Pam Chapman, Shelly Shifflett named as top graduates at Post High

Pam Chapman will deliver the valedictory speech at Friday's 8 p.m. commencement exercises for Post High School's 1999 graduating class. Shelly Shifflett will give the salutatorian's address at the ceremonies, which are scheduled to take place at Antelope Stadium. Chapman, daughter of Carla and Kenny Reiter, and Shifflett, daughter of Gary and Vickie Shifflett, have been named the top graduates of this year's class, according to information released by the school this week. Tapped as historian was Clell Knight, son of Brent and Jenny

Smith and Jess Knight. Honor students for the Class of '99 are Daniel Fluitt, Rodrigo Ceja, Kasey Hardin, Rachel Reiter, Rachele Jones, Becca Stelzer, Ronnie Eaton, Isaac Perez, Olga Torres, Kristen Webb, Clay Ashley, Iveth Cerda, J.C. Stelzer, Veronica Pena and Jennifer Josey. School officials said that in the event of inclement weather on Friday, the ceremony will be conducted indoors and admission will be limited. In the event of bad weather, each graduating student will, during their Friday morning rehearsal, be issued 10 "tickets" to be used for admission to the ceremony.

Parents shocked about government school indoctrination program

by Wes Burnett
Although I had been exposed to some of the information that Rev. Curt Tomlin presented at the "Battle for the Minds and Bodies of our Children" seminar last Saturday in Post, I must admit that I was shocked at the depth of depravity that is being placed before children in government controlled schools.

I was amazed to see the pornographic contents of several "children's" books that lined a table at the seminar. It was a shock to learn that those books actually are being placed in Texas government school libraries, and on required outside reading lists. Promoted by such organizations as "Planned Parenthood," the books are designed to indoctrinate children to accept as normal such behaviors as homosexuality and other topics not suitable to be detailed in a family newspaper.

Tomlin carefully laid a foundation of knowledge, demonstrating that the current curriculum and indoctrination in government schools is the result of a long-term plan through treaties with the United Nations. The communist ideas of taking the child at the earliest ages and creating a "world citizen" were clearly explained by Tomlin through a web of U.N. "mandates" and conventions.

Government schools get these mandates by way of federal and state laws... such as the Goals 2000 legislation approved by Congress in 1994. "If you see such things as site-based management teams," Tomlin said, "then you know that Goals 2000 is being implemented in your government schools." Tomlin also pointed out that not all schools are on the same level of implementing Goals 2000 and outcome based education (or OBE as it is referred to), which is designed to destroy the individuality of the student and make that student an insignificant part of the group or village.

Tomlin also demonstrated how the U.N. "Convention on the Rights of the Child" can be expected to be totally implemented in Texas within the next two to three years. That convention is designed to separate the child from its parents and actually make that child a ward of the state.

He pointed out that government agencies use "good sounding" words for the titles of their programs, but underneath, in the details, the agenda for socialist conformity are clear for all to see. "What's a real shame," Tomlin added, "is that we all have good friends, and Christians at that, who are teachers in that system, and we love them, but it is such a shame that they are being used as tools to destroy Christianity in America."

To emphasize his point, he presented documented examples of revisionist history, which use the 1994 National Standards of American History, led primarily by Gary Nash, a revisionist historian noted for several "modernized" history books. "Imagine, today's history books don't even bother to mention Paul Revere, Thomas Edison, Albert Einstein, Alexander Graham Bell ... and barely mention George Washington."

The stated goal of these educators is to use government schools to foster a new idea about citizenship, where national boundaries are irrelevant, and local cultures are debased, religious traditions are destroyed and "mother earth" worship is encouraged. "It's okay to worship the myths and gods of paganism," Tomlin cried out, "but our children are not allowed to wear Christian symbols or pray in school." Tomlin reminded participants that when government closed the door to God, the spiritual vacuum was filled by the devil.

Tomlin showed a series of charts demonstrating the decline in learning at government schools since 1964, when prayer was outlawed in those schools by a U.S. Supreme Court decision.

"The bottom line," Tomlin emphasized, "is that there is no hope of reforming the current system to do what needs to be done for our children. The only hope is for parents to rescue their children from those government schools, and to nurture them in the ways of God in their churches." Tomlin insisted that churches must be the center of community life, "if we are to have any hope of preserving our liberty and freedom for the next generation."

Government schools are indoctrinating our children so that they will not question authority, so that they will accept change without question, "and that my friends, leads us to slavery." He pointed out that the federal government rules, accepted by the states and local school systems, teaches feelings and attitudes, not facts. "They are producing graduates who can not read or write above the third or fourth grade level, and getting the right answer is not emphasized, it is the process that is taught."

Tomlin also reminded those of us in attendance that government schools do not teach our children about our constitution and the inalienable rights we all possess. "Teaching about our rights is contrary to the communist goals," he said (as recorded on pages A34 and A35 in the U.S. Congressional Record of January 10, 1963), "one

Works by White, Dissinger to be featured in exhibit

by JoAnn Mock

An exciting exhibit of the art works of contemporary artist Randy White and metal artist Daryl Dissinger will open with an artist reception at the Algerita Arts Center on June 4 from 7-10 p.m. The exhibit will be open to the public until July 11. The latest series of work for both artists is about tornadoes. "Tornadoes are majestic and powerful and as we witnessed the destruction in Oklahoma with fear and distress, we are trying to translate both the respect for nature's power and deal with the fear at the same time," White said.

Both artists have a common thread — as an "outsider," Dissinger makes art simply because he likes to and for his own "satisfaction," while White creates art because of social ramifications and social structure.

The name for the exhibit, "Dreams, Dramas and Fears," came about as each talked about the creation of their art. Both are pulled into their dreams and resolve their artwork through their dreams.

"The dramas that are created in dreams also deal with the fears we all have," White said. "The subject of this show is not one typical subject matter for this part of the country, it's the artist's own explorations of what makes us tick as a people."

The exhibit offers a different perspective from the "main stream" art in this part of the country.

White grew up in Tahoka, received his formal training at Texas Tech but rejected formality in order to capture the essence of dreams, dramas and fears. As a young man, he wanted to view Texas in the rearview mirror but later found it was Texas that actually gave him his inspiration. After exploring art in Europe, New York, Los Angeles and South America, he was drawn back to the Lone Star state to renew that inspiration so important for art exploration. Because he has always felt "on the edge," he said, he chose Post because it is on the "edge" of the Hill Country and provides White with the privacy to paint as well as a mixture of traditional and contemporary values to deal with his contemporary western art.

"Art is an emotion of a particular time," he said. "I've never felt of myself of doing art as pretty or kind."

Dissinger makes no claims as an artist; however, White considers him a genius.

