedule Nov. 15 is "The White Balloon," a film made in Iran detailing the troubling times of a young girl on Iranian New Years.

A lack of exposure to foreign films has kept Bonnie Graham, a broadcast journalism major from Wichita Falls, from seeing an international film even though she has had family encouragement to see "Like Water for Chocolate."

"My brother was a theater arts major at Tech, and he told me to go see it," Graham said.

Graham said she would probably go see the movie this weekend.

Wright brings monotone style to Lubbock

by James Walker/UD

It's 1970. It's after midnight, and somewhere in a small suburb in Burlington, Mass., a young boy is curled up with a little AM transistor radio, listening to Woody Allen, Bob Newhart and Jonathan Winters while the rest of his family sleeps.

Steven Wright, then 14 years old, had the idea that he might be able to do that, too.

"There were really two parts to my mind, the reality and the fantasy," Wright said.

From that point on, throughout school, Wright always kept his dream in the back of his mind, until one day he decided to give it a try.

"I decided I don't want to be 50 or so selling insurance in Wyoming, wondering what it would have been like," he said. "If you've got something you want to do, you should try it, because I'm just a guy and I'm out here having a great time."

The Academy Award-winning comedian is scheduled to perform at 8 p.m. Friday in the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium.

Wright said his unique comedy style came to him automatically, not from any conscious attempt to be different from other comedians.

"How I speak is just how I speak," he said.

"I don't like talking about giant things, like the presidential race. It's the tiny things that make up life, like the lint on the screen in the dryer, that I think are funny."

In school, Wright said he was the kind of person nobody ever noticed. He was an introverted character, always fading into the background.

When he went to Emerson College in Massachusetts, it was like the beginning of a new part of his life, he said.

"There were all these bizarre people from New York there," he said.

Wright

"It was the '70s, but around there it was kind of like 1969."

Wright acknowledged he has always been outside of the norm, but said, "that kind of poured water on the flower of my weirdness."

When he is not touring and performing, Wright said he finds the time for other creative ventures, including painting and playing guitar.

The creative process involved in painting is similar to writing comedy, he said.

Both require keen observation, and noticing small details about both what is there and what is not there.

Wright has done about nine paintings in the past five years or so, he said.

"I do them, and if I like it I hang it up. If I don't, I just throw it away," he said.

Wright said he writes songs for guitar and paints merely for the private joy of creation, since so much of his work is so heavily judged.

"I appreciate that I get to make a living from my imagination," he said. "If I was in another century, I would be guy on a mule with a mandolin, going from town to town entertaining people, and then moving on to the next town."

Local promoter Garret Perkins said Steven Wright was fairly easy to convince to come to Lubbock.

Wright appeals to intelligent, college-educated people, Perkins said. That makes Lubbock an ideal market.

"His demographic is here," he said. "Stupid people don't like Steven Wright. Even as a comedian myself, I don't get some of his jokes."

Many performers are wary of coming to Lubbock because people here wait until the last minute to buy tickets, Perkins said.

Contrary to popular opinion, there are entertainment opportunities in Lubbock, but many people don't take advantage of them, he said.

Howie Mandell will be coming to town Oct. 25, and a group of comedians including Perkins is scheduled to perform at the Cactus Theater later in the year, he said.

"When I first started doing stand-up, I opened for Steven Wright," Perkins said. "He has a personalized style, which is very rare."

Quartetto Gelato offers new kind of classical music

by Rebecca Babb/UD

If Mozart, Brahms and Beethoven are all turning in their graves right now, it may be because Quartetto Gelato has burst onto the music scene.

Quartetto Gelato is an eclectic Canadian "New Classical" quartet self-professed as "part Peter Schickel, part Mozart in Brazil with a dancer named Bonita and part Goon Show and Monty Python, but all musician."

The group will be playing a concert in UC Allen Theater a 8 p.m. Saturday as a part of the University Center Nightlife Series.

Mary Donahue, assistant coordinator of student activities for cultural events, said the UC has heard several good things about the group.

"I hope students take advantage of the Nightlife series because there are a lot of opportunities to see a lot of different things at a price they're never going to get to see them at again," Donahue said.

The group was launched as a classical oboe quartet several years ago, but since then has acquired a diverse grocery list of instruments including accordion, oboe and mandolin as well as the more traditional cello, violin and tenor voice.

The group features an avant-garde combination of gypsy music, opera and classical music.

