Community Co-Operation

COPYRIGHTED FARM AND RANCH-HOLLAND'S MAGAZINE

Did you ever stop to think that goods of known quality are in nearly every instant trademarked or branded and bear the maker's name and that the price is the same everywhere? Think of some of the best articles of any lines and you will agree that they invariably bear the maker's name, brand or trademark. There is a reason for this. When a manufacturer puts his name on his goods that name is sponsor to the consumer for quality. If you market an article bearing your name it is safe to say that you will at all times protect that name with quality. When trademarked, branded goods are brought to trial the burden of proof rest on the producer. And do not send away or go away from home for any article you may want until you have first ascertained whether your local merchant can supply it at the same price quoted elsewhere. Don't send away money which your community produces unless you are sure that it is to your advantage to do so. If the article wanted bears an established brand look for it in the local market. Get acquainted with the stock carried by your local merchant; he as a rule keeps abreast of the time just the same as you do.