"Daryl thinks of things that most artists with art degrees wish they could think — the expression of purity that goes far beyond the educational system," White said. "Daryl always put a bit of ingenuity into everything he does on a functional level, such as storm cellars, etc., that would otherwise be a tedious job."

"Our collaboration is so rare that in all the places I've been, never have I met someone who has such a direct mind link as Daryl and myself. He dreams it. He makes it and calls me for critiques. I am always a bit envious but delighted with his work, and I hope that eventually everyone in this area will know how much of a treasure he is to the art community."

White will be one of 300 artists chosen from 16 countries to exhibit in the Biennale Internazionale Dell'Arte Contemporanea exhibit in Florence, Italy. The exhibit, originally set for May, was postponed but is scheduled to resume once the Kosovo conflict is resolved.

White's artwork is in the collections of Robert Redford, Jane Alexander, Whoopie Goldberg and other celebrities. During his 24-year career, he has promoted social concerns. Goldberg sponsored an exhibition of his work "Artifacts of the Streets" for Comic Relief in Los Angeles in an effort to help raise funds for the homeless. Festival of Arts Collaboration in Taos, N.M., featured White's work for the New Mexico Special Olympics. He also worked with the Native American Congress of Equator, South America, and the Native American Rights Fund in Boulder, Colo. He was included in the National Traveling Exhibit of Anne Frank, Holocaust Tour.

The "Dreams, Dramas and Fears" exhibit is sponsored by the Caprock Cultural Association. For more information, contact JoAnn Mock at 495-4148.

Folks, I tell you, I am loving this rain!! Driving out the Tahoka Highway each evening, the caprock is so pretty and green.

Post has some of the prettiest scenery anyway, but you add a good rain to the picture and you've got gorgeous!!

Look out world!!

The world better prepare itself, we've got another Yarbrow!

Daniel and Trevah have a brand new son, Jerry Kale, and we are so proud for his dad and mom.

Now I know that there is a certain granddad that is probably so proud he is about to split at the seams, so all you guys at the gin better prepare yourselves.

Anyway, congratulations to the Yarbrow family (Quinton and Clinton included) from this proud Aunt and everyone else too!

Brave Aunt

My really nice sister attended the annual "track meet" that Borden County School holds each year for grades K-6 (I hope that's correct) to watch her two grandchildren, Raylea Underwood and Caden Nowlain, participate in last week.

She so graciously invited my two grandchildren, Kaylyn Dean and Zachary Bush to go along.

Poor Jane, I think they probably talked her leg off and I'm sure Kaylyn asked about 100 questions per hour!

The kids really enjoyed themselves and decided they will go with Aunt Jane next time. Aunt Jane just doesn't know this yet!!

You know you live in a small town when.....

You dial a wrong number and talk for 15 minutes!!

Gone Again

Mary Welborn has been off running around again. Talk about a gad-about.

She left April 12, going first to visit her brother, David Clingon, in Laurel, Mississippi; then on to Ridgeland, Mississippi to visit with her sister, Alice Parish.

There were numerous nieces and nephews that Mary got to spend time with and lots of good cooking I'm sure.

She said the highlight of her trip was a trip to the shop, a wrong turn and wandering around lost for some time. But boy what scenery! The trip lasted a few days as she did not return home until May 16.

We're glad she is back home but who knows for how long?

Back from Alabam

I had a nice visit with Sara Ault this week. She and husband Jack, have just returned from a road trip to Alabama and Arkansas.

Before their trip, Sara's son and his wife, Leon and Inge Sprayberry spent a week with she and Jack and had a wonderful visit. Then they all left for Alabama, Sara and Jack following Leon and Inge.

After spending a few days there, Leon and Inge went on to Florida and Sara and Jack left for Arkansas where they visited Jack's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Larry White.

Jack met his cousin through the internet, and had never met her in person before. They had a really nice visit and enjoyed themselves so much.

Sara said Leon and Inge will go to Austin for a few days visit with Richard Welch then return to Post for a short visit before heading back to Washington.

Till Next Week

Guess that is all for this week. Everyone call in your news!! Have a wonderful holiday weekend and may God bless each of you.

Allergies, Allegries... it's springtime!

The wildflowers are blooming and the garden plants are beginning to grow. The baseball equipment has come out of the closet and the bicycle tires are pumped up. The barbecue grill and picnic table have been uncovered, too. It's the time of year when the weather is changing and people are coming outdoors. With all the wondrous events of springtime, however, allergies may also be in full bloom.

What are allergies? The job of your immune system cells is to fight off harmful viruses and bacteria, which cause dangerous diseases. In some people's bodies, however, the immune system cells are super sensitive, and react to harmless substances such as dust mites, mold spores, plant pollen, animal dander, insect bites, foods, and medications, to name a few. These substances are called allergens. This overreaction of the immune system is what causes allergy symptoms.

Who gets allergies? According to the American Academy of Allergy, Asthma & Immunology, one out of every five Americans suffers from an allergic reaction. Allergies can affect anyone, regardless of age, gender, race, or socioeconomic status. Allergies are more common in children, but can occur for the first time at any age. Genetic factors are not yet completely understood, but there is a hereditary link to the tendency for allergies. Still, some who don't have a family history will develop allergies, and others with a family history will not.

Types of allergies: Allergens may be inhaled, swallowed, or come into contact with the skin. Some common types of allergens include: Airborne Allergies: pollen, mold, dust mites, animal dander. Other Common Allergies: food, drugs, latex, insect bites. The signs and symptoms of airborne allergies may include the following: sneezing, runny or clogged nose, coughing & postnasal drip, itchy eyes, nose & throat, dark circles under the eyes, watery eyes, conjunctivitis (an inflammation of the membrane that lines the eyelids, causing red-rimmed, swollen eyes and crusting of the eyelids), in children, persistent upward rubbing of the nose that causes a crease mark on the nose.

In a person who is not allergic, the mucus in the nasal passages would move foreign matter to the throat where it would be swallowed or coughed out. In a person who is allergic, however, a chain of reactions is started as soon as the allergen lands on the mucous membranes lining the inside of the nose. The mast cells in these nasal tissues release histamines and other chemicals, which cause cells in the small blood vessels of the nose to contract, allowing fluids to escape, nasal passages to swell, sneezing, itching, irritation, and excess mucus production.

If you have a "cold" that lingers on past a week or two, your symptoms may be caused by allergies, particularly, seasonal allergies from airborne substances. An allergist can help determine if this is the case. The physician will examine mucous membranes, which are often swollen and pale or bluish in a person with an allergic condition. The physician may then do a skin or blood test.

Some symptoms of allergies can be controlled by medications. Effective medications that can be prescribed by a doctor include antihistamines and topical nasal steroids. Some effective antihistamines and decongestants are also available over-the-counter. Consult your physician about what may work best for you over-the-counter or in prescription drugs. In ALL cases: Be sure to follow package and doctor instructions. Limit the use of nasal sprays to a few days, unless otherwise directed by your doctor.

