Eastland County Rabbit Breeders Plan Big Show

Plans were made at the meeting held Friday night, in the court house for the Eastland county Rabbit show to be held in Eastland September 22, 23, and 24 by the Eastland County Rabbit Breeders association.

The dates for this exhibition were settled at this meeting conducted by the president, H. L. Owen, with Rev. M. C. Franklin, secretary. Minutes were read by George Parrack in absence of the secretary.

George Parack in absence of the secretary.

It was stated that five different experts in rabbitry had been written by the secretary with regard to serving as judge. When all replies are in a judge from among them will be selected at a later meeting.

The association voted to meet the first and third Thursday night of each month in the Eastland county court house. The next meeting was announced for the 21st of July.

An informal discussion was held concerning diseases of rabbits and remedial suggestions made. Those present: H. L. Owen, J. F. Wilhams, George Parrack, M. Lively, L. V. Simmons, J. M. Ralston, Bob Herron, Eugene Witt, C. C. Harris, H. Brouchillon, William Harris, Rev. V. W. Batdorf, Rev. M. C. Franklin and son, Clyde, J. A. Jarrett of Cisco and John Tibbels of Ranger.

Blanton Speaks Here at 10:30 Friday Morning

Mrs. James Horton of Eastland has long had the reputation of being an excellent marksman, and one who always has high scores in the local shooting matches.

It will be no surprise to her large circle of friends in Eastland to learn that she won the Texas State Skeet townament, held in Austin over the week-end, and was officially declared lady champion for 1932.

There were of shooters in all, which was considered an unusually ly good number. This is the third state skeet shot, a new sport with unusual interest.

Thomas L. Blanton, candidate for re-election from the 17th congressional district, will address the voters of Eastland and the county at the courthouse here to-day at 10:30 a. m.

Mr. Blanton announced his subject as follows: "The art of discovering padded accounts, pyramided indictments, manifold pleas of guilty, concurrent sentences, and Joe Jones, the most expensive criminal district attorney in Texas."

The road was finished. And then it was leased to the Missouri Pacific, which still usese it.

Colman Portrays Role of Crusading Doctor In Film

You have to be something of a jack-of-all-trades to be a movie actor in these days of realism in pictures. Ronald Colman, who, at various times in his picture career has been a sea captain, casting his eye aloft at the luff of the sail, a professional soldier, and a deft pickpocket, had to turn him-self into an expert physician and laboratory man in playing his starring role of the crusading young doctor in "Arrowsmith," the Samuel Goldwyn production of Sinclair Lewis's master-novel, which comes to the Connellee Theatre on Sunday.

There could be no fooling amateurish sloppiness about it because, although there are very few professional soldiers and sea captains and pickpockets, there are hundreds of thousands of doctors to resent any slips he made in playing his role of expert with the microscope and the hypoder-mic needle. Consequently, there were many things Mr. Colman had to learn to do with ready skill in a few weeks time.

No 10-mile railroad line would cross the tracks of the Santa Fe, he said, and his attorney backed him. Then he looked at the cowboys' guns. The car was moved, and the 10-mile road was built...

A short rotund, white-haired man in his late seventies sat in the office of another railroad company and said that the district where he lived must have another railroad line.

And he sat there while the big executive gave him some fatherly advice and told him that the railroad he proposed "would not real road he proposed "would not real road for a more extended visit. wouldn't buy the grease to run the engines."

August Achenbach had "arrived." The big railroads had admitted that this wheat farmer and cattle rancher knew where a road was needed, and knew how to get it there.

But to get back to the car out on the prairie, and the cowboys who saw that it was moved. It was that enisode that started August Achenbach, son of German immigrants, on his unique career.

Achenbach was a farmer; he didn't want to be a railroad man. But he and his neighbors did know they needed some way to get their wheat and cattie to Kiowa, 10 miles from the town of Hardtner. They tried to interest visiting her aunt. Mrs. J. Frank Sparks.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

Kitty Lane, a waltress, is framed and sent to a Reformatory by Mrs. Livingston and Judge Forbes to prevent the girl from marrying David Livingston. Upon her relegse, Kitty plays men and climbs the stocial ladder until she becomes a famous Broadway star. After six years David finds her. She treats him voolly; but invites him to her home, which is filled welth male admirers. David tells Kitty he could kill her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY "No, you couldn't! You did that once. When I waited for you to come back—before they sent me to the Reformatory—for the crime of trusting you."

"Well you can't blame that on
me. Judge Forbes told me why you were sent."

