Glenda Didway of Pampa was transferred to University Medical Center in Lubbock last Saturday morning following an accident at the intersection of Avenue Q and the Tahoka Highway. Curtis Didway was driving the couple's vehicle when it was struck broadside by a Holly's Wrecker Service tow truck driven by David Buchanan. Apparently Didway was turning right and did not see the oncoming wrecker, which was headed east on the Tahoka Hwy. Mrs. Didway suffered multiple broken ribs and was pinned in the vehicle. Mr. Didway sustained fractured ribs and minor injuries. He was treated and released at Garza Memorial Hospital. Post EMS and Post Volunteer firemen assisted at the scene.

Taba'na Yuan'e Friday morning
by Andrea Skeckowski
For the past 80 years, Post farmers and ranchers have relied on the traditional Taba'na Yuan'e ceremony to forecast their success and fortune for the upcoming year. It's that time again, and Friday, "Chief" Frank Runkles will once again perform this Indian forecast to give a hint of what's to come this year. Translated, Taba'na Yuan'e means Sunrise wind. According to tradition, an extended forecast can be given by the direction the wind is traveling on one day of the year, the day after Spring begins, March 22. If the wind is out of the east or northeast, it is going to be "a very good year". If it is from the north or northwest, it translates into an "average year". Wind coming from the west or southwest means a "poor year", and wind from the south or southeast predicts a "very bad year", Runkles said.

GMH agrees with Methodist clinic merger

Garza Memorial Hospital (GMH) board of directors members agreed at the regular monthly meeting March 14 to merge with Methodist Hospital's Post clinics. Architects are drawing up plans for the physical changes necessary at the hospital to accommodate the two clinics operated here by Methodist. There was no opposition from GMH board members to the plan. A detailed outline of three options were presented to board members at a special called meeting March 12 in Lubbock with Methodist Hospital staff. After a review of the proposals, GMH board members agreed informally that option two was best... and took up the matter formally at the March 14 meeting. Option 2: "Both the rural health clinics would be moved into the hospital. The hospital would continue its present operation with fewer inpatient beds. This option would stabilize the financial operation of the rural health clinics through consolidation of operations. The hospital would continue to incur significant losses. Governmental regulations requiring hospitals to maintain certain staffing levels, combined with the current patient census of less than one per day would continue the financial loss. A portion of the hospital losses would be offset through a lease agreement with the new rural health clinic. To continue this operation indefinitely would require an increase in tax subsidies at approximately the same rate as in past years. Net income could begin to stabilize within the first year of operations." Directors attending the March 14 meeting were David Tyler, Becky Warren, Zoe Kirkpatrick and David Nichols.

Republic of Texas services notice to legislators, IRS

by Wesley W. Burnett
In a symbolic and important step toward reclaiming Texas sovereignty, members of the Republic of Texas provisional government walked up the steps of the capitol building in Austin Monday afternoon to the cheers of approximately 700 citizens, seeking a meeting with Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Speaker of the House of Representatives Pete Laney. General Council moderator Roger Gary and Chief Ambassador Richard L. McLaren were met at the door by

Austin DPS commander Captain Smith, who accepted the documentation requiring the DPS to serve as trustee of the capitol building and grounds for the citizens of the Republic of Texas. "The citizens of the Republic of Texas are asking you to do your duty," McLaren said, and Smith replied, "we always do our duty." The DPS officer then accepted the documentation and McLaren thanked Smith and told him, "we respect you and your officers and the citizens of Texas respect all of you and trust you to protect their property."

Before the two Republic of Texas officers could enter the building to find Bullock and Laney, Bullock's staff member Jim Jordan stepped outside the east entrance doors to accept the documentation. A polite exchange of greetings was followed by McLaren emphasizing the importance of state legislative leaders working in cooperation with the Republic of Texas provisional government to ensure an orderly and smooth implementation of the transitional plan. Jordan's only comment was, "I will see that these papers are delivered to the lieutenant governor." Gary and McLaren turned back to the citizens crowded around the steps and on the grounds, who let out a series of cheers as McLaren announced the results of the encounter. "The DPS will protect our property," he said... "and now we've done what we came to do, let's all go together to 300 E. 8th Street and notify the IRS that they have 30 days to vacate the soil of Texas." A louder cheer blasted the air... and the parade to the IRS building a few blocks away proceeded.

