long Branch, N. J., Sept. 2 .- Presi-Wilson received today at Shadow awn the summer White House, the al notification of his renomination the Democratic party from the notiion committee headed by Senator

In response Mr. Wilson spoke in art as follows:

Senator James, Gentlemen of the Notification Committee, Fellow Citiens: I cannot accept the leadership and responsibility which the National socratic convention has again, in meh generous fashion, asked me to scept without first expressing my profound gratitude to the party for he trust it reposes in me after four pers of fiery trial in the midst of af-thrs of unprecedented difficulty, and be keen sense of added responsibility with which this honor fills (I had alost said burdens) me as I think of te great issues of national life and odey involved in the present and imediate future conduct of our governent. I shall seek, as I have always eight, to justify the extraordinary to purge my heart and purpose of very personal and of every misleadparty motive and devoting every ergy I have to the service of the naon as a whole, praying that I may one to have the counsel and supet of all forward-looking men at evy turn of the difficult business. For I do not doubt that the people the United States will wish the eratic party to continue in conof the government. They are not the habit of rejecting those who we actually served them for those to are making doubtful and conjecral promises of service. Least of are they likely to substitute those o promised to render them particuservices and proved false to that

The Republican party was put out power because of failure, practical M served special interests and not be leadership of its preferred and esblished guides, of those who still ake its choices, it had lost touch ith the thoughts and the needs of the tion and was living in a past age and under a fixed illusion, the illusion greatness. It had framed tariff ws based upon a fear of foreign rade, a fundamental doubt as to rican skill, enterprise, and capaty, and a very tender regard for the table privileges of those who had fined control of domestic markets ad domestic credits; and yet had ended antitrust laws which hampered very things they meant to foster, hich were stiff and inelastic, and in unintelligible. It had permitted ountry throughout the long period its control to stagger from one cial crisis to another under the eration of a national banking law its own framing which made strinthey and panic certain and the conof the larger business operations the country by the bankers of a reserve centers inevitable; had had faint-heartedly failed in the upt, because it could not bring itto do the one thing necessary to the reform genuine and effecnamely, break up the control of groups of bankers. It had been us, or indifferent, to the fact at the farmers, upon whom the coundepends for its food and in the analysis for its prosperity, were out standing in the matter of ercial credit, without the proteca of standards in their market ons, and without systematic ledge of the markets themselves; at the laborers of the country, the tet army of men who man the inatries it was professing to father at promote, carried their labor as a commodity to market, were subat to restraint by novel and drastic ess in the courts, were without asice of compensation for industrial nts, without federal assistance commodating labor disputes, and ut national aid or advice in findplaces and the industries in ch their labor was most needed. country had no national system mad construction and development. intelligent attention was paid the army, and not enough to the The other republics of America

What Democrats Have Done. The tariff has been revised, not on the principle of repelling foreign trade, but upon the principle of encouraging it, upon something like a faoting of equality with our own in respect of the terms of competition, and a tariff board has been created whose function it will be to keep the relations of American with foreign business and industry under constant observation, for the guidance of our business men and of our congress. American energies are now directed towards the markets of the world.

The laws against trusts have been clarified by definition, with a view to making it plain that they were not directed against big business but only against unfair business and the pretense of competition where there was none; and a trade commission has been created with powers of guidance and accommodation which have relieved business men of unfounded fears and set them upon the road of hopeful and confident enterprise.

By the federal reserve act the supply of currency at the disposal of active business has been rendered elastic, taking its volume, not from a fixed body of investment securities, but from the liquid assets of daily trade.

Effective measures have been taken for the re-creation of an American merchant marine and the revival of the American carrying trade. The interstate commerce commission has been reorganized to enable it to perform its great and important functions more promptly and more efficiently. We have created, extended and improved the service of the parcels post.

For the farmers of the country we have virtually created commercial credit, by means of the federal reserve act and the rural credits act. They now have the standing of other business men in the money market. We have successfully regulated speculation in "futures" and established standards in the marketing of grains. By an intelligent warehouse act we have assisted to make the standard crops available as never before both for systematic marketing and as a security for loans from the banks. For Labor and Children.

The workingmen of America have been given a veritable emancipation, by the legal recognition of a man's labor as part of his life, and not a mere marketable commodity; by exempting labor organizations from processes of the courts which treated their members like fractional parts of mobs and not like accessible and responsible individuals; by releasing our seaa from involuntary servitude; by making adequate provision for com-providing suitable machinery for me diation and concillation in industrial ure and moral failure; because it disputes; and by putting the federal department of Labor at the disposal of country at large; because, under the workingman when in search of work.

We have effected the emancipation of the children of the country by releasing them from hurtful labor. We have instituted a system of national aid in the building of highroads such as the country has been feeling after for a century. We have sought to equalize taxation by means of an equitable income tax. We have taken the steps that ought to have been taken at the outset to open up the re sources of Alaska. We have provided for national defense upon a scale never before seriously proposed upon the responsibility of an entire political party. We have driven the tariff lobby from cover and obliged it to substitute solid argument for private influence.

