1 tsp. cinnamon

Or, process 15 minutes in boiling water bath; cool. Makes 4 cups.

Home Cold-Proofing Wards Off Cool Winds and Cold Germs

The early fall in temperatures and predictions of a stronger flu strain than years past may have some Americans darning for the covers to await the inevitable first sniffle. According to reports from cold and flu experts, however, there are more active steps families can take to ward off colds and flu this coming season.

An ounce of prevention is worth a lot more than a pound of cure considering that Americans spend more than $2.7 billion on cold remedies alone. Taking steps to avoid colds can mean money in the bank for the more susceptible who catch an average of six to 10 colds per year.

Colds Are Avoidable

"Colds don't just happen, they are spread by cold-bearing germs," reports pediatrician Dr. Steven P. Shelov. "If you can avoid these germs, your chances for staying cold-free improve dramatically."

Shelov, professor and vice-chairman of pediatrics at Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Bronx, N.Y., is a consultant to the Dixie Child Care Challenge, an educational program to help children learn healthy habits to protect them from catching colds and flu. Created by Dixie®, the manufacturer of disposable paper cups, the program is being conducted in 1,000 child care centers during the 1993-94 cold and flu season.

Free Booklet

As part of the Dixie Child Care Challenge, children are taught to practice germ-fighting activities learned in the child care facility at home. The Dixie Child Care Challenge also is offering a free parent's guide, "Parent's Guide to Cold-Proofing at Home," which has fun and easy tips for cold-proofing at home in preparation for cold and flu season. The booklet explains that just as homeowners go through the annual exercise of winterizing the home, they should also employ practices for cold-proofing to keep the family happy and healthy.

Be sure to sneeze 'correctly' and stock up on tissues. If a sneeze surprises you, sneeze into your shoulder. Also, use tissues often to catch a sneeze, blow noses and wipe fevered brows. Just avoid re-using tissues, which can put discarded germs back into your system.

Don't share cups. The shared plastic bathroom cup is a popular gathering place for germs waiting for the next pair of unsuspecting lips. To stop germs from spreading this way, install a supply of disposable paper cups in all bathrooms. Dixie 3-ounce cups and dispensers are available in a variety of colors and patterns to fit any decor.

Keep kitchen counters clean. Searching the cabinets for a quick snack, preparing the family meal, and stacking dirty dishes can lead to an exchange of germs from one family member to another. Frequent cleaning of kitchen counters with soap and water helps, and disinfecting with a mixture of bleach and water (1/4 cup bleach to a gallon of water) is a necessity during winter months.

Keep the house well ventilated. Close, stagnant air is not only uncomfortable for the inhabitants but an excellent breeding ground for germs. Even in winter, give the house a "breather" now and then by opening windows and doors and letting in fresh air. Since germs thrive in cool, dry air, keep a humidifier running during coldest months or set pots of water on radiators.

For more information on how to cold-proof your home this winter, send a stamped, self-addressed business-sized envelope to: Dixie Child Care Challenge, Dept. B, 625 North Michigan Avenue, Suite 2400, Chicago, IL 60611.

Childhood Hunger In Texas Shadow On State's Future

Widespread childhood hunger in Texas threatens the future of the state, says an expert.

"The fact that over a quarter of our children are either hungry, or at risk of hunger, does not bode well for the state," says Kate Fitzgerald. "Kids who are hungry are not healthy; they do not learn."

It is hard to believe that there could be such a child hunger crisis in the nation's second most abundant food-producing state, says Fitzgerald, executive director of the Sustainable Food Center, a nonprofit organization based in Austin. Yet, she says, "studies consistently show that approximately 1.2 million Texas children under the age of 12--almost 25 percent-- don't get enough to eat."

Poor people are hungry in Texas for two reasons, says Fitzgerald. The state's social service programs are inadequate, and its food marketing system is biased against low-income communities.

The Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC) is a good example, says Fitzgerald. WIC provides a package of foods and nutrition information to low-income women who are pregnant or have just given birth, and to children up to the age of five who have health problems directly related to poor nutrition.

"The program," says Fitzgerald, "successfully targets a vulnerable group at a critical time in their development, while its educational component provides a longterm benefit to the participants. Yet in Texas, only 42 percent of the eligible population is served by WIC.

WIC is funded through a combination of state and federal dollars. Fitzgerald notes that Congress recently committed to full funding by 1996, but the Texas Legislature cut state funds for WIC in its most recent session.