Max Lewis is new manager at Dairy Queen

A new manager has been assigned to the Post Dairy Queen restaurant. Max Lewis, formerly of Brownwood, assumed management duties for the restaurant effective Saturday, February 24.

Lewis, 35, holds several years of restaurant management experience. He managed Brownwood's Church's Fried Chicken outlet for many years, achieving the company's top "Master Merchant" award, and received the "Manager of the Year" award. He also owned and operated his own restaurant, a sandwich shop, in downtown Brownwood.

"I'm looking forward to working with the Dairy Queen crew to provide quality food and quality service to our Post area customers," Lewis said. "I recognize the importance of value and believe Dairy Queen can best serve the dining needs of families in and around this community."

"I moved here in late February and really like the town. Everyone's been extremely friendly and really made me feel at home. I hope to meet all my new neighbors when they visit our restaurant in coming weeks."

When he's not busy at Dairy Queen, Lewis plans to be active in the community. He's a member of the State Officials Association, having served as an official for both UIL and city-league girls' and boys' sports, and want to become very involved in Post's youth sports programs.

"Coaching kids' baseball, basketball and football teams is really rewarding for me," said Lewis. "I enjoy working with the kids."

Max and his wife, Sheri, have one child, an 11-year-old son, Blake.

Along with parenting their 11-year old son, Blake, the Lewises have logged hundreds of hours of volunteer service in recent years. Max served as president of the Teen-age Baseball League for three years, board members for the Freshman Baseball League and coach for about a dozen youth sports teams. Sheri has held offices with United Way, American Red Cross, Band Boosters, Child Welfare Board, Parenting Coalition, PTA, the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations.

Aside from his restaurant management experience, Max also has experience in radio, having worked part-time as an announcer for about 20 years, and in law enforcement communications. He holds a bachelor's degree in marketing from Howard Payne University.

The Lewises lived in Brownwood for about 15 years prior to moving to Post. Max grew up in San Angelo; his wife hails from San Saba.

"This is going to be a good, positive experience for us all the way around."

Can Aspirin Fight Cancer?

There is increasing evidence that aspirin may protect against cancers of the digestive tract. The most recent findings from the American Cancer Society (ACS) found that people who took aspirin 16 times in a month for at least one year had a 40% lower death rate from cancers of the digestive tract (specifically of the esophagus, stomach, colon, and rectum) than those who did not take aspirin. This effect was strongest among those who had used aspirin for 10 years or more.

This ACS study confirms similar findings from previous studies. It is important to note, however, that these studies all control for confounding factors such as smoking, diet and alcohol use. Thus, the question of cause and effect remains. There is not yet enough data to recommend taking aspirin for digestive tract cancers alone.

In addition, doctors still need to know what the most effective dosage would be, who would benefit from this aspirin therapy, and how it would fit in with heart patients who already take aspirin to prevent heart attacks. Too much aspirin can inhibit the production of prostacyclin—a substance that helps guard against heart attack; insufficient dosages of aspirin can cause the body to produce too much thromboxane, causing changes that make heart attacks more likely. Thus, aspirin may seem like a harmless, over-the-counter drug, it can inhibit processes within the cells if not taken properly. It is not appropriate to take aspirin as a cancer prevention therapy without a physician's explicit direction and supervision. The best preventative measures for digestive-tract cancers remains a high-fiber, low-fat diet, and regular screening exams.

Tax 'n Facts

by Terri Cash, CPA

Easier Filing On Business Expenses

The Internal Revenue Service recently eased the paperwork burden to prove business expenses. After 34 years, it is no longer necessary to save receipts for all business travel and entertainment expenses over $25; the new threshold, as of September 30 of last year, is $75. (To keep up with inflation since 1962, the new standard would have had to be $126.16.)

A receipt still is required for lodging for business travel, regardless of the amount.

Company reimbursement rules are affected, too. If a company repays its workers' expenses, it must deduct taxes for the amount if the employee has not submitted the necessary receipts. While companies can continue to set their own rules, limiting how much they will pay for and the documentation they demand from workers on their expense accounts, the new rules ease the companies' job in proving that reimbursements were properly left untaxed.

