RECRUITMENT WOES-The armed services are having more Arouble than in many years in getting first-term enlistees to stay on For a second hitch. That was the Defense department's report to Comgress in an urgent request for a sharp boost in re-enlistment comuses to men staying on for a second term in uniform.

In its appeal, the Pentagon told the Senate armed services commilter that "enlistees (or regulars) are the major source of career personnel" in the military. Yet, the department said, the re-enlistment wate among them has "declined sharply" since the fiscal year which Degan July 1, 1949.

That year, the rate was 59 per cent. It dropped to an average of 35 per cent in the next three fiscal years. However, in the first half the fiscal year which started July 1, 1953, the rate was only 39 guez cent.

The Pentagon said: "A major factor in the recent decline has been The limited extent in which first term enlistees who entered service Three to four years ago are electing to continue in service. Recent Navy experience indicates an extremely low re-enlistment wate (nine per cent) for its first-termer separatees as contrasted to a relatively high rate (85 per cent) for personnel with one or more prior enlistments."

The overall re-enlistment figures did not include Army draftees, since their rate of re-entering the service is only about one-fourth that of volunteers.

Thanks a million for the splendid support you gave me in the First Primary. By your liberal vote you have put me in the run-off to be held in August, and I want you to consider this as a personal appeal for your support and vote in this run-off election.

To The Voters

I know that due to the short time we have in this campaign that I will not be able to see everyone of you but I am going to see as many of you as I possibly can. I feel that having spent my entire life here in the county, and having served as commissioner of this precinct in the past, goes a long way in qualifying me for this important office and I promise that if you will go with me and elect me that I will give the job my entire and undivided attention, and make you the best commissioner that I possibly can with fairness and justice to all.