"This is irrational even as a cost-saving strategy," says Fitzgerald, "because studies have demonstrated that each dollar invested saves three or four dollars by improving the health of women and their small children."

Similarly, says Fitzgerald, many poor families do not know they are eligible for food stamps; only 63 percent of poor Texans are now on the program. Texas should adequately fund existing nutrition programs and rethink these programs to maximize their effectiveness, says Fitzgerald. "We have tremendous natural resources in Texas. We also have an abundance of creative energy. We need to harness these now to end childhood hunger in the state once and for all."

January, 1994

Memories of 1993 and hopes and resolutions for 1994 are on the minds of readers as the new year arrives.

The new year, however, arrived on different dates over the centuries--a more logical time being the winter solstice, when the days begin to get longer.

Some counted the beginning of the new year from the autumn equinox, the time when night begins to be longer than day. The Greeks began the year with the summer solstice in June.

For a few years some Americans (New England) began the year on December 25th.

When the new calendar was adopted several hundred years ago and January added, March having been the first month until then, that change became accepted in the western world.

The mother church in Italy set the date and new-year customs followed by the Romans a thousand years earlier were transferred to Christmas. They include the exchange of gifts.

Americans make resolutions--a good custom whether or not all are kept.

'New Year's Resolution For The World' To Raise $1 Million For Hunger Relief

Times Square Ball Drop To Kick-Off Campbell's 125th Anniversary

To kick off its 125th anniversary celebration in 1994, Campbell's Soup announced it will be the official sponsor of the world-famous Times Square Ball Drop and has created the "New Year's Resolution For The World" program with CARE, the world's largest private relief and development organization.

The Campbell's Soup/CARE "Resolution For The World" program hopes to raise $1 million for CARE's hunger relief and development projects across the globe thru a New Year's Eve phone-a-thon. Campbell's Soup contributed the first $25,000 toward CARE's $1 million goal.

One million dollars will allow CARE to feed 250,000 people for a month in emergency situations in 1994. It also will enable CARE to employ education and tools to empower 10,000 families to grow food for the sustenance of their families and villages.

People worldwide can participate in the phone campaign between now and January 8. During the week preceding and following the Times Square Ball Drop festivities, Americans will notice a giant, seven-story sign bearing the "Resolution for the World" telephone number: 1-800-521-CARE at One Times Square. A special phone campaign for donations is now in place and will stay in force through January 8.

TWU Professor Recommends Relieving Holiday Stress

Holidays, although filled with joy, can be hectic, chaotic and stressful if families don't take the time to plan for them. According to Dr. Lillian Chenoweth, professor of family sciences at Texas Women's University, one way to alleviate some holiday anxieties is planning--no matter what the date.

"It's never too late to start planning," says Chenoweth.

Previous holiday pitfalls often can be avoided with pre-planning. A good way to start is by scheduling a family meeting where goals and timetables are discussed, she says. Decisions can be made based on the type of holiday events that are acceptable to everyone. For example: would it be better to plan a family vacation or to visit family members? Is Christmas caroling an option, or is there a favorite play for the family to attend? Family members may also choose to avoid commercialization and, instead, make gifts for loved ones or plan an outing where everyone can contribute to the shopping.

Fixed activities need to be considered when special events are planned--for example, piano lessons that cannot be missed or company parties that must be attended. "Many people over commit for the holidays," says Chenoweth. They have to practice saying "no." People naturally want to do everything, but when they plan too much and experience extra stress, the events tend to become more of a chore than a celebration.

Holidays tend to prompt feelings of guilt when people do not have time for all of their plans. They often expect too much for themselves, Chenoweth explains. "We aren't florists, or bakers or cake decorators, so we shouldn't try to be something we aren't the rest of the year," she says.

Critical Care Nurses Described As "Torturers"

Critical care nurses who provided treatment deemed medically useless to dying patients described themselves as "torturers" in a study completed by two researchers in Texas Christian University's Harris College of Nursing.

"They called it patient abuse," said Associate Professor Dr. Alice Gaul. "When they're asked to provide care that's medically futile, they suddenly begin to despise themselves for what they're doing," Gaul said.

The study, which surveyed members of the exclusive American Association of Critical Care Nurses, sought to determine the frequency and nature of ethical dilemmas faced by critical care nurses. Other goals of the research were to identify resources and reactions in confronting ethical problems and to assess the need for additional or improved resources.

Co-authored by Assistant Professor Dr. Susan Wilson, the report showed that repeated encounters with ethical dilemmas frequently can be an impetus to either leave critical care nursing or abandon the nursing profession altogether, Gaul said.

