bargain. Put the situation in its proper perspective and you realize this is true. While we complain about the high cost of food, most of the world population's major concern is finding enough food to just stay alive.

While we complain that beef steak and hamburger and bacon and broilers "are out of sight financially" two-thirds of the world's peoples are happy if they can find a piece of bread or any scrap of meat to help them survive from one day to the next.

Because of the production efficiencies of agricultural producers, food in this country is in abundant supply and is of top quality. We are the only nation in the world that can produce enough for ourselves and have leftovers for the rest of the world.

This has not come about by accident. It is the quiet revolution that has been going on all around us without fanfare or notice by consumers. Ample food production is this nation's greatest blessing. Agricultural producers have constantly been increasing production. This is one of the major reasons food is still one of the best bargains in our economy today.

Consider these facts as they relate to farm prices before blaming the farmer for high costs of food:

Farm prices for food are up only six percent from 20 years ago.

The farmer gets only 40 cents out of each dollar spent on food; the rest goes for transportation, processing, packaging and marketing.

During the last quarter of 1972, the average American family spent only 15.8 percent of his income after taxes for food. Even with increases in early 1973, the level is about 16 percent. Compare this with 23 percent 20 years ago.

Farm production costs have more than doubled in the past 20 years; hired help is up two and half times higher than 20 years ago while farm machinery has more than doubled.

Average wage rates per hour of non-farm production workers are more than two and a half times higher than 20 years ago. In 1950, non-farm production workers averaged $1.33 per hour; in 1972 they averaged 3.65 per hour; in 1973 it was up to $3.78 per hour.

While retail food prices went up 33 percent from 1965 through 1972, per capita income was increasing 62 percent.

SINCE 1950 if prices received by farmers for cattle had risen at the same rate as first class postage, cattle would now bring $72 per hundred pounds. Had cattle prices risen at the same rate as hospital care costs, cattle would now bring $179.69 per hundred pounds.

Although farm prices have shown some increases in recent months, agricultural income is still below the rest of the eocnomy. Parity-that figure used to she