The U.S. courts disaster over Taiwan

by Stephen Chapman

China is a nasty communist behemoth that seems to enjoy abusing its people, quarreling with the United States and pushing its neighbors around. Taiwan is a tiny, free country with a fledgling democratic government, a longtime American ally that threatens no one. So in the current confrontation in the Taiwan Straits, Americans automatically assume that China is the villain and Taiwan is the victim and that we should unequivocally side with the latter.

Not so fast. It is never pleasant to think we could be wrong in an international showdown. In truth, though, the blame for this crisis lies mostly with Washington and Taipei for taking unnecessary measures that they should have known would spark serious trouble.

The United States and China have a long-established understanding about Taiwan. We agree that Taiwan should not move toward declaring its formal separation from the mainland, and the Chinese agree that they will not try to recapture it by force. The people of Taiwan are allowed near-total independence on one non-negotiable condition: that they don't actually claim it.

China's rulers haven't changed their policy. But they have good reason to believe that Taiwan and the United States have changed theirs, by pushing toward independence for the island. That is the one step that Beijing has always made clear it cannot tolerate. "They're behaving like any country would behave," says Boston College political scientist Robert Ross. "Countries get nasty when their territorial integrity is threatened."

It's no secret that Taiwan's President Lee Teng-hui wants to break off his country's diplomatic isolation and gain acceptance as a normal nation. His government has lobbied for a seat in the United Nations, used monetary aid to induce some 15 countries to defy China by normalizing relations and persuaded the Clinton administration to give him a visa to visit the United States last year.

The Chinese government was furious about the visa — and with good reason. The State Department had told the Chinese it would not be granted. American officials had also conveyed their understanding that allowing the visit would be a destabilizing move that would represent a change in U.S. policy.

Then, after his subordinates had conceded all this, President Clinton reversed himself and let President Lee come. The administration tried to limit the damage by insisting he was admitted as an ordinary visitor on a private visit. But the first thing he did after getting off the plane in Syracuse, N.Y., was meet with three Republican senators — Al D'Amato of New York, Jesse Helms of North Carolina and Frank Murkowski of Alaska. The Chinese government had every reason to feel it had been seriously betrayed on a matter of fundamental importance.

It now fears that the March 23 election, the first in which Taiwan's president will be chosen by the people, will only heighten the desire for formal independence. China does not want war. When it fires missiles into the straits, it is trying to deter the United States and Taiwan from doing things that would compel it to go to war. The message from Beijing is clear and simple: We have always said we would use force to prevent Taiwan's independence, and we mean it.

The United States abandoned its mutual defense treaty with the Taipei government in 1979. But a vocal consensus among U.S. policy-makers apparently favors American intervention if the standoff ends in bloodshed. The Clinton administration has moved warships toward the island to show its resolve, while threatening "grave consequences" if mainland forces should attack. But congressional Republicans want more. Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole says the administration should state that "if necessary, we would protect" Taiwan.

None of our leaders seems to realize that they are courting disaster by tilting so far in one direction. This is certainly not the time to walk away from an old friend. But it is the time to let Taiwan know there are strict limits to our support. While we need to warn Beijing against any unprovoked attack, we also need to make it unmistakably clear to the government and people of Taiwan that we will not come to their aid if they invite war by proceeding on the path toward independence.

The message we should be sending to both, says Cornell University China scholar Tom Christiansen, is that "we want to protect the status quo." If Taiwan persists in trying to upset an arrangement that has kept the peace and protected the interests of all three countries — Taiwan's, most of all — it should know it is on its own. Otherwise, Americans may end up fighting a senseless war for a cause we have never before endorsed.

A modest proposal... caring for others

by Walter E. Williams

When the Senate finishes its Whitewater hearings, the distinguished gentlemen should begin hearings on caring and doing good. You say, "Williams, that's the damndest thing we've heard; what do you mean?" It's a matter of serious importance. After all, Congress spends trillions of dollars on do-good and caring programs. All that spending threatens national solvency. So we should find out whether mandated caring and doing good are all that important.