"It's not the type of performance you would usually see in this area," she said. "It's our hope to do things aren't being offered here."

Donahue said people should come to this concert because it is an opportunity to see a different kind of performance.

The group, whose name means "ice cream quartet," has toured Canada and the United States and has received rave reviews, said Sheila Porter, spokeswoman for the quartet.

They were named Debut Artist of the Year by National Public Radio in 1996, Porter said.

Porter said that the decision was made by a panel of three critics from the Wall Street Journal, Newsweek and the Kansas City Star after the quartet was selected to play in the NPR Performance Today series.

They also ranked fourth in Classical Music Magazine's National Best-Seller List in 1994.

The non-traditional quartet played a command performance for Prince Phillip in 1993.

"They bring absolutely top quality musicianship and a sense of fun, humor, enjoyment and sharing to their performances," Porter said. "There is absolutely no barrier, no stiffness between them and the audience."

The four musicians who comprise this "ice cream quartet" are all in their late '30s and have long-term friendships dating back 14 years, she said.

"It's quite deliberate, the choice of the name," she said. "They consider that their music is music of many different flavors, much like an ice cream sundae."

All four are accomplished musicians, according to information released through the group's publicist.

Cynthia Staljas, who plays oboe and English horn for the group, has performed with a variety of prestigious ensembles that span the globe, including the Toronto Chamber Winds and the National Ballet of Canada as principal oboe.

A music enthusiast from a young age, Peter De Sotto lends tenor voice, violin and mandolin to the group's unique sound.

In addition to appearing as soloist with many orchestras, he has performed with Symphony Canada and the Toronto Symphony.

As well as filling the role of arranger, Italian-born Claudio Vena plays viola and accordion with the quartet.

George Meanwell plays cello, guitar and mandolin in Quartetto Gelato. "They come from very different musical backgrounds," Porter said.

"They all bring slightly different slants to make one fabulous ensemble," she said.

Porter said their backgrounds also include jazz, bluegrass, rock and gypsy music.

"The group's choice of repertoire is completely eclectic," Porter said. "They never use one note of written music on stage."

Rangers' magic number to 10 after Mariners' loss

TORONTO (AP) — Texas third baseman Dean Palmer committed two errors on the same play, allowing Toronto to score the go-ahead run in a six-run seventh inning Wednesday night that gave the Blue Jays an 8-3 win over the Rangers.

Otis Nixon had two hits as the Blue Jays stopped an eight-game losing streak to Texas.

Ivan Rodriguez and Will Clark homered for the AL West-leading Rangers, who had their winning streak end at five games.

Trailing 3-1, Nixon and Jacob Brumfield started the seventh with singles off Ed Vosberg (1-1) before Joe Carter hit an RBI double. Juan Samuel walked to load the bases, and one out later, Dennis Cook walked Carlos Delgado with to force in the tying run.

Alex Gonzalez followed with a chopper to third where Palmer misplayed the ball for one error, then threw wildly to the plate for another, allowing two runs to score.

Nixon capped the inning with a two-run single to give the Blue Jays a 7-3 lead.

Luis Andujar (1-2), making his first start since he was acquired from the Chicago White Sox on Aug. 22, gave up three runs and nine hits over seven innings.

However, the Rangers did not lose ground as Joe Vitiello broke out of an 0-for-17 slump with a two-run double after Ken Griffey Jr.'s bad throw put two runners in scoring position as Kansas City beat Seattle 4-2 Wednesday night.

The Mariners stranded 11 runners, including two in the eighth when Jeff Granger struck out Dave Hollins, who hit a two-run homer in the seventh.

After Tom Goodwin, Bip Roberts and Craig Paquette singled to open the Kansas City fourth, Mike Macfarlane hit a short fly to Griffey in center.

Goodwin tagged up and scored when Griffey's throw sailed wide of the plate, which also allowed Roberts and Paquette to move up a base. Vitiello then doubled in both runners to put Kansas City up 3-0.

Doug Linton (7-9), making his first start since Aug. 31, got the win. He gave up four hits in six innings, including the homer to Hollins.

Jaime Bluma pitched the ninth for his second save.

Jamie Moyer (11-3) took the loss. He allowed four runs on eight hits in seven innings.

