AND WE THOUGHT IT WAS NEW

Many of those slang expressions we thought were modern were first used centuries ago. For instance, in 1594, Shakespeare made use of the term "brass," meaning impudence. "A bone to pick" dates back to 1565; "to know which side one's bread is buttered on" to 1546; "bamboozle" to 1703; "between you and me and the bedpost" to 1831; "to be in the same boat" to 1550; "to button up one's lip" to 1747; "put the cart before the horse" to 1690; "let the cat out of the bag," 1760; "eat one's head off," 1703.

Dryden used "against the grain" in 1673; Scott's "apple pie order" in 1813; Heyward "beat about the bush" in 1546; Sidney "better half" in 1580; Heyward "new broom sweeps clean" in 1546; Markham "butterfingers" in 1615; Gross "chatterbox" in 1785; Jamieson "chisel" in 1808; Gosson "count one's chickens before they hatch" in 1579; Harvey "dead as a doornail" in 1593; Marryat "dry as a bone" in 1833; Grose "elbow grease" in 1785; Greene "feather one's nest" in 1590; and Beaumont "to have one's fling" in 1624—Houston Chronicle.

HOW TO WRITE MOVIES

Hollywood, Calif.—Motion pictures offer an ideal field for writers who are terrific liars, whose imagination darts about like a mouse in a cheese factory, who chafe at the limitations of ever fantastic, and the camera the novel and the stage.

"We can write anything, how-proves we're right," a scenarist explained.

"Situations that wouldn't seem plausible in a book or wouldn't be possible on the stage because of the physical boundaries are quite logical on the screen. The audience sees it and therefore believes it.

"For example we want a love scene in the bottom of a well. Simplest thing in the world. The studio builds us the well, the camera goes into it. The camera goes any place. It always backs us up."

No branch of writing is more specialized than scenarizing; its practitioners must have a thorough and working knowledge of the mechanics of picture making.

Dialogue takes up a comparatively small space in a script. Currently, the stress is on motion. The scenarist tries to develop and project his characters through action.

First director of a film. His script. Consequently the writer is the tells the star what she should do, whether she should lift her eyebrows, what she should do with her hands.

He prescribes how the scene should be photographed, orders a cyclone, a typhoon, an eclipse or a gentle sun—whatever he thinks is needed for the dramatic stuff or the situation.

The close relationship and dovetailing of directing and of writing are evidenced by the number of scenarists who also direct, and vice versa. Frank Capra, ace director, was a writer. Robert Riskin directs as well as he writes. Nunally Johnson has turned associate producer.

Eccentricity is an important qualification for motion picture writing, in the opinion of Manny Wolfe, head of the writing department at Paramount.

Wolfe "told" on some of the members of his department. Preston Sturges, who authored the successful Broadway play, "Strictly Dishonorable," has an idea that he thinks more clearly when lying on his back on the floor, feet propped on a chair. This is his favorite position at his office.

Clifford Odets writes in his underwear.

Grover Jones, whose hobby is printing, gets out a senseless magazine entitled "The Wheeze." It is the official organ of the West Side Riding and Asthma Club, a forward looking organization of which Jones is the only member.

Joseph Moncure March jots down his notes in Greek. Before Frederick Hazlitt Brennan goes to work he removes his coat, unbutton his vest and scatters papers over the floor of his handsome, well appointed office. He used to be a newspaperman. He feels at home, he says, if his office is in an advanced state of chaos.

"This just gives you a rough idea," said Wolfe.

WHAT THEY SAY—

Los Angeles.—The Rev. Paul A. McNally, director of Georgetown Observatory in Washington, D. C., explains why he and 20 other scientists are sailing for the South Seas to study an eclipse of the sun June 8.

"Unlike the laboratory researcher, the astronomer cannot cut off little slices of the sun for analysis. He must await an eclipse for that kind of study."

New York.—Prof. Paul Nytorom of Columbia University predicts the American male will return to the full face beard:

"Men's tastes change more slowly than women's, but they change nevertheless. A new bearded age is on the way. The issue for something new and different is so strong and men have held off so long they are bursting for something new."