Extension programs serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, sex, color, religion, disability or national origin.

Let's see...

I think it started when Madalyn Murray O'Hair complained that she didn't want any prayer in our schools, and we said O.K. Then someone said, "You had better not read the Bible in school - the Bible that says thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, and love your neighbor as yourself." And we said, O.K.

Remember Dr. Benjamin Spock, who said we shouldn't spank our children when they misbehave, because their little personalities would be warped and we might damage their self-esteem? And we said, O.K. Then someone said that teachers and principals better not discipline our children when they misbehave. And our administrators said, "Whoa, no one in this school better touch a student when they misbehave because we don't want any bad publicity, and we surely don't want to be sued." And we said, O.K. Then someone said, "Let's let our daughters have abortions if they want, and we won't even have to tell their parents." And we said, O.K. Then someone else said, "Let's give our sons and daughters all the condoms they want, so they can have all the 'fun' they desire, and we won't have to tell their parents."

And we said, O.K. And then some of our top officials said that it doesn't matter what we do in private as long as we do our jobs. And we said, "As long as I have a job and the economy is good, it doesn't matter to me what anyone does in private, it's nobody's business." In short, it's O.K.

So now we're asking ourselves why some of our children have no conscience, why they don't know right from wrong, and why it doesn't bother them to kill.

Probably, if we think about it long and hard enough, we can figure it out. I think it has a great deal to do with "we reap what we sow." Whoa! What a concept! Author Unknown.

FOOD ALLERGIES
25 percent of Americans think they have food allergies, but only 2 percent actually do. This still means that over 5 million people in the U.S. suffer the unpleasantness of an allergic reaction associated with food and as many as 125 die each year from anaphylactic shock, which is a result of severe allergic reaction.
Peanuts are the leading cause of severe food allergy, but eight other foods cause 90 percent of all food reactions. Tree nuts (almonds, cashews, pecans, and walnuts), fish, shellfish, eggs, milk, soy, and wheat are the main offenders.
In food allergies the immune system causes the body to think a harmless food is harmful. The body reacts to the "invader" by releasing histamine, which triggers the classical symptoms of swelling of the mouth and throat, hives, shortness of breath, vomiting and stomach cramps. These symptoms can start anywhere from 2 minutes to 2 hours after ingestion.
Children suffer from food allergies more than adults, however many children outgrow their allergies. The problem is that some self diagnosed food allergies are actually food "intolerance", which is a condition with many of the same symptoms, but a different cause. An example is lactose intolerance, which involves milk products. These can be treated with medication. These "intolerance's" can lead to vitamin or mineral deficits because the parent thinks they are an "allergy".
If you suffer any of the symptoms of food allergy, avoid the food and check with your medical provider. Keep a diet diary of foods you eat, this may help you zero in on what you are allergic to. An example is if you have a reaction after eating pizza its not because you are allergic to pizza, but one of the ingredients. There are also skin and blood tests your provider can order to determine what you are allergic to.
Over the counter Benadryl is a good treatment for mild food allergy reactions, but if you suffer from any respiratory disease, such as asthma or ever have a severe reaction with hives, shortness of breath or wheezing, you should seek medical care immediately.

Clinton and 'martial law' ... the imperial presidency

by Sarah Foster
 1999 WorldNetDaily.com
 President Clinton doesn't need to sign an executive order to start a full-scale gun grab. He doesn't need to declare martial law if he wants to use the armed forces to deal with public unrest. And if he figures a state government isn't doing all it should to enforce some federal law that nobody likes, he can use federal troops to make certain that the law is complied with — even if the governor and everyone living in the state are adamantly opposed to it. He can do all these things on his own, without seeking advice or approval from Congress.

Not even the 1878 Posse Comitatus Act, which Congress intended as a shield to protect citizens from the military, places any significant limitations on presidential power. That's what Virginia attorneys William Olson and Alan Woll discovered when they looked into the matter for Gun Owners of America, a Washington based lobbying organization dedicated to defending the Second Amendment.

Last December Olson and Woll published an analysis on "Executive Orders and National Emergencies: Presidential Power Grab Nearly Unchecked," which was featured in World NetDaily. This earlier work prompted Larry Pratt, president and executive director of GOA, to commission the attorneys to examine a related issue.

"I asked them to look at all the executive orders and see if there was a nexus with guns; some kind of hook that would allow the government to get a hook on our trigger guards, so our guns can be pulled from our hands through some power they had delegated to themselves by executive order," Pratt recalled in a telephone interview.

Though unable to find a direct reference that would permit gun confiscation, "What they discovered was worse," said Pratt. "The president doesn't have to sign an executive order. He already has the power to go after our guns."

The Olson-Woll report entitled "Presidential Powers to Use the U.S. Armed Forces to Control Potential Civilian Disturbances," developed naturally from their earlier research, but it is written as though it were a memo to the president, from a "Counsel's Office," in response to a White House request for a legal opinion about how far the president can go in using the military for law enforcement purposes in the event of a Y2K or other crisis: Would a declaration of martial law be necessary to call out the military? What about the Posse Comitatus Act?

"This memorandum is fictional but accurately depicts the broad powers assumed and exercised by presidents to utilize U.S. military forces to regulate civilian activity," the authors state in a disclaimer.

"We wrote it that way to draw peoples' attention to the issues," Olson explained by telephone. "We hoped that using this format to present the information would make it more real. A lot of what we talk about sounds like history, but it's quite current, and one could imagine the president asking for advice on this very issue."

The answers to the hypothetical questions came as a "complete surprise" to Larry Pratt and to the authors themselves. "We had no idea that his powers were so broad," said Olson. "The fact that there are these vast standby statutory powers is shocking. I'm afraid Congress keeps passing the laws that grant this power and never stands back and asks, 'What have we done?' It's time that they start looking and asking."

The statutes referred to are found in Title 10 of the U.S. Code, which deals with the Armed Forces. Through them the president is given authority to intervene with military force in a state's domestic disputes, upon request from the state legislature or governor — or without it. Some examples cited by Olson and Woll:

Title 10, U.S. Code, Section 331: Whenever there is an insurrection in any State against its government, the President may, upon the request of its legislature or its governor ... use such of the armed forces, as he considers necessary to suppress the insurrection.

Title 10, U.S. Code, Section 332: Whenever the President considers that unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages, or rebellion against the authority of the United States, make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any State or Territory ... he may call into Federal service such of the militia of any State, and use such of the armed forces, as he considers necessary to enforce those laws or to suppress the rebellion.