Cricket's fall in Tex-La series opener

Lubbock Crickets' second straight trip to championship begins with 11-inning loss

by Brent Dirks/UD

The Abilene Prairie Dogs took a 1-0 lead Wednesday in the Texas-Louisiana Championship Series with a 5-4 victory over the Lubbock Crickets at Dan Law Field.

It was billed as the battle of the ex-major league pitchers, and it lived up to its billing, with former Pittsburgh Pirate Bill Landrum and former Detroit Tiger David Haas setting up an 11 inning struggle.

Abilene got to work quickly on Landrum as third baseman Manny Gagliano doubled in first baseman Rod Brewer in the second inning to put the Prairie Dogs up 1-0.

The Crickets waited until the fourth inning to get on the scoreboard as designated hitter Glenn Sullivan and right fielder Roberto Ramirez scored to put the Crickets up 2-1.

Landrum found his consistency after the second inning, allowing one run and striking out four in six innings. Before Landrum could get an out in the sixth inning, he was removed after Gagliano singled in Brewer and right fielder Paul Coleman to put Abilene up 3-2.

One inning later, Abilene increased its lead as designated hitter Barry Jones hit a solo home run off Cricket relief pitcher Greg Bicknell. The shot added one run to the Prairie Dogs' lead, making it 4-2.

The score stayed in Abilene's fa-

Jones' RBI single to left off Cricket pitcher Rick Forney, scored catcher Scott Bethea to put the Dogs up for good at 5-4. Lubbock could not produce any runs in the bottom of the ninth.

Game 2 of the series will be played at 7:05 p.m. today at Dan Law Field.

Lubbock will start Texas-Louisiana All-Star Ron Gerstein and Abilene will start Kerry Knox.

Astros' deficit same despite Morandini leading Phillies to 10-8 win

HOUSTON (AP) — Mickey Morandini had four hits and knocked in two runs as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Houston Astros 10-8 Wednesday night.

Houston remained 2 1/2 games behind St Louis for the NL Central Division lead. The Cardinals lost 4-2 to San Francisco earlier in the day. The Astros actually outhit the Phillies 15-14, but left 13 runners on base. Ricky Bottalico pitched the ninth for his 31st save.

With the score tied 5-5 in the fourth, the Phillies scored four runs. Kevin Stocker, who had three hits, opened the inning with a single against Chris Holt, who lost his first major league decision.

Stocker scored on Morandini's double, before walks to Gregg Jefferies and Benito Santiago loaded the bases.

Morandini scored on Jon Zuber's walk and shortstop Orlando Miller's error allowed Jefferies to score.

Kevin Sefcik followed with a sacrifice fly to make the score 9-5 Philadelphia.

Houston scored in the fifth on a bases-loaded walk to Tony Eusebio.

The Phillies went up 10-6 in the sixth on an RBI single by Sefcik. Houston cut the lead to 10-8 in the sixth on consecutive RBI doubles by Bagwell and Sean Berry.

Jeff Parrett (3-3) was the winner with one inning of scoreless relief.

Houston starter Danny Darwin gave up a two-run single to Jefferies in the first.

The Astros came back with a run in their half on an RBI single by James Mouton.

The Phillies went ahead 5-1 with a three-run third, on an RBI single by pitcher Matt Beech, his first major league hit and RBI, Stocker's RBI double and Morandini's run-scoring single.

Houston tied the score at 5 with four runs in the bottom of the third. Consecutive singles by Hunter, Mouton and Craig Biggio made it 5-2. Bagwell then doubled in Mouton and Berry followed with a two-run single to tie the game.

Owner says he'll decide on team's fate soon

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane Jr., who says he will decide this week whether to put his team up for sale, met Wednesday with Mayor Bob Lanier.

But the mayor wouldn't reveal whether any progress in stadium talks had been made during the meeting at his home.

"It's still down to the final elements," Lanier said. "No closure has been reached. It's pretty close. We had a good meeting, really no details that I'll say anything about."

McLane didn't immediately return telephone calls from The Associated Press seeking comment.

McLane, whose team is sagging in its bid to reach attendance goals he set to keep the Astros in town, on Tuesday declined to say what he wanted to discuss with Lanier.

"I see this as a key week," McLane said. "We either get this done or we don't get this done."

McLane, who has skipped several ultimatums for a local stadium deal this summer, repeatedly has said he will shop the team unless he can get a good package from Harris County.

He set an Aug. 1 deadline and a

Sept. 3 deadline, only to continue negotiations with Harris County Judge Robert Eckels.