While some nurses reported using previous experiences to deal with ethical situations, many nurses indicated a preference for having on call a professional who has some confidence in confronting such situations, she said.

The resource of a medical ethicist may prove prohibitively expensive as health care reforms reduce available funds, Gaul noted. Another "extraordinarily effective" strategy that is less expensive is having physicians and nurses work through ethical case studies in special staff meetings without the pressure to solve a real-life situation. "The same kind of strategies, trust and reasoning is going to be necessary," Gaul said.

Moms Over 40 Need More Emotional Support

Women over the age of 40 who are having children for the first time may need more emotional support than younger mothers-to-be, according to Dr. Carolyn Spence Cagle, an associate professor in Texas Christian University's Harris College of Nursing.

Cagle said the reason for this is that many women in this age range are likely to have suffered infertility problems and to have undergone numerous tests and procedures to become pregnant.

In addition to her research on delayed parenthood, Cagle herself has personal experience with the subject, having waited until her late 30s to have a child.

Older women experience an increased risk of complications such as high blood pressure and gestational diabetes during pregnancy and pre-term delivery. While these conditions can lead to more worry and emotional trauma for parents over 40, Cagle said well-managed maternity care can prevent this from being a major problem.

A health care provider needs to understand why the parents delayed pregnancy and have some empathy for that situation, Cagle stressed. Furthermore, a parent who has a pre-term baby with complications may be at a risk of over-protecting the child.

The decision to delay having a child also can result in benefits for both parents and children, Cagle said.

These parents usually can provide financial stability than younger parents less established in careers. Cagle cautioned that money may lead to a trap for some older parents. Children may be at a risk of being over-stimulated because more money is available for numerous extracurricular activities, she said.

Steven Green, Americans for church-state separation:

"We're concerned that the court...maintain a healthy distance between government and religion, allowing both institutions to flourish."

In Fashion

After-Christmas sales are an excellent time to buy items of clothing that will brighten last winter's wardrobe. A good rule is not to mix more than three print patterns. A suede, a cotton print vest or a wool blazer can bring new life to last year's basic fall clothes.

This is also a good time to buy children's winter clothes for next year. But be sure to buy larger sizes to accommodate growth.

Directors Elected To High Ground Board

The High Ground of Texas economic development coalition has elected ten people to serve on its board of directors.

The High Ground is a cooperative effort of more than three dozen communities and businesses in the Texas Panhandle and South Plains region to recruit new industry and business to the region.

The election of new officers came at the coalitions recent annual meeting in Amarillo. The 1994 board of directors are: Myron McCartor, Perryton; Travis LaGrone, Lamesa; Michael Carr, Hereford; Rod Ellis, Lubbock; Rick Osburn, Levelland; Kirk Folkner, Amarillo; Grady Elder, Plainview; Perna Strickland, Panhandle Regional Planning Commission; Cheryl Pink, Southwestern Public Service Company; and Tim Pierce, South Plains Association of Governments. Re-elected as president of the High Ground of Texas was Rick Osburn.

Southwestern Public Service provides support staff for the coalition. SPS's Thompson Mayberry reported at the meeting that information handed out at a recent trade show has generated eight leads for the High Ground. SPS has worked up proposals for four of the leads developed at the show.

Better Hearing Can Be Your Own Little Secret.

Chicago, IL—Many Beltone hearing aids are so tiny and hard to notice, your aid could be your own little secret.

A free offer of special interest to those who hear but do not understand words has been announced by Beltone. A non-operating model of the smallest hearing aid Beltone has ever developed will be given absolutely free to anyone requesting it.

It's yours for the asking, so send for it now. It is not a real hearing aid, but it will show you how tiny hearing help can be. The actual aid weighs less than an eighth of an ounce, and it fits inconspicuously into the ear canal.

These models are free, so we suggest you write for yours now. Again, there is no cost, and certainly no obligation. Although a hearing aid may not help everyone, more and more people with hearing losses are being helped. For your free sample, send your name, address, and phone number today to: Department 12979, Beltone Electronics Corporation, 4201 West Victoria Street, Chicago, Illinois 60646.

Service Assesses Options For Managing Key Federal-State Conservation Program

The Interior Department's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is considering possible changes in the way it manages the cornerstone fish and wildlife conservation program, that funnels hundreds of millions of dollars each year to state wildlife agencies.