Title 10, U.S. Code, Section 333: The President, by using the militia or the armed forces, or both, or by other means, shall take such measures as he considers necessary to suppress, in a State, any insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combination or conspiracy, if it hinders the execution of the laws of that State, and of the United States within the State ... or opposes or obstructs the execution of the laws of the United States or impedes the course of justice under those laws ... TRUE BELIEVERS

And thereafter, blaming the past

by Walter E. Williams

People love the past. It provides convenient excuses for all manner of individual or group shortcomings. Academic "experts," politicians and race hustlers use history as a cover-up.

They point to the ugly facts of slavery, Jim Crow and discrimination as explanations for the high rates of black illegitimacy, crime and family breakdown. The connection between slavery and discrimination, and what we see today, is hardly ever challenged.

But challenge it we must. Only 40 percent of black children live in two-parent households. The illegitimacy rate among blacks stands close to 70 percent. The "legacy of slavery" explanation for today's weak black family structure loses all manner of credibility when one examines evidence from the past.

Even during slavery, most black children lived in biological two-parent families. One study of 19th-century slave families (Herbert Gutman, "The Black Family in Slavery and Freedom: 1750-1925") found that in up to three-fourths of the families, all the children had the same mother and father. In New York City in 1925, 85 percent of kin-related black households were double-headed.

In fact, "Five in six children under the age of six lived with both parents." Both during slavery and as late as 1920, a black teen-age girl raising a child without a man was rare among blacks. Gutman, also found in analyzing data on black families in Harlem between 1905 and 1925 that only 3 percent of all families "were headed by a woman under 30."

Scholar and columnist Thomas Sowell found: "Going back a hundred years, when blacks were just one generation out of slavery, we find that census data of that era showed that a slightly higher percentage of black adults had married than white adults. This fact remained true in every census from 1890 to 1940."

In absolute numbers, blacks commit most of the crime in the United States. Blacks account for half of all the arrests for assault and rape, and two-thirds of arrests for robbery. Blacks are disproportionately more represented in all categories of felonies, except those requiring access to large sums of money such as embezzlement and stock fraud.

Criminologist Marvin Wolfgang says, "For four violent offenses — homicide, rape, robbery and aggravated assault — the crime rates for blacks are at least 10 times as high as they are for whites." Close to 90 percent of the victims of black criminals are black.

Crime turns neighborhoods into economic wastelands, forcing poor people to bear the cost of traveling to suburban malls to do routine shopping or pay the high prices at local "Ma & Pa" shops. If they manage to buy a home, that home is worth less because of crime and wanton property destruction. Poor people are most dependent on law and order for safety and welfare.

Wealthier people have the financial resources to protect themselves, by taking such steps as purchasing alarms or hiring private guards. An often-overlooked crime cost is that people who are the most upwardly mobile people are the first to leave. Their replacements are not as mobile or they care less about neighborhood amenities.

The people who leave take with them the social leavening that contributes to vital and stable communities. The "politically correct" theory is that poverty and discrimination is the cause of high crime rates. During my youth in the 1930s and 1940s, black neighborhoods were far safer than today.

It would be preposterous to suggest back then there was less poverty and discrimination. The level of social pathology seen in many black communities is unprecedented and has nothing to do with a so-called legacy of slavery, unless we're willing to say that slavery has a delayed reaction of four or five generations.

Another silly prohibition

by Vin Suprynowicz

The problem started long ago, when we started calling our elected representatives "lawmakers," instead of "delegates."

Other than those who make their livings redistributing government hand-outs, does any American wake up in a near-panic each day, fearing we don't have enough laws, and that Congress may fail to pass a dozen more by sundown?

Yet for decades, the folks we send to our state and national capitals have grown pale at even the remotest prospect of being dubbed "ineffective" because they were "unable to get any major new legislation passed."

It's reached the point where the mere revelation in a series of reports by a major metropolitan newspaper or TV station that a given profession or industry "still operates almost entirely without federal regulation!" is enough to send Washington's legions forth into tumultuous regulatory battle, bedecked in all the gleaming martial splendor of the Dauphin's forces sortieing bravely out onto that muddy plain at Agincourt.

Thus, when Congress appoints a body like the federal gambling study commission — even though the group's official mandate speaks merely of studying the national impacts of gambling and reporting back those findings — the common perception is that such a body will surely return with some massive new proposed regulatory scheme.

It now seems clear that isn't going to happen. So, those on the commission who still believe their task is to help Congress express some measure of moral opprobrium are now apparently scrambling to come up with something they can propose, to demonstrate that they "care about the children," or whatever.

Feel-good recommendations that won commission approval May 17 included a proposed ban on Internet gaming, and a national ban on gambling on college athletics (now allowed only in Nevada, Delaware, Montana, and Oregon.)

Given the speed with which technology is advancing, the proposed ban on Internet gaming may someday appear as quaint as century-old laws requiring that automobiles be preceded by a man on foot with a red flag. Given the ease with which web sites can now be established in foreign countries, how exactly would such a ban be enforced?

But the most important proposal is the ban on wagering on college athletics, precisely because recent high-profile gambling scandals at Northwestern, Boston College, and Arizona State University are likely to give such a call some public resonance.

Indeed, the prospect of young athletes who have barely started to shave their faces (or legs, I suppose) being led into corruption and point-shaving by unscrupulous gamblers proffering wads of cash is a disturbing one. And the proponents can even score a few points by citing Nevada's own minor hypocrisy, since the Silver State allows casino bets on the sporting events of out-of-state schools, but not on our own college athletes.

Still, the panel returns here to the very "prohibition" problem it has so delicately managed to sidestep for most of its term. The realistic choice is never between legal gambling and no gambling at all, but rather between legal gambling — where some resort to police and courts is possible — and illegal gambling, in which the player has no legal protection against either stacked decks or unsavory collection procedures.

College athletics has become a big-money game in which major schools spend millions to vie for even more millions in gate receipts and television rights. To expect that the public can be dissuaded from chancing a few dollars on contests that already dominate the national airwaves and sports pages is silly. Does anyone really believe we can ban office pools and bar bets?

If the "professionalizing" of college athletics keeps rubbing its hypocrisy in our face, the solution is to face reality the way the Olympics finally did when they dropped their hypocritical "amateur" rule. Let the colleges officially sign on as a farm system for the NFL and NBA, and pay salaries to their ballplayers, stipulating only that they be no older than 23, and allowing them to take tuition-free college courses so long as they make the team — or not, as they please.

(Heck, the schools might even dedicate some small part of the proceeds to allow non-athletic-scholarship students to play free-admission contests on the same fields and courts on off days — real "college athletics" on which it's unlikely anyone would want to bet, anyway.)