Eckels, who has spent much of the year trying to negotiate a deal with McLane, didn't attend Wednesday's meeting, Eckels spokeswoman Sally Lehr said.

Eckels has proposed that the county erect a 42,000-seat, retractable-roof ballpark, with the Astros paying as little as 15 percent of the $250 million price tag.

The county would pay $180 million in construction costs and the private sector other than McLane at least $40 million, with Lanier promising the city would guarantee $15 million in the sale of permanent seat licenses.

McLane has said if he can't strike a deal in Houston, he will resume talks with Virginia businessman Bill Collins, who last year offered a reported $160 million for the Astros. He wants to move the team to Virginia.

McLane initially said at least 2.7 million people must attend games this season, but he revised the figure to 2.2 million, an average of 27,100 per home game. On Tuesday, the Astros drew a season-low 12,700 fans, dropping their average to 24,482.

Johnson receives another chance

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — An NCAA committee has made it easier for former Baylor basketball coach Darrel Johnson to get another collegiate job.

The NCAA said Wednesday any school that hires Johnson after April 15, 1997, will not have to appear before the Committee on Infractions to determine if his athletically related duties should be limited.

Previously, the restriction lasted until April 15, 1999.

The change came after the committee failed to find evidence of unethical conduct and fraud after an Aug. 10 hearing on the matter, the NCAA said in a statement.

Johnson had appealed two charges of academic fraud and unethical conduct, but did not appeal a violation that stated he displayed a "serious lack of control and monitoring in the administration of the institution's intercollegiate men's basketball program."

Johnson was fired by the university and later acquitted of federal fraud charges stemming from an academic scandal that occurred during his tenure.

Although he was acquitted, three of his assistants were convicted on federal charges.

Superagent Steinberg apologizes for conduct

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Sports agent Leigh Steinberg, arrested over the weekend for investigation of driving under the influence of alcohol, issued a public apology Wednesday.

Steinberg, who recently added Olympic gymnast Kerri Strug to his star-studded client list, was arrested after his car rear-ended a vehicle early Saturday morning, police Sgt. John Desmond said Tuesday.

No one was injured in the accident.

"I would like to apologize for the incident," Steinberg said.

"For my entire career, I have been advocating role modeling and community awareness.

"On Friday night, I did not act as a role model should.

"While attending a charity fund raiser for a client in Newport Beach, I consumed alcohol and proceeded to drive myself home.

"I am aware of the dangers of drinking and driving and should have never gotten behind the wheel.

"Thankfully, no one was injured. Because role models have to address their failures as well as their achievements, I felt obligated to issue this statement.

• Agent to Kerri Strug, Warren Moon, Steve Young and Troy Aikman

"In conclusion, please know that I intend to take responsibility for my actions."

Desmond said Steinberg was given a field sobriety test.

He was subsequently taken to the station and given a blood test.

He was booked on misdemeanor drunk driving charges.

Steinberg was released on $1,400 bail Saturday.

Results of the blood test probably won't be known for a few weeks, Desmond said.

The district attorney's office will decide whether to file charges against Steinberg, who could be arraigned sometime within the next four weeks.

Among Steinberg's other clients are NFL quarterbacks Steve Young, Troy Aikman and Warren Moon.

76ers acquire former Tech product Mark Davis from Timberwolves

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers signed forward-guard Mark Davis, a free agent who played last season with the Minnesota Timberwolves.

Davis, 6-7, 210 pounds, played for Texas Tech before being selected in the second round of the 1995 draft by Minnesota.

In his rookie season last year, he averaged 3.3 points, 2.2 rebounds and 10 minutes in 57 games.

After two years at Howard Junior College in Big Lake, Texas, the Thibodaux, La., native transferred to Texas Tech, where he finished his college career with an average of 17.9 points and 8.3 rebounds a game.

"Mark Davis has excellent quickness, speed and spring," 76ers general manager Brad Greenberg said. "He's a superb defensive player capable of covering guards and small forwards. Mark is a solid ball handler."

Tech runner keeps twirler tradition alive

by Christy Apple/UD

One Texas Tech women's cross country team member has the determination to make it through her senior year with a twirl.

Most students would not recognize Tandra Brillhart walking through campus, but when she is on the football field, her face and the instruments she uses are noticeable.

The senior physical therapy major is a feature twirler for the Texas Tech's Goin' Band from Raiderland. She juggles two and three batons at one time while walking around to the tune of the Goin' Band.

