Crippled Children Work Now Employs McGlamery's Time

B. E. McGlamery, maintaining Eastland as his headquarters, has had segregated his work from vocational rehabilitation supervisor for this district in the state department of education to the supervision of the crippled children's work. Both duties are under the state department of education.

As supervisor of vocational rehabilitation, McGlamery had 54 counties in the district, and as supervisor of crippled children's div-ision he covered 45 counties. Now his exclusive crippled children's work covers 38 counties in North Central Texas. His territory covers from Jones county on west to Denton county on the east and from the Red river on the north to the Lampasas river

Crippled children's work provides for the hospitalization and medical care of crippled children up to 21 years of age. For the program Texas each year approriates $150,000 and this sum is matched by the federal government. Only children whose families are unable to provide the care

The various products the oil industry's technicians can fashion from the sticky black crudes that flow from Texas wells appear, almost, as magic to the layman. But it's not necromancy that combines and recombines the oil molecules into such diverse products as cold cream and gasoline; it is, rather, hard work and constant experimentation.

That, at any rate, is the theory Humble technicians work on. In Texas oil fields, in laboratories and refineries, on the open road, they seek continuously to improve the Humble products you use in your car, the Humble specialties you use in your home. Results approve their methods; Texas motorists say, Humble's policy of continuous improvement keeps Humble ahead.