Like millions of other Americans, I own a car, which I think is a very good thing. The question is: How did this very good thing happen to me? Was it because Detroit workers and bosses cared about me? My guess is that they don't give a damn about me and might hate me on sight, but nonetheless, they produced a car for me.

Like millions of Americans, I have a computer. That is a wonderful thing. What's more, computer producers are making me happier and happier as they provide me with products that do more and more, faster and faster, and become cheaper and cheaper. Again, how do we explain this doing good? Do IBM and Microsoft's Bill Gates care about me? I'll bet my entire fortune that they don't care whether I live or die. Moreover, I'm going to bet that if we had congressional hearings on caring, Detroit, IBM and Microsoft workers and bosses would testify that they care much more about themselves than about Williams. That leads us to the crux of the matter: How can all of this uncaring and selfishness produce so much happiness for me?

Here's the mystery: Government schoolteachers profess love and caring for the nation's children. The result is that among industrial nations, our kid are just about the worst in reading, writing and arithmetic. Each year, schools become more decadent and violent and taxpayers are gouged more and more. Thus, the congressional hearing question is: How is it that educational caring produces disastrous outcomes while uncaring in the computer industry produces world-class miracles? I don't have the intelligence of Congress or schoolteachers. But it would appear to me that a solution would be for Congress to enact a law requiring educational uncaring. The education establishment should treat students just as computer manufacturers treat their customers.

Another hearing question might focus on trillions spent on caring by the Housing and Urban Development Department: How is it that in the face of megacaring, HUD becomes the nation's, if not the world's, largest slum landlord? En route to this achievement, HUD destroyed whole neighborhoods in the name of urban renewal (read: removal). It demolished flop houses, compounding homeless problems for bums and hobos. And when poor people try to improve their lot, through resident management, and try to toss out drug dealers and prostitutes, HUD, assisted by the ACLU, thwarts their efforts. Again, it would seem that a congressional order for the cessation of caring might be a good idea.

Without question, the parts of our lives that give us the greatest satisfaction are those where providers of goods and services make no pretense of caring for us. Those areas where we have the greatest dissatisfaction and complaints are those where providers profess saintly caring and selflessness.

Since congressmen profess the greatest caring, that might explain the economic mess they've created for our nation. So maybe congressional hearings on caring aren't a good idea after all.

The Constitution for the United States Preamble

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I

SECTION 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Perverting law causes conflict

by Frederick Bastiat (1801-1850)

excerpt from "The Law"

published by The Foundation for Economic Education Inc., Irvington-On-Hudson, New York, N.Y.

As long as it is admitted that the law may be diverted from its true purpose—that it may violate property instead of protecting it—then everyone will want to participate in making the law, either to protect himself against plunder or to use it for plunder. Political questions will always be prejudicial, dominant, and all-absorbing. There will be fighting at the door of the Legislative Palace, and the struggle within will be no less furious. To know this, it is hardly necessary to examine what transpires in the French and English legislatures; merely to understand the issue is to know the answer.

Is there any need to offer proof that this odious perversion of the law is a perpetual source of hatred and discord; that it tends to destroy society itself? If such proof is needed, look at the United States (in 1850). There is no country in the world where the law is kept more within its proper domain: the protection of every person's liberty and property. As a consequence of this, there appears to be no country in the world where the social order rests on a firmer foundation. But even in the United States, there are two issues—and only two—that have always endangered the public peace.

Why prosecutors should support "Fully Informed Jury" (FIJA) legislation

by Fully Informed Jury Association
 Co-Founder Larry Dodge

Larry Dodge holds a Ph.D. in sociology from Brown University, 1992. His doctoral dissertation was a study of community power. He co-founded "FIJA" in 1989, and has been educating Americans in their rights, powers, and responsibilities as jurors since then.

Part Four (Continued from Last Week)

As to jurors wielding a two-edged sword known as jury veto power, vindictively slashing the rights of defendants, let's lay this objection to rest ASAP. First, a prosecutor who really worries about the rights of the defendant seems to be a rare bird in this day and age, although I have indeed met a few. But when a prosecutor takes time out from his/her routine practice of scaring defendants into accepting plea bargains instead of trials by jury, in order to run over to the legislature and testify against FIJA legislation because "it might jeopardize a defendant's rights", I call it hypocritical irony.