Chicago.—Lord Dudley Marley, deputy speaker of the house of lords, comments on Americans wearing silk breeches for coronation of King George VI.

"It would make better sense if they would wear bathing suits—because they'll be standing around for hours, and the weather will probably be very hot."

Hollywood.—Sonja Henie, ice skating actress, reveals timidly on the eve of a skating exhibition:

"If you aren't nervous you simply aren't on edge. I'm at my best when I'm nervous."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Austin.—Old fashioned cotton quilts are used in building Texas concrete roads.

The highway department has used about 20,000 cotton bats, which officials say are nothing more than quilts, in "curing" newly laid paving.

Cotton proved more efficient than burlap for this purpose. The idea originated several years ago with Gibb Gilchrist, chief engineer, as a means of using more of Texas' principal crop, but experimentation showed the cotton mats prevented the cracking of concrete during curing.

Cotton, highway officials say, maintains a constant temperature, which burlap could not prevent, encourages minute cracks in the newly laid paving which become larger.

The mats can be used many times, says Henry Porter of the research division. One that has been wet 252 hours still is in good condition. Usually they are used from 75 to 100 times.

Virtually all of Texas' concrete thoroughfares built since 1934 have utilized cotton in this manner.

The department has also used cotton sheets for reinforcing asphalt topping, but they say results are no different than when other reinforcing methods are used.—Temple Telegram.

6000 HUNT DYED FAKIR

Six thousand British soldiers are searching for a tall man with dyed red hair and beard, flowing coat and baggy trousers, who for 12 years has fomented and led tribal outbursts against British authority along the north-west frontier. He is Mirga Ali Khan, the Fakir of Ipi, who by sheer force of personality has become a fakir, high religious leader. His power has made him the terror of the frontier country. An expert horseman and an uncanny shot, he always eludes the soldiers. Mirga Ali Khan preys on his followers' religious prejudices, telling them that any action by the British is a blow to Islam. Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS

COUNTRY newspapers often get poetry sent to them to print. Some of the people that send us poetry don't always write it themselves. They just copy a piece they like real well, and send that in. Of course they sign their own name to it, because they don't know how much trouble that might get them into, and besides, they think it's worth the risk, just to get into print under such good poetry.

Well, the country editors are on the lookout for that kind of stuff, and some of them are pretty well up on the big writers anyhow. One day a guy came in and introduced himself to the editor and handed him a poem with his name signed to it.

"This is mighty good verse," the editor says.

"Thanks. I kinda thought you'd like it."

"Did you write it?"

"Every word of it, all by myself."

"Shake hands again," says the editor. "I never knowed I'd have the good luck to shake hands with Willie Shakespeare himself, right here in my office."

Last Sunday was Mother's Day and I think it is one of the sweetest days of the year. The beautiful words, "All that I am, or all that I ever hope to be, I owe to my darling Mother," are very true, as most of us have been inspired by our mother's love and goodness.

Mrs. Clyde Featherston has been seriously ill with flu since Friday. We hope she will be up again soon. Evelyn Covington is staying with the Featherstons during her sickness.

Mrs. M. L. Casbeer and two children, Sybil and Billie Jean, visited Mrs. Walter Summy one day recently.

Our deepest sympathy is extended to Mrs. Willie Smith and children in the death of their husband and father. Also to his brothers and sister. The Smith family has lived in this community several years ago and Mr. Smith's death was a shock and sorrow to the entire community.

Mrs. J. H. English of Fort Worth and niece, Evelyn Covington, Aaron Stacy and Henry Simpson were guests in the M. L. Casbeer home while Thursday night. Mrs. English had been visiting her step-father, D. D. McQuide, who has been quite ill. She returned to her home on the train Thursday night.

Morgan Stacy and family and grandson, George Wayne Featherston and Mr. and Mrs. Dan Covington and Aaron attended the family reunion of the entire Covington family and relations at Pleasant Grove Sunday.

M. C. Morris and wife called in the Walter Simpson home on Sunday evening.

Elton Horton and family of Caradan visited relatives here while Sunday and attended the big reunion at Pleasant Grove. Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Casbeer and children ate dinner with M. L.'s parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Casbeer, at town.