Does America really need to involve its cops in any more gunfights attempting to enforce any more unenforceable prohibitions? The greatest sports scandal in American history — the White Sox throwing the 1919 World Series — was not prevented by the fact that sports betting was then illegal in all 48 states.

Must we really go through this pointless exercise, just so commissioners and congressmen alike can whine, "Well, we had to do something?"

of which is to destroy the concept of inalienable rights... according to the communists, there are no such things as inalienable rights."

Government controlled schools are indoctrinating our children to actually reject the great principles of liberty described in the American Declaration of Independence. "Your children are being taught to give up their individual rights for the sake of the society," Tomlin pointed out. "They are being taught in pods, group learning, where grades are determined not by individual knowledge, but by cooperation and consensus. Two and two may not be four, if the consensus says it is five."

"If you see your children working in little groups of three or more around a table in the classroom, you can be sure that Goals 2000 has been implemented in your government school," he added.

All through the seminar Tomlin offered the actual legislation and U.N. documentation for inspection. "I learned a long time ago," the former presidential adviser said, "that when I came to give a presentation, I'd better have the documentation to back it up. When I briefed President John F. Kennedy, and he questioned any of my conclusions, I had better have documentation supporting my conclusions readily available."

It would be near impossible for me to capsule Tomlin's five hour seminar, but participants at the event Saturday all admitted that they had never heard about the information he presented, and were equally shocked at the infiltration of communist ideas in government schools.

"Our goal," Tomlin told the grandparents and parents at the seminar, "is to assist in the opening of at least 50 Christian centered church schools in Texas this year." The seminar here was hosted at the Lighthouse Christian Center Church of God, and members of that congregation were given a curriculum set by Tomlin for their planned church school. "You may choose to use your own church's educational materials," he explained, "but The Christian Alert Network (TCAN) is pleased to help you get started with these materials," Tomlin said.

Churches interested in contacting Tomlin for assistance in establishing church centered Christian learning centers may do so by writing to him at P.O. Box 11746, Killeen, Texas 76547; by fax at 254-628-7894 or telephone at 254-628-7043. TCAN also provides an Internet web site complete with documentation related to the seminar at <http://www.vvm.com/ctomlin> or e-mail to "TCAN" <ctomlin@vvm.com>

The imperial presidency and martial law...

Olson and Woll discovered that the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1863 that the president can unilaterally decide whether an insurrection is in effect and determine how much force is necessary to suppress it. He can "brand as belligerents the inhabitants of any area in general insurrection."

Equally shocking, in Olson's view, as the fact that the president can use the military against civilians, is the fact that former presidents have done so on "many occasions" — none of them declaring martial law.

For example, in 1914 President Woodrow Wilson deployed federal troops in Colorado to suppress a labor dispute. Olson-Wolls point out that Wilson ordered the U.S. Army to disarm American citizens — including state and local officials, sheriffs, the police and the National Guard; to arrest American citizens; to monitor the state judicial process and re-arrest (and hold in military custody) persons released by the state courts; and to deny writs of habeas corpus issued by state courts.

Earlier, in South Carolina in 1871, without declaring martial law, President Grant sent troops into nine counties of South Carolina to enforce a proclamation commanding the residents to give up their arms and ammunition.

Between 1807 and 1925, federal troops were used more than 100 times to quell domestic disturbances — sometimes the presence of the troops alone was enough to discourage the participants.

"Look at the history," Olson exclaimed. "None of what's happening is new. Could you ever imagine that the President of the United States could order the Army to disarm sheriffs, disarm police, and disarm the National Guard? Isn't that beyond what you'd ever dream? "But it has happened. It's the fact that this has happened that should cause people to take this issue seriously."

But doesn't the Posse Comitatus Act provide restrictions against the use of the military? This is the act that prohibits the Army or Air Force from acting as a posse comitatus — "the population of a county the sheriff may summon to assist him in certain cases."

"No one should ever think the Posse Comitatus Act is any check whatsoever on the ability of the federal government to employ military might against civilians," said Olson.

"We were surprised at how weak the Posse Comitatus Act is," he continued. "There have been no prosecutions ever, and it doesn't apply to any branch of the armed forces except the Army and the Air Force. It doesn't have any implementing regulations, yet it has a huge exception — that deployment of the Army or Air Force as a posse comitatus is a crime, 'except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress.' "That 'Constitution or Act of Congress' exception is so broad you can drive a truck through," Olson remarked.

"The final thing that surprised us was that that the military doesn't need an order from the president to have control over civilians," Olson said. "I had always thought only the president could declare martial law, but apparently not. Apparently any commander can do it, can suspend all civil rights."

Larry Pratt considers this last the most egregious of all the Olson-Woll findings. "Military commanders can act on the basis that there is an emergency," said Pratt. "They don't have to wait until martial law is declared. The powers that they have in their hands are tremendous."

"People can't expect President Clinton to sit there in front of a camera and say, 'Tonight I have declared martial law,'" Pratt said. "You'll just find out about it when you try and get on the main highway and there's a humvee with a soldier who says, 'Turn back.' And when you ask why, he puts his gun into ready position and says, 'I'm only following orders. Please turn back.'"

"You can challenge that. You can say they — the commander or the soldier — have no constitutional authority for this, and you may be correct. But you will be arguing on the wrong side of a barbed wire fence. They can simply do it. It will not be debated."

"It's wonderful," Pratt noted, ironically. "It goes beyond what [White House spokesperson] Paul Begala said about executive orders: You know, 'Stroke of a pen. Law of the land. Kinda cool.' Martial law could be initiated by one commander sending an e-mail to a guy at the base to muster his troops."

"Stroke of a keyboard, martial law. Kinda cool," Pratt said.

Sales tax rebate down again

Retail sales in Post and Garza County appear to be substantially lower than those posted a year ago, according to a recent report from the state comptroller's office.

The city's May payment from the state comptroller's office was $23,984, relatively similar to the $22,909 payment the city received in May of 1998. However, year-to-date payments show a significant decline.

To date, the city has received $86,720 compared to $102,042 received in the first five months of 1998. The difference is 15.01 percent.

This month's payments to cities include sales taxes collected by monthly filers in March and reported to the comptroller in April, plus quarterly returns for sales in the first three months of the year.

Statewide, a 12.7 percent increase was reported.

Woman's Culture Club lands five state awards

The Woman's Culture Club received five state awards for its volunteer services to Post and Garza County, according to a recent announcement by club president Jan Acker.

The award recognitions were made at the state convention April 29-30. Past District President Donna Hogue Craig attended the event.

In Home Life for Substance Abuse Prevention, the club won first place for the funds raised to send STARS representative Jerica Tyler to summer camp. Tyler visited the Woman's Culture Club in December to report on the camp and shared Christmas carols with club members.