If a defense attorney or trial lawyers' group argues to the lawmakers that FIJA legislation could be injurious to defendants' rights, as sometimes happens, they are usually assuaged when they are asked to recall that a jury simply cannot find anyone "more guilty" than charged, and that if it so much as tried to do so the judge would send it back into deliberation with an admonition that a jury has no authority to escalate the charges or damage claims against a defendant.

In the unlikely event that the Judge failed to initiate such a move, the defense team would certainly move immediately for a mistrial. And should such a motion not be made, or somehow not be granted, the right of the accused to appeal would still remain, and reversal on appeal would be virtually assured.

Nonetheless, recent versions of FIJA legislation have been modified to further relieve anxiety on the part of defense attorneys who haven't thought all this through: the language now couches the prerogatives of the jury—including instruction in the doctrine of jury nullification—in terms of the defendant's right to a full and fair hearing. That is, the latest language specifies that the jury may receive information about its veto powers only upon motion by the defense.

In short, there is no "two-edged sword", and for those defense attorneys who still disagree, the more recent FIJA bills include no requirement that the judge bring the subject up. As now, after passage of FIJA legislation, there will continue to be cases in which jurors find someone guilty, but the judge will overrule them on a "technicality". Also as now, sometimes that technicality may pertain to an infringement of the defendant's rights, which is precisely where the judge should step in. But there is no reason to expect that this will happen any more frequently than it does currently, without fully informed juries.

And what about the quality of jurors—their alleged stupidity, gullibility emotional manipulability, low educational level, or whatever. When any trial lawyer, either a prosecutor or a defender, complains about the quality of jurors, and so much as hints that jurors must not be exposed to the truth about their nullification power because they can't handle the decision making responsibility they've already got, let alone the "additional burden" that such knowledge would entail, my temper is tested.

First of all, if there is any problem with the quality of jury verdicts because of "poor quality" jurors, let's put the blame where it belongs—on the voir dire game (jury-stacking contest) that lawyers on both sides engage in at practically every jury trial, and on the excessively detailed, restrictive, and often confusing instructions given by the judge to those who survive the selection process. Yet, even after everyone who is discovered to have a brain, who has paid any attention to the case, or has any expertise in the fields which the trial may touch upon has been excused, trial juries nonetheless have a remarkable track record for delivering justice.

Republic of Texas provisional government challenges state

At the IRS building, citizens were met by three nervous-appearing federal police guards, who blocked entrance to the building doors. Republic of Texas secretary of defense Archie Lowe and McLaren stepped up to the guard in the center, and requested to deliver documents to the district director. "He is sending a representative down," the guard replied, "he'll be down in just a minute."

In a few minutes the guard motioned to Lowe, and when others tried to enter, the guard pushed the door quickly behind Lowe, blocking entrance to any of the others, including news media representatives. When asked about barring news media from the building, the guard tartly replied, "no tape recorders are allowed in federal buildings."

Very shortly after entering the building, Lowe reappeared, and announced to the assembled citizens, "We have delivered the lawful court order of eviction and notice to vacate, we have given the IRS 30 days to completely vacate all buildings and cease and desist all activities on the soil of the Republic of Texas." The crowd roared its approval as the cheers echoed off the surrounding buildings.

Not since 1861, when a delegation of citizens entered the capitol to escort reluctant Gov. Sam Houston off the grounds, has Texas witnessed such a historic event. Physical eviction did not take place, but symbolism was heavy in the air... it was on March 17, 1836 the Republic of Texas constitution was signed... and on March 18, 1996, Republic of Texas citizens made a public demonstration signaling their dedication for independence, no less bright than that which shined a beacon of light around the world 160 years ago.

What's Next?

General council members are planning to appoint several citizens to assist in implementation of the transitional plan. "It appears that state leaders have little or no interest in a cooperative effort with us," McLaren commented, "and we have a duty to complete our limited task of reclaiming the ownership of property and other rights belonging to our citizens."

"Our immediate concerns are to ensure that the rights of our citizens are not violated by state or U.S. law enforcement officers. To that end, we are attempting to notify all elected officials of their liability under the common law, and if necessary, we will attach liens on the bonds of any official whose actions are in violation of the rights of our citizens. We have been diligent in observing the letter of the law, adhering carefully to the Republic of Texas constitution and to the law of nations, and we expect the same from state and U.S. officials," McLaren added.