Marching Band Director Keith Bearden said Brillhart is an outstanding young lady and knows she works hard at both of her pursuits at Tech.

She always makes it to the games even if the money comes out of her pocket, he said.

Her outfit is that of most twirlers but follows in a unique tradition.

"My mom makes all of my outfits and has since I started twirling," Brillhart said.

The tradition of Brillhart's mother making her outfit is not the only one they have. Her mother was a feature twirler for Tech from 1969 to 1971.

"I think that it is a really neat tradition that she is following in her mom's footsteps," Bearden said.

Brillhart said she started twirling when she was 6 and has fallen in love with it ever since.

Her mother plays a large role in her life as a friend, supporter, tailor and a role model, she said.

She also considers her mother her twirling role model.

Wes Underwood/UD

Leader of the band: Junior Tandra Brillhart practices her twirling at band practice Wednesday. She also is on the Texas Tech cross country team.

She is a competitive person, but she has not been able to compete at the college level for twirling, Brillhart said.

However, when she was in high school, she competed and won runner up in nationals, also known as runner-up to Ms. Majorette of America.

The reason Brillhart cannot compete at the college level is because she also is busy running her way to the top of the Tech cross country program.

Brillhart is the captain of the team and a real leader of the team, head coach Kirk Elias said.

"Tandra is a social bug, and she mixes with other people," Elias said.

He said he expects great things out of her, both competitively and as a person.

"She is the cement on the bricks that makes all the bricks stay together," Elias said.

Brillhart said her positive attitude toward life makes doing all this fun, and she does not feel as though she cannot handle it. She is currently maintaining a 3.5 GPA.

"It takes a lot of time management," Brillhart said.

Texas Christian, Oklahoma State and Baylor offered her running scholarships, but when she visited Tech and tried out for feature twirler, she felt her heart was in Lubbock.

Brillhart said she is a goal-oriented person and knew the coaches could help her reach these goals throughout her career at Tech.

Brillhart is from Perryton, a small town where another of her heroes lives — her high school coach. She said her running coach would say if she wanted to touch the stars, all she had to do was to reach a little more.

Brillhart would like to carry on the twirling tradition further into her life and also would like to run in marathons after graduation.

"I get excited about both (running and twirling)," Brillhart said.

"I just have to stay focused so that I can do my best in each."

Bjornson counted on to fill in for ailing Novacek

IRVING (AP) — Eric Bjornson faked a block from his tight end position, slipped over the middle and took a perfect pass from quarterback Troy Aikman.

This happened in training camp two years ago and an enthusiastic Aikman labeled the rookie fourth-round draft pick from Washington as the next coming of Jay Novacek.

"I think Eric is really going to help us," Aikman said.

"He runs a good route and has good hands. He reminds me a lot of Jay."

Novacek has been Aikman's best third-down receiver. Since Novacek joined the team in 1990, he has caught 339 passes.

But the Novacek era could be close to an end. A degenerative back problem has kept him out of the lineup all season.

In fact, Dallas Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said this week, "I'm concerned whether Jay can play this year."

Trainer Jim Maurer said a magnetic resonance imaging test taken Tuesday revealed no changes from an exam taken last month.

"No change is good from a rehab perspective," Maurer said. "That means what we've been doing is not aggravating it."

Novacek's prolonged absence puts a lot more pressure on Bjornson, a 6-foot-4, 235-pound former quarterback and wide receiver ceiver who has a knack for getting open.

However, he has been dogged by hamstring problems that limited his play last year and kept him down this season.

He finally showed what he could do in a 27-0 victory over the New York Giants on Sunday when he caught four passes for 41 yards.

"It really helps our offense when Eric can play," Aikman said. "For one thing, we get to keep D.J. (Daryl Johnston) at fullback. Eric is a good blocker and he's a tremendous receiving threat."

Bjornson still limps around the practice field like an old man because of the sore hamstrings.

"It's really been frustrating," he said.

"At least I got through the Giants game no worse for wear. I know the team really needs me."

Novacek has contributed to Bjornson's development by coaching him on the sideline.

"He's really been help by telling me little tips that help me get open," Bjornson said. "It's great to have him around."

So, is Bjornson the next Novacek?

"I'm nowhere near the athlete he is," Bjornson said.

"This guy has been the real deal in this league for a long time."
