Council declines to establish service policy

Services provided by Post for various activities will remain the same after the city council opted not to change the current policy leaving these decisions up to the city manager.

The council had explored the idea of creating a written policy for such matters at its January 5 regular meeting, but after discussion, decided to keep things the way they were. "I don't think we can foresee all of the things that may arise," said

Councilman Dr. Larry Mills in arguing against a formal written policy. "Having an iron clad policy would be a difficult thing." Councilman Dan Lamb agreed, saying, "I see nothing wrong with the way

The matter was brought before the council after a citizen had questioned if the city was acting within its authority with the services it provided during last falls Founder's Day celebration. According to city attorney Harvey Morton, the policy Post has to follow is already defined by the Texas State Constitution. City Manager Bob Turner said as he understands it, the city can only offer services to non-profit organizations such as the Post Chamber of Commerce and the Garza Theatre and other groups that fall into this category. Curbs and sidewalks in downtown Post will be getting a face lift as the council approved repairs for one block between Avenues Hand I. The council chose the least expensive option submitted by contractor Bo Jackson for work on the curbing. His proposal calls for patching the curb and cutting back the sidewalk in the targeted block. Price for the project is $4768.75. Jackson had also submitted a proposal calling for complete replacement of the curbing in the block. Cost for this option was slightly over $10,000. One of the things Jackson will be doing when he tackles the project will be cutting the sidewalk back so motorists parking their cars along the street won't catch their bumpers on the concrete. Bumpers catching the sidewalk not only damages the car, but reduces the life of the sidewalk.

Black Legacy program coming to Post Schools

Through the use of African drums, costumes and other artifacts, Post ards and Stone was re-appointed to the Park Board. Stone was also appointed Elementary and Middle School students will get a revealing look at the cultural past of the African-American.

The performances are interactive. Students are asked to sing and dance along with the performers.

The program is being sponsored locally by the Caprock Cultural Association. "The primary purpose of this intensive program is self esteem," said Lewis Earl of the CCA. "When they (kids) see the individuals in costume, the artifacts, and are asked to participate, it encourages them." Performers include ThoTho Ditshwane, Moremi Modikoane, Yingwana Khosa and Cherria Rattler. The four tell, inrough stories, dance and song, about the daily life of African children. Through this approach, the program tries to instill a sense of pride in the students about their heritage. JoAnn Mock, also from the CCA, said that students are surprised at the diversity of the African culture. She said that children often think of Africa as one big country.

Parents are encouraged to attend the shows with their children. "We want to encourage as many adults as we can to attend these performances," said Mock. She went on to say that adults will enjoy the performers as much, if not more, than the children. Ditshwane will return to Post the first week in February, (1-5) to participate in

Ladies victims of numbers game

Post's Lady 'Lopes were the victims of numbers in their 48-43 loss to Lubbock Christian High Friday night on the Eagles home floor. The Lady 'Lopes were outscored 18-10 at the free throw line, a margin that proved to be the difference in the game.

The Lady Eagles made good on 69 percent (18 of 26) of their chances from the charity stripe. This overshadowed the Lady 'Lopes excellent night from the line as coach Chili Black's team hit 90 percent on 10 of 11 shooting.

Cara Cash and Miki Wilks were perfect from the line, 1-1 and 2-2 and LouAnn Ammons was not far behind, going 7-8.

"I told them before the game that if we put them on the line they were going to put them in there," said Black of the Lady Eagles good night from Cash provided the Lady 'Lopes with their offense early in the game. After trailing by three, 6-9 after the opening period, Post took and 18-11 lead midway through the second quarter. During this stretch Post held the Lady Eagles scoreless for over four minutes.

Turnovers cost the Lady Antelopes. With Lubbock pressuring the inbounds pass, and pressure in the backcourt, the Lady 'Lopes lost the ball 25 times in the contest.

With Post clinging to a slim 18-17 lead in the final two minutes of the half, Jamie Hawkins was forced to the bench with her third foul.

In the second half Lubbock kept the pressure up on the inbounds pass, building a 36-26 lead.

Post was able to cut the lead to six, 42-36 late in the game after Ammons

Control insect that moves indoors

The arrival of cold weather and shorter days means that many people have moved their house plants indoors. But there's one insect that's always ready to hitch'a ride on those plants and take advantage of the warmer climate inside.

Fungus gnats are tiny flies, only about 1/8 inch long, gray to black in color. They look suspiciously like miniature mosquitoes, according to Dr. Mike Merchant, entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The immature (larval) stage of the fungus gnat resembles a very tiny maggot and feeds on the roots of plants in homes, interiorscapes, and greenhouses. They are frequently transported indoors in the soil of potted plants.

Outdoors, fungus gnats breed in moist areas high in organic matter, such as in leaf litter or in other decaying vegetation.

"Larval stages of most outdoor species merely feed in fungi and decaying organic matter, but a few types feed on the roots and crowns of living plants," he said.

These root-teeding types are the ones usually encountered indoors.

Fungus gnats may be noticed first indoors around window sills, where they are attracted by the light. As numbers build up, they can become a nuisance through their incessant hovering throughout the house. Fungus gnats need about four weeks to develop from egg to adult, and breeding can occur year-round indoors where temperatures remain about the same.

"Reducing the moisture level of plants is the key to eliminating a fungus gnat problem," he said.

Fungus gnat larvae need water to survive, and infestations are usually worst during the winter months when there is a tendency to overwater indoor plants, he said.

Cutting back on watering and allowing the potting soil to dry out between waterings is sometimes all that is needed to control a problem, although chemicals or special biological controls may be used when the flies just won't go away,