The two year transitional plan is geared toward a constitutional convention, and a decision by the people through a referendum on that constitution. "We have the right to make this decision," McLaren emphasized, "and we have the right to independence... it is guaranteed by the Texas state constitution, the U.S. constitution and the Republic of Texas constitution."

Republic of Texas documents at library

A copy of documentation related to the Republic of Texas Provisional Government's legal challenges and other explanatory material is now available for public inspection at the Post Public Library. Included in the set of documents is the transitional plan, which is outlines a two-year transition from state to republic government. For more information call 210-349-8994.

On God's free Gift

by Bob Green, First United Methodist Church
I sit before my computer agonizing over a responsibility and opportunity. I have accepted joyfully but have put off to the last minute. The Post Dispatch has given the pastors of this community the "space" and "freedom" to write anything we choose for print and today is my turn.
As always I wonder what I have to say that would be of interest to this incredible community. I say a prayer for God to stimulate my creative juices and then turn the computer on. As I wait for the computer to come alive and lay its seeming unlimited potential before me I become aware of all that is possible with this phenomenal machine. Even though it is four years old and obsolete, it is capable of performing tasks far beyond my ability to ever conceive, or implement, and play beautiful music in the process.
As I ponder the task before me I am amazed at the potential of this computer that will never be realized because of my inadequacies. I also ponder my relationship with God, for He has placed within me potential, expectation and possibilities I will never meet.
My thoughts drift to a weekly prayer breakfast I attend with men who have become very special and influential friends of mine. Today we discussed the various facets of God's will for His people and how we meet, thwart or completely miss that will. We also discussed the obvious resulting question, "What is God's action, or reaction, in each case?" And, "How does God's grace figure in all this anyway?"
At the risk of debasing the dignity of God's grace I believe there is a comparison between this ever loving, patience-testing, frustration-building and very possible demon-possessed computer which has come very near costing me my salvation on many occasions, that very precious and necessary gift from God to us.
Number one, I can't take any credit for anything this blessed machine can do, has done or is capable of doing. Someone far smarter and more capable than I dreamed it up, put it together, loaded it with memory, programs, and whatever, and made it available to me to do with whatever I chose.
I use it to the ability I can, making use of all that I am; what I have learned, am learning, all the patience, tenacity, determination, all the strength, moral love, and indwelling faith I can muster.
Sometimes I do very well with it, sometimes I am amazed with what comes from it despite of what I put in, sometimes I am so disgusted, angry, and exhausted that I wonder if it is not a tool of the devil designed to cost me my religion.
But always...always, I am eager to turn it on and find out what marvelous and phenomenal things can happen that would never happen were it not there.
I believe that's the way of God's grace. I can't take any credit for it at all. It was created by someone far smarter and more capable than I could ever be. It was made available to me to use, enjoy, learn with, to grow with, to share with others, help and encourage others, but never to flaunt or lord over anyone.

These pieces, called "citizens awards", are then placed in various public buildings throughout Post for the citizens to view and enjoy.

These pieces have been temporarily removed from the Public buildings and will be on exhibit at the Algerita Art Center throughout the week.

Bullock, Laney evade meeting with Provisional Government

by Wes Burnett
In an attempt to balance the Republic of Texas story, I called Lt Gov Bob Bullock and Speaker of the House Pete Laney Tuesday morning, requesting statements on the issue.

I asked staff members of both legislators, basically the same question I had posed last week to Governor Bush, Senator Montford and Representative Counts: "Do you have any reaction to the claims by the Republic of Texas provisional government?"

Bullock's response, through his spokesman Tony Proffitt: "I am sending you a copy of the powers and duties of the Texas lieutenant governor. There is no authority to consider the claims of the Republic of Texas."

Laney's representative Janet Warren said that the speaker had referred all documents to legal counsel for review.
That's it.

So far, no state official has stepped up to publicly display any evidence to contradict the claims of the Republic of Texas provisional government.
What are citizens to think about this silence from their elected officials? If there is no contrary evidence... must we not assume that the Republic of Texas is in fact, the legitimate government for Texas?