In Public Affairs for Crime Prevention, the club won second place. The Woman's Culture Club had Jayta Cravy, newly-appointed agent of the Victim's Advocate Program, speak to the club about the new program. In response, the club decided to assist the organization by collecting and donating 17 Teddy bears for children who are victims.

In Libraries 2000 Project, the club won first place. During the spring and summer of 1998, the club collected books to donate to the library in one of the elementary school classrooms. This is a national project aimed at putting $12.5 million worth of books and materials into libraries.

In GFWC Fundraising, the club won first place. During Craig's district presidency she raised more than $700 to place military women's names in the new WIMSA Memorial (Women in Military Service of America) in Washington, D.C. Craig sent out brochures and collected women's names and information for the memorial.

A special award, District Chairman's Resume, first place, went to Craig for fundraising.

Women's Division Tourism Bureau remembers veterans

by Louella Bilberry
On Wednesday, May 19, the Women's Division of the Post Bureau of Tourism and Commerce was treated to a remembrance of why we hold Memorial Day so special in our hearts.

Our division president, JoAnn Stelzer, is a very active member of the VFW Auxiliary. In that capacity, she presented a short and moving acknowledgement of our debt to all the men who have given their lives for our nation.

She encouraged us to be in attendance for the Memorial Day service at our cemetery. Please help to see that every veteran has a flag on his grave.

We had 20 members present, one of whom was our newest member, Linda McLaughlin. It was reported that the cookbooks are still selling "like hotcakes." We congratulated Marie Neff for her winning fourth place in the Senior Mrs. Texas Pageant. She, in turn, thanked the Women's Division for their support.

We had no new business, but a number of announcements were made. Linda Puckett's Kids-n-Art show was in full swing. Kelly Ahrens passed out notice for the senior forum seminar to be held May 26 at 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the community center, but registration closed May 18. Betty Posey told of the hard work being done to update rural addresses and location of rural homes for 9-1-1. JoAnn Mock had read a very complimentary article on Post in an Arlington, Texas, newspaper.

I commend JoAnn Stelzer and the ladies of the VFW for their attempts to promote patriotism in area schools, their support of Meals on Wheels and their monthly parties at Golden Plains.

Our reporter was "under the weather." Hope you're feeling better, Geraldine!

VFW Ladies Auxiliary reports busy season

by Lana Comer
Glenda Hewitt hosted our monthly birthday dinner/meeting in honor of her mother, JoElla Spain, JoAnn Stelzer, Ruth Walls, Carol Jean Light and Beth Ann Todd. Everyone who was present brought a dish. A time of sharing some very interesting stories during the meal was enjoyed by all.

This year the Buddy Poppy sale will be held Friday, May 28. We will have ladies selling at Citizens Bank, Norwest Bank and some members will be going around to businesses in Post.

The Buddy Poppies are made by our disabled veterans and the money raised through the sales goes to them to help with their needs. The poppy itself represents the dead and the injured men and women who served in our armed forces. Help remember the men and women who can't forget.

I would like to say congratulations to Janet Ratliff. During our district meeting May 16 at Slaton, she was elected president of District 7. Janet has held treasury of District 7 for a few years and is also president of the Post Ladies Auxiliary. Melvis Taylor is District 7 patriotic instructor. We will have some new towns coming into our district and we welcome them. We had a memorial service and draping our charter for Memorial Day.

Our state meeting will be held at the Hilton in the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport July 4.

Our next meeting will be June 14 at 7 p.m. at the VFW hall. We will be installing officers for the 1999-2000 year. We would enjoy seeing all our members as we have a lot to do this year.

Crowd of 200-plus on hand for Garza's musical review

by Louella Bilberry
The crew of the little theatre had to pull out the folding chairs Friday night for the Rodgers and Hammerstein review. There were over 200 here, with five church groups included. One couple was celebrating their anniversary. It was number 66! The group from Plainville had the longest ride.

Patti Honacki, the producer, and Zan Moore were our mistress and master of ceremonies. Zan kept us laughing with his jokes and wisecracks.

Mark Garner, Beverly Newsom and cast set the mood for the night with "It's a Grand Night for Singing" from "The Sound of Music," followed by Beverly singing the title song. The ladies of the cast brought smiles to our faces with "How Do You Solve a Problem Like Mania?" Other songs were "My Favorite Things," "Do-Ra-Mi," "Edelweiss" and "Climb Every Mountain."

Patti and Zan entertained between the different Broadway musical selections.

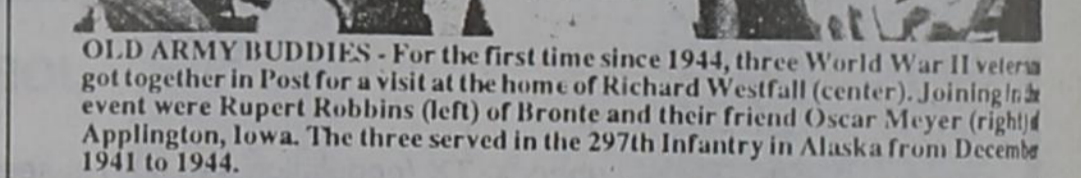

Next were the hits from "South Pacific." The men did a rousing rendition of "There is Nothin' Like a Dame." Amy Johnson "washed that man right out of her hair" without a drop of water. Mark Garner treated us to "Younger than Springtime" and Patti convinced us she was really "In Love with a Wonderful Guy." An elegant lady, Terry Hawkins, sang the hauntingly beautiful "Bali Hai." The other two songs were "Some Enchanted Evening" by Mike Morgan, then "Honey Bun" by Patti, assisted by Paul Garrett.

The first act closed with selections from "Carousel." Amy and cast belted out "June is Bustin' Out All Over." Mike, a regular in many little theatre productions, did the soliloquy, "My Boy Bill." Terry again had the spotlight with the lovely "You'll Never Walk Alone." Other selections were "Mr. Snow" and "If I Loved You."

Act Two began with the Maxey Park Dancers setting the theme for "The King and I" with a modern routine using movements typical of Siamese dancers. Amy led off with "Getting to Know You," followed by "I Have Dreamed" sung by Beverly and Brandon Bohannon. Audrey Duncan sang about when she was afraid, she'd "Whistle a Happy Tune." Patti and Mike played, sang and danced the scene where Anna teaches the King how to dance, European style, to "Shall We Dance?" Other numbers were "Something Wonderful," "We Kiss in a Shadow" and "Hello, Young Lovers."

Brandon began the salute to "Oklahoma" with "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning." Zan tickled our funny bones with his solo of "Kansas City," describing a country boy's visit to the big city. Patti told us she was "a girl who 'Cain't Say No!'" Other songs were "People Will Say We're in Love," "Many a New Day" and the rib-tickling "Pore Jud is Dead." The cast closed the show with the title song "Oklahoma!"