The Service outlined five alternatives for future administration of the Federal Aid in Fish and Wildlife Restoration Program as part of a draft Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement.

These alternatives range from decreasing the Service's role in approving and monitoring specific state projects funded by Federal Aid to increasing federal-state cooperation in planning and setting regional and national priorities for projects.

The Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act (Pittman-Robertson Act), signed in 1937, and the Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration Act (Dingell-Johnson Act), signed in 1950, collectively have raised more than $4 billion from excise taxes paid on hunting and fishing equipment.

The money is distributed to the states for projects proposed by the states and approved by the Service. These projects range from restoring wetlands and other fish and wildlife habitat to establishing hunter education programs to constructing shooting ranges and boat ramps. Federal Aid funds pay for up to 75 percent of the cost of each project while the states contribute at least 25 percent of the cost. Many states rely on the Federal Aid program for a significant portion of their conservation funding.

The five alternatives examined in the draft EIS are:

Alternative 1 -- No change to existing program direction.

Alternative 2 -- Emphasis on establishing national and regional priorities and encouraging states to consider funding projects that contribute to regional or national priorities. Priorities would be cooperatively identified by the Service and the states in consultation with the public.

Alternative 3 -- Emphasis on additional funding for biodiversity and watchable wildlife programs and projects.

Alternative 4 -- Emphasis on providing more flexibility to allow states to meet their needs, such as aquatic education expansion and adult education in wildlife programs.

Alternative 5 -- Emphasis on eliminating most Service overview of state projects, including project approval. States would be provided program rules, general guidance, and apportionment of funds. States would provide reports of accomplishments and would be periodically monitored by the Service.

The Service is seeking public comment on the draft through January 17, 1994. Written comments should be sent to U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Division of Federal Aid, 1849 C Street, NW, (ARL SQ 140) Washington, DC 20240.

Ten Free Trees From National Arbor Day Foundation

Ten free trees will be given to each person who joins The National Arbor Day Foundation during January 1994.

The free trees are part of the nonprofit Foundation's Trees for America campaign.

The ten trees are the Sugar Maple, White Flowering Dogwood, Pin Oak, White Pine, Red Maple, Birch, American Redbud, Silver Maple, Red Oak, and Colorado Blue Spruce.

"These trees were selected to provide benefits every season of the year: lovely spring flowers, cool summer shade, spectacular autumn colors, and winter berries and nesting sites for songbirds," John Rosenow, the Foundation's executive director, said.

The trees will be shipped postpaid at the right time for planting between February 1 and May 31 with enclosed planting instructions. The six to twelve inch trees are guaranteed to grow or they will be replaced free of charge.

Members also receive a subscription to the Foundation's "Arbor Day" news magazine, The Tree Book with information about tree planting and care, and a membership card.

To become a member of the Foundation and to receive the free trees, send a $10 membership contribution to TEN FREE TREES, National Arbor Day Foundation, 100 Arbor Avenue, Nebraska City, NE 68410, by January 31, 1994.

Bring It Back!

A football note is in order at the time of bowl games and at the end of the National Football League schedule.

A recent poll showed 74 percent of fans think instant replay to correct officials' mistakes on the field should be reinstated. The purpose of instant replay was to make the game fair, to avoid mistakes which sometimes decide a game.

Instant replay required a minute, rarely more, and some owners and the TV networks (jamming more and more commercials into every game) didn't want to give this time to making the game fair.

Not only should instant replay be utilized in football, it should be adopted by Major League baseball for controversial plays on the field, where mistakes are frequent (not for ball and strike calls, where mistakes are also frequent).

The object of sports events is a fair contest. Any practical, reasonable means to prevent injustices should be utilized.

AFTER THE PARTY IS OVER

EVERYONE IN THE CHURCH
 THE CHURCH IN EVERYONE

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

©Coleman Adv. Ser.

Have you ever felt like this little girl after a big, exciting day at the Fair, or a party? You know how you feel — excited, exhausted; but you feel good, too. Sometimes you just want to lie down and think about it. But like the little one in this picture you, also, are too tired to remove your party hat or your shoes.

Sometimes it is delightful just to lie down and think of something good and wonderful and happy. It is good just to be still and sort of day-dream about what has happened.

There are other times in our lives when we need to achieve a sense of quietness and think of God. The Psalmist says, "Commune with your own heart upon your bed and be still." Psalm 4:4. God says in Psalms 46:10 "Be still and know that I am God."

We invite you to attend church and sense the still, quiet holiness that is God's presence in the midst of the congregation.