Taba'na Yuan'e

Chief Runkles has conducted the Taba'na Yuan'e ceremony since 1973, and his predictions have been 91% accurate. He was asked to become involved because of his long-time interest in Indian lore and his commitment to sharing his knowledge about Indians with the area boy scouts.

Runkles has researched the ceremony and has developed it into a traditional performance that everyone should see.

The ceremony begins at South Lake in Post at sunrise between 6-6:30 a.m., Runkles said. People are encouraged to get there on time so they don't interrupt the ceremony.

Visitors will gather around a circular ceremonial ring in which a fire of only natural materials burn. Linda Puckett and Zoe Kirkpatrick will be conducting the opening ceremony, an Indian tradition of offering Sage to the wind, Runkles said. Then, Chief Runkles will sing a tribal prayer and present a pipe of peace to the four directions of the wind and to the Mother Earth and Wakantanka, the Spiral above. At the end of the ceremony, Chief Runkles will point a ceremonial feather in the direction of the wind.

The Taba'na Yuan'e ceremony brings people from all over the South Plains to experience a traditional Indian ritual. Chief Runkles, along with the Post Chamber of Commerce, encourages everyone to be there.

Happiness is good health and a bad memory.

The first Regional Mayors' Beans and Cornbread Luncheon will be held in Lubbock, Saturday, March 23rd from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. The Mayors of Lubbock, Idalou, Levelland, Littlefield, Post, Ransom Canyon, Shallowater, Slaton and Wolforth will participate.

There will be live music, door prizes and lots of interesting people. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children 12 and under. We urge everyone to get out and support this worthwhile charity. It is sponsored by Hospice of Lubbock but Hospice serves many area towns.

Lynette Thuett is a Hospice volunteer from Post and she tells me that this is one of their primary fund-raisers. Hospice is a non-profit organization serving the terminally ill and their families. Let's show our support and have a good group representing Post.

Taba'na Yuan'e is Friday morning. I know that everyone is ready for a good year and really ready for some much needed rain. We are looking forward to a good crowd for the sunrise ceremony and breakfast following at Hotel Garza.

I just wish the weather would make it's mind up and decide whether it will be warm or cold for the next few weeks. Allergies are rampant along with colds and flu. Most everyone I know has had one or the other or both. I even broke down and bought some cough drops the other day because I couldn't hold a conversation for coughing.

The Rotary Club is having their annual broom sale next Tuesday so if you need any brooms, mops, patio brooms, dishcloths, etc., just call any Rotary member and they will be glad to take your order. Rotary uses their money right here in our community in the form of scholarships, camp for diabetics, needy children and many other worthwhile charities in Post. We will be at the intersection of Main and Broadway all day next Tuesday so come by there and support a good cause.

We will be having the official "ribbon cutting" for Sonic on Friday at 10:30 a.m. We are glad to have this new industry in Post. They will be giving money away on KPOS that may be used with any merchant who is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. We appreciate their support for the Chamber, too.

This is a really good small industry that will employ around 20-25 people year round.

I know everyone will have a busy week with all the activities. Make it a good week, too because you.....Take Pride and Take Part in Post!!!

Garza Healthtalk

Fibrocystic condition of the breast is the most common cause of breast problems. Unlike breast cancer, which can affect both men and women, fibrocystic condition is thought to be caused by ovarian hormonal changes, and therefore a condition that affects women.

Lumps, breast pain, and nipple discharge are symptoms of fibrocystic condition, and usually always occurs in both breasts. Any woman who discovers a lump or mass in her breast should promptly seek the medical advice of a physician.

Breast self-examination may be complicated by fibrocystic masses, therefore women should become familiar with their breasts by touch to recognize changes that may occur. It is extremely important to perform a monthly breast self-examination.

Fibrocystic condition occurs mainly in women between 30 years of age and menopause. Some of the interventions that may be initiated with this condition include cessation of caffeine intake, initiating vitamin therapy, and in some cases initiating hormonal therapy.

A lump or mass in the breast should always be investigated by a physician, but women should be aware that causes other than cancer can be a factor. Fear prevents many women from seeking medical attention early.