Music director Gary Belshaw did a wonderful job! Perhaps this will be the beginning of a wonderful new series of programs. There is Rogers and Hart, George and Ira Gershwin, Lerner and Lowe, Irvin Berlin, Cole Porter and Jerome Kern still to go!

OLD ARMY BUDDIES: For the first time since 1944, three World War II veterans got together in Post for a visit at the home of Richard Westfall (center). Joining the event were Rupert Robbins (left) of Bronte and their friend Oscar Meyer (right) of Applington, Iowa. The three served in the 297th Infantry in Alaska from December 1941 to 1944.

Soto tapped for Tech summer program

Lisa Soto was recently selected to attend a prestigious pre-engineering program at Texas Tech University this summer.

TexPREP-Lubbock is an academically intense, mathematics-based summer enrichment program presented in eight-week sessions over the course of three summers. It is geared for high-achieving students in grades 7-11 who are interested in engineering math and sciences.

Soto qualified for the program based on her IQ, achievement, grade point average, a written essay and recommendations from her teachers.

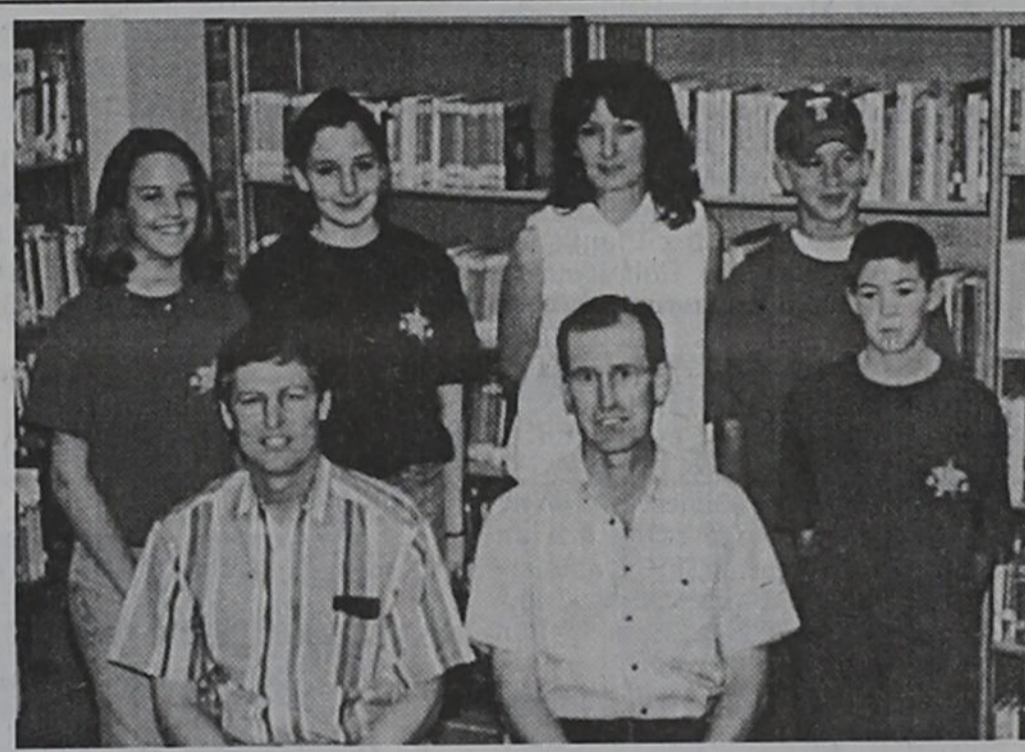

In addition to qualifying for participation in the program, Soto also will have the opportunity to participate in subsequent programs through the remainder of her middle and high school years.

Through an integrated, hands-on approach, TexPREP demonstrates the application of mathematics to diverse disciplines, including engineering, science and computer science, as well as to a wide range of career opportunities. Participants are exposed to academics that enhance current subject school matter — projects, field trips and speakers from engineering, math and related areas.

The program is limited to 120 students from the South Plains area.

Arlington newspaper features Post culture

Local cultural offerings were lauded earlier this month in an Arlington Morning News newspaper article which clearly stated that other Texas cities could "take a few lessons" from Post.

"Arlington — the state's seventh-largest city and one without a performing arts center — could take a few lessons from Post," Arlington Morning News staff writer Pennie Boyett said in her May 9 front page article. "The community is an example of how the arts can boost economic development..."

Boyett cites a brief history of Post and tells how, in 1986, the Palace Theater was reopened as the Garza Theatre. "Then came the Tower Theatre and two museums," she wrote. "Businesses returned to Main Street. A bed and breakfast opened in 1992."

In the article, Betty Switzer, director of community development for the Texas Commission on the Arts, is quoted as saying communities such as Post push to enhance their arts and cultural offerings to provide a "sense of identity, sense of place" and for economic development.

"People feeling empowered to say, 'This is important to us.' People moving from other places and saying, 'We can have this.' Reclaiming their town," Switzer said.

According to Boyett's article, statistics indicate that the arts not only build community spirit, but also draw tourists into a community.

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the Editor Policy: We require all letters to be signed, however, names may be withheld from publication by request. Letters may be edited for brevity, grammar and punctuation.

Crummy streets need to be paved

My concern started in 1993 or '94. I made a request at that time to the interim city manager to please do something about the extremely poor condition of the street on Avenue O, between 12th and 13th.

I told him I realized that some of the other streets were in need, but not to the extreme of this one. He then drove to the that part of Avenue O where we met. I told him each time it rains hard, the street floods and remains flooded because of the lack of drainage. In all fairness, he did send a grader out in the next few days, moving dirt on the street from one end to the other.

When I called city hall again, I was told that the street needs more gravel, so the water will run off and not puddle for days on end. I was told they planned to bring some gravel in the next two or three days. Well, the gravel never showed up.

After about four or five months, I returned once again to city hall, this time to speak to the new city manager, Rick Hanna. I repeated the problem with the street, and emphasized to him how badly this repair was needed. After taking a drive to the street, he said he would look into the matter and get back with me. Well, after another four or five months, there still was no answer.

So, I went to city hall one more time. This time Hanna assured me that something would be done soon!

So, again, I waited for quite awhile, in fact, my next attempt to get something done was in 1998. This time Hanna told me that the county was going to give us the gravel coming off of the Hwy 84 project between Justiceburg and Post. He planned to cover most of the city's dirt streets covered with this gravel from the highway materials.

When February 1999 rolled around, and still nothing had been done, I felt I should present myself to the city council and express the problem. I thought that surely before Hanna left he would give some explanation of his plan, and something would be done.

I prepared my statement, went to the meeting, only to find out that Hanna would not let me speak because it was not on the agenda, and he wouldn't allow me to present it for open discussion. I thought to myself, "If I'm not allowed to present my problem to the city council, I'll seek another route."