"I can imagine." She became sarcastic. "And you believed him.
Well, it doesn't matter. I was too
unimportant—too ignorant—well
I've learned. They taught me the ABC's in that Reformatory and since then I've taken a post graduate course by myself. And here I am, what I am. Aren't you proud of your job?"

"But. Kitty—" Dave protested.
"Now get out!" Get out!" He made a gesture to go, then turned to plead. She fairly drove him out by her voice which continued to rise
as she followed him to the door.
"Go back to your mother—And tell her while she's praying for her sins to be forgiven to include me—because I'm a lost soul—and she made me that!"

She turned back into the room, closing the door, behind here as

"The Thornes' dinner at the hotel.
You haven't forgotten."
"I'm not going." David seated himself comfortably in a chair. The maid entered the room and David said: "The evening paper, please, Nora."
"Why, I gave it to Mrs. Livingston, don't you remember, mara? I showed you where kitty Lane avas coming here to visit.
Mrs. Livingston was annoyed."To me?"
"Yes mam."

Yes mam.

"Yes mam."

The woman pretended to think,
"Oh, yes, of course. I'd forgotten all about it. You may go, Nora."
"Where is it?" David asked.
"David, you musn't take up with that woman again." David commenced reading the paper that Mrs.
Livingston had retrieved from the cushions in the chair. He made no

"Will you please let me alone? You fixed this affair once and you made a good job of it. You have nothing to worry about. Now go on and get dressed. You'll be late for dinner."

"Don't you want to go?"

"Don't you want to go?"

"No."
But David relented and accompanied his mother. The party in the hotel dining room was boring for David, at least. Then Kitty Lane entered and seated herself at a table

She turned back into the room, closing the door behind her as though to shut out David and the rest of the world.

Preston Dean, Kitty's manager, leaped out a window and committed suicide when his wife staged a raid.

Hered and seated herself at a table somewhat apart from the Thorne party. Her presence furnished a choice morsel for the gossips.

"Do you really think she went with all those men they said in the papers?" A girl inquired.

"Why, of course," Mrs. Livingston answered. "What reason would they have for exaggerating?"

THE CALL OF MOSES

Text: Ex. 3:10-15: 4:10-12. The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 10.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of The Congregationalist
The life of Moses would form tion. interesting material for a discus-sion of the relative effects of en-vironment and heredity upon char-acter and career. Here we have a man coming to years of responsible choice with two dominant and more or less conflicting influences that have been upon him

We may be sure that his mother, who by subterfuge had become his nurse, instilled in him in some way the spirit and teachings of his the spirit and teachings of his race, though, of course, she was under the strict necessity of con-cealing her relationship to him.

cealing her relationship to him.

On the other hand the interest of Pharoah's daughter, and the environment and teaching that she provided for the child, must have been a very powerful factor, so powerful that it would have swept away anyone but a strong character in whom had been instilled high teachings and loyalty to his own.

A mother's influence, and Moses' consciousness of his alliance with the oppressed Hebrews, conquered. We are told that "by faith Moses when he was come to years refused to be called the son of Pharoahs' daughter." (Hebrews 11.25.)

He chose rather the lot of the oppressed people and to be one of them. Such choices brighten the them. Such choices brighten the dark pages of history. For the man who reads history with regard for its spiritual highlights, the notion that every man seeks his own interest, that every man has his price, and that the prevailing motive in human conduct is selfish its disproved.

Material advantage suggested to Moses that he should hold with the government and scorn his people. Mr. and Mrs. Jame and children visited a selfish and personally ambitious choice by persuading himself that it was in this way that he could ultimately serve his own race best. But Moses was too clear seeing Mrs. Henderson's more ensist visiting them.

and too courageous a man to fool himself with any such arguments. He saw an oppression which filled him with the passion of protest and suffering of his own people that moved him to pity and to ac-

The impulsiveness and intensity of his protest were evident when of his protest were evident when he slew an Egyptian who was in strife with a Hebrew and when his deed was discovered and he was forced to flee for safety, it was the separation from his people and the failure of his people to recog-

It was under these circumstances that the call came to Moses to be the leader of his people, and the first task in that leader. ple, and the first task in that leadership was to appeal to Pharaoh to let the people go. A strong man might well have quailed before such a responsibility, but the reluctance of Moses to assume the task did not arise from his weakness or from any cowardice, but rather from his qualities of strength. It was a modest fear concerning his own abilities and concerning his own abilities and powers, and not any cowardly hesitancy, that made his reluctant.

It is an experience that most great and real leaders have had. The true leader is not the man seeking honor and place and emlument. The world has suffered all too much from that sort of pseudoleadership. The real leader is the man of conviction who sees the tasks of righteousness and truth to be so large that his own strength and abilities seem inadequate.