Joe Adams and family of town are staying with Mrs. Bedford Kuykendall and son, B. L.

CONGRESSMAN SOUTH WINS

Waging practically a single-handed fight, Congressman Charles L. South has forced through Congress an amendment to double the amount of money appropriated for the study of wool marketing by the Department of Agriculture.

He contrasted this small sum with the $8,000,000 of tax money that was being appropriated for investigation of the Dutch elm disease.

SOUTHERNER IS HONORED

Times change and people with them. No clearer proof of this fact can be offered than the award last week of the Pulitzer prize for an American novel to Margaret Mitchell, the author of "Gone With the Wind."

Today a broader spirit of criticism has caused the book to be judged from its value, part from sectional issues and prejudice.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

According to the present budget estimate, the Federal deficit next year will be smaller than in any of the preceding seven years. If the deficit next year, however, is no larger than that indicated in the budget, it will not be the result of any great economizing.

It is planned to reduce gross relief expenditures from $3,265,000,000 during the current year to $2,032,000,000 during the coming year, a decrease of $1,233,000,000.

There is much talk lately of men who have "lost their skills" in the long years of idleness.

LOST SKILLS

There is much talk lately of men who have "lost their skills" in the long years of idleness. Millions have not only lost their capacity for fine workmanship but begin also to feel the handicap of age.

No Memory for Details

By IRVIN S. COBB

AT SUNDAY school, George, just past his fourth birthday, was making his first appearance. The teacher asked him who had made him and George confessed his total ignorance on this important point.

"God made you, George," said the teacher, "now remember that so you can tell me when you come back again next Sunday."

PAN-AMERICAN POLICY

The profitable results of our new policy of neighborliness toward Latin America were brought out clearly by Frances B. Sayre, assistant secretary of state, in his address before the Institute of Public Affairs in Dallas.

The abandonment of the former policy of paternalism and intervention for one of friendliness and cooperation has paid in increased trade as well as in friendlier political relations.

The Roosevelt administration has given effect to neighborly words by withdrawing marines from Haiti, renouncing rights of intervention in Cuba and Panama, reducing excessive and unjustifiable barriers to international trade.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

VIEWS OF THE NATION'S PRESS ON TOPICS OF INTEREST

UTOPIAN DREAM ENDS

Prime Minister Aberhart of Alberta, Canada, who like many another rose to power by promulgating schemes for a utopia over the radio, has reached the end of his trail.

A little more than two and a half years ago, Aberhart was overwhelmingly elected on strength of rosette promises. His platform astounded the rest of the world because of its impracticability.

Then arrived the headache. Like many another messiah, Aberhart found promises far easier to make than to fulfill.

BISHOP McDOWELL

"The supreme preacher of the Methodist denomination," Bishop William Fraser McDowell, who died recently, was one of the great religious leaders of the nation.

His influence on the nation's morals, welded through his preaching, his educational work, and leadership in the prohibition cause, was profound.

THE LEGISLATURE SELECTS

Apparently, to the Texas Legislature, the most impressive feature of the unicameral legislature plan, as exemplified in Nebraska, is the establishment of its members on an annual salary basis.

The boys easily brought themselves to ignore the two sided arrangement as practiced in Nebraska. The unicameral proposal first greatly cut down the number of legislators, and then raised the pay of the office at Austin the proposal to raise the pay without cutting down the number on the payroll.

Verily times have changed since membership in the legislature was regarded as properly the sideline of a citizen who received his income from other earnings in his regular line.

Now the business of being a legislator is considered a means of earning a livelihood, and the jobs are eagerly sought by citizens who have no dependable "regular" line of earnings.

The pressure on the payroll resulting from such a change of circumstances has tended to increase from year to year the taxpayers' outlay on account of making his laws.

Neither a modernist nor a fundamentalist, Bishop McDowell was a progressive in religious thought. Doctrinal differences that to some men appear wide gulfs were to him most conservative preachers of his church.

His vigor preserved until the end, he was chairman of the committee on unification which was formed to bring about the consolidation of the three great American branches of Methodism.

The success of this movement will fittingly crown his long and fruitful labors.—Houston Chronicle.