Hanna left, so I took my cause to the next person in charge at city hall. I was told they knew nothing about it, so I gave up at city hall.

I then presented this information to The Post Dispatch, explaining to the editor that I had seen material from the Hwy 84 project on some of the streets in and around the old mill housing section, as well as in parking lots and at Cedar Hills, and other areas of the city, including various business establishments. Although the editor said it was newsworthy, but there has been no publicity on this subject.

I waited patiently to see if an article would be printed, but after four or five weeks, still nothing. So I went back to the newspaper, to make sure the editor had all the facts. When we talked about the streets in the old mill housing area, the editor mentioned something about Judge Dalby, and maybe he could shed some light on the subject.

I then called Judge Dalby, he told me he would see if there was anything he could do, but said he was not really involved in how it was being handled. He said he would get back to me, and also suggested I talk to county commissioner Mason McClellan.

So I went out to Mr McClellan's house and had a very nice talk with him. He in turn told me he'd see what he could do, but said that was not his district, so he would contact commissioner Lee Norman.

So far, none of them have bothered to call me or explain to me why this Hwy 84 gravel isn't being used to improve these dirt streets in Post, especially the one between 12th and 13th Streets and Avenue O.

Now, after all this long story, I want to invite any or all of the city council members to drive up and down this street after a heavy rain, or for that matter, four or five days afterward.

You may ask why I bothered to right this letter. It's mainly because the city has had an excellent, inexpensive way to save some of our streets. I'm also very put out with the fact that everyone paying city taxes for street maintenance do not all get the same treatment.

I am sick and tired of watching my mother, who is a senior citizen, have to drive through muddy pot holes, standing water, just to get in and out of her own home, or standing on her lawn when someone else hits one of those mud holes and splashes it all over her and her cars.

Is there anyone in authority who can muster up the courage to do the right thing?

Pat Chancellor

Editor's Note: City government has very few really important tasks ... one of them is the maintenance of our streets and roadways. The letter writer has a solid case, and at the very least our taxes should be used to bring all streets up to the same quality.

Do we really care about our children?

Last week's edition of The Post Dispatch contained a rather lengthy announcement about a seminar that was to be held here on May 22. The announcement was a challenge to all parents to find out what the government is really trying to teach our children.

I have been hearing about "outcome based education" for some time, but, as I'm sure a lot of other parents, did not fully understand what it means. After attending the seminar, I am not only outraged at the government, but also at myself for sitting by and allowing this to happen!

Even though this seminar was widely advertised, and to my knowledge, the pastors in town were personally notified, the attendance was nothing short of embarrassing. There were about 15 people in attendance: one local pastor (from the host church), one teacher, from a private school, one local businessman, and two or three parents with school age children.

The remainder of the persons in attendance were grandparents and/or concerned citizens. One lady expressed that she was disappointed because she knew her pastor had been notified.

As there was no one there from the local government school to dispute any of the claims made, I have to assume that all the information was reliable. If this is the case, then we, as a Christian nation are in grave danger — more so than I ever imagined.

God tells us to "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." That is exactly what the government controlled education is doing — against us!

"Outcome based education" and the "goals 2000" curriculum have little to nothing to do with academics! Rather, it is directed at teaching that "emotions" and "feelings" are what really matters — not facts and truth.

Further, it is designed to teach our children that Godly values are obsolete. At least one textbooks (to be used with children as young as nine years old) contains pornographic drawings! Kindergarten children will be taught that homosexuality is a normal behavior, to be accepted without question.

According to the Bible, this is not God's opinion!

Values must be taught in the home. If the parents do not have a solid set of values to pass on to their children, the children will find their values somewhere, else.

It took the efforts of one woman in 1963 to get God kicked out of our public schools. It is time for the Christians to take back this nation for God. The lives of our children and future generations are at stake.

We must ban together, seek God's will, and then be willing to do whatever He requires of us to make right these wrongs.

Darlene Prueett

Editor's Note: Either Christians have to get the government out of our schools, or take their children out of the government controlled schools. There is no other choice if children are to be brought up in the ways of the Lord. To paraphrase a recent letter (5/13/99), when government closed the door to God in our schools, guess who came strolling in to take his place?

Josey is top grad at Ira High School

Lindsay Lee Josey will graduate as valedictorian of her senior class at Ira High School Friday, May 28.

Josey, daughter of Cindy Josey of Snyder and Rodney Josey of Carlsbad, N.M., and granddaughter of Royce and Frances Josey and Billy Joe and Sherry Dorner, both of Post, earned a CPA of 98.15. She has been in the top five of her class throughout her years in high school.

She served as secretary of her freshman and sophomore classes and junior class treasurer, and as a freshman was a member of the school combo. She is a four-year member of the Spanish Club and Student Council, serving as an officer for each group several times. She was inducted into the National Honor Society as a sophomore, filling the group's public relations post her senior year.

Josey participated in UIL number sense, mathematics and calculator applications and science and competed with the school's one-act plays for three years. She received several awards, including TAAS Academic Recognition in reading during her sophomore year. She was named to the President's Honor Roll her freshman year. As a sophomore, she received the departmental award for Spanish. She also served as annual staff editor for the past two years.

She plans to attend Western Texas College in the fall before going on to a four-year university where she will major in physical therapy. She also plans on continuing in EMT, working toward a paramedic license.

Tax 'n Facts

by Terri Cash

Who Won The Lottery?

Ever wonder about the groups of friends or co-workers who buy lottery or Powerball tickets together? What happens when one of the tickets hits? Who gets the money? Who pays the taxes?

They'd better decide in advance and - if they're smart as well as hopeful - put it in writing. Even a note or letter will do. Otherwise, the group will have to show a pattern of pooling money or the buying chores and a clear understanding of how any proceeds are to be divvied up.

Here's the problem: a winning ticketholder could legally keep the whole pot for himself and be liable for taxes on it - or owe gift taxes on any amounts shared with the friends or co-workers in the pool. But if the group can show an agreement in writing, or at least a clear consensus on how the winnings will be divided, then the money legally belongs to all of them. And the tax bite will be much lower when shared.

HAIL DAMAGE SPECIALISTS

• CONSUMER ALERT! Beware of Paintless Dent Repair (PDR) or Hail Lifters

If you choose to have your car repaired at a paintless dent repair shop, please beware of the disadvantages of this type of repair. Often times holes are drilled in the structural supports of your vehicle. When painted metal is dented, the paint can crack, therefore, when metal is punched back out, the paint is still cracked, thus causing rusting of metal parts. Remember, when choosing the type of hail damage repair, choose conventional repair with NO PDR. Allow Best Collision Repair Center to be our #1 Choice!