Foreign Policy Stated.

In foreign affairs we have been guided by principles clearly conceived and consistently lived up to. Perhaps they have not been fully comprehended because they have hitherto governed international affairs only in theory, not in practice. They are simple, obvious, easily stated, and fundamental to American ideals.

We have been neutral not only because it was the fixed and traditional policy of the United States to stand aloof from the politics of Europe and because we had no part either of action or of policy in the influences which brought on the present war, but also because it was manifestly our duty to prevent, if it were possible, the indefinite extension of the fires of hate and desolation kindled by that terrible conflict and seek to serve mankind by reserving our strength and our resources for the anxious and difficult days of restoration and healing which must follow, when peace will have to build its house anew.

The rights of our own citizens of course became involved; that was inevitable. Where they did this was our guiding principle: that property rights can be vindicated by claims for damages when the war is over, and no modern nation can decline to arbitrate such claims; but the fundamental rights of humanity cannot be. The loss of life is irreparable. Neither can direct violations of a nation's sovereignty await vindication in suits for cam-

While Europe was at war our own continent, one of our own neighbors, was shaken by revolution. In that matter, too, principle was plain and it was imperative that we should live up to it if we were to deserve the trust of any real partisan of the right as free men see it. We have professed to be lieve, and we do believe, that the peo right to expect to be dealt with exactly as the people of big and powerful states would be. We have acted upon and life and industry have been | ple of Mexico.

Our recent pursuit of bandits into Mexican territory was no violation of that principle. We ventured to enter Mexican territory only because there were no military forces in Mexico that could protect our border from hostile attack and our own people from violence, and we have committed there no single act of hostility or interference even with the sovereign authority of the republic of Mexico herself. Many serious wrongs against the property, many irreparable wrongs against the persons, of Americans bave been committed within the territory of Mexico herself during this confused revolution, wrongs which could not be effectually checked so long as there was no constituted power in Mexico which was in a position to check them. We could not act directly in that matter ourselves without denving Mexicans the right to any revolution at all which disturbed us and making the emancipation of her own people await our own interest and convenience.

Problems of Near Future.

The future, the immediate future, will bring us squarely face to face with many great and exacting problems which will search us through and through whether we be able and ready to play the part in the world that we mean to play.

There must be a just and settled peace, and we here in America must contribute the full force of our enthusiasm and of our authority as a nation to the organization of that peace upon world-wide foundations that cannot easily be shaken. No nation should be forced to take sides in any quarrel in which its own honor and integrity and the fortunes of its own people are not involved; but no nation can any longer remain neutral as against any willful disturbance of the peace of the world.

One of the contributions we must make to the world's peace is this: We must see to it that the people in our insular possessions are treated in their own lands as we would treat them here, and make the rule of the United States mean the same thing everywhere-the same justice, the same consideration for the essential rights of men.

Besides contributing our ungrudging moral and practical support to the establishment of peace throughout the world we must actively and intelligently prepare ourselves to do our full service in the trade and industry which are to sustain and develop the life of the nations in the days to come. We have already been provident in this great matter and supplied ourselves with the instrumentalities of prompt adjustment. We have created. in the federal trade commission, a means of inquiry and of accommodation in the field of commerce which ought both to co-ordinate the enter prises of our traders and manufacturers and to remove the barriers of misunderstanding and of a too technical interpretation of the law. In the new tariff commission we have added another instrumentality of observation and adjustment which promises to be immediately serviceable. We have already formulated and agreed upon a policy of law which will explicitly remove the ban now supposed to rest upon co-operation amongst our exporters in seeking and securing their proper place in the markets of the world. The field will be free, the instrumentalities at hand, At home also we must see to it that the men who plan and develop and direct our business enterprises shall enjoy definite and settled conditions of law, a policy accommodated to the freest progress. We have set the just and necessary limits. We have put all kinds of unfair competition under the ban and penalty of the law. We have barred monopoly, These fatal and ugly things being excluded, we must now quicken action and facilitate enterprise by every just means within our choice. There will be peace in the business world, and, with peace; revived confidence and life.

We ought both to husband and to develop our natural resources, our mines, our forests, our water power. I wish we could have made more progress than we have made in this vital

We must hearten and quicken the spirit and efficiency of labor throughout our whole industrial system by everywhere and in all occupations doing justice to the laborer, not only by paying a living wage, but also by making all the conditions that surround labor what they ought to be. We must co-ordinate the railway systems of the country for national ise, and must facilitate and promote their development with a view to that co-ordination and to their better adaptation as a whole to the life and trade and defense of the nation. The life and industry of the country can be free and unhampered only if these arteries are open, efficient, and com-

Thus shall we stand ready to meet the future as circumstance and international policy effect their unfolding, whether the changes come slowly or come fast and without preface.

"I have here," said the gentlemanly agent, "a washing machine which is so simple that a child can operate With it you can do your own washing and thus save the money which you now pay a laundress. I am selling this machine at the extremely low

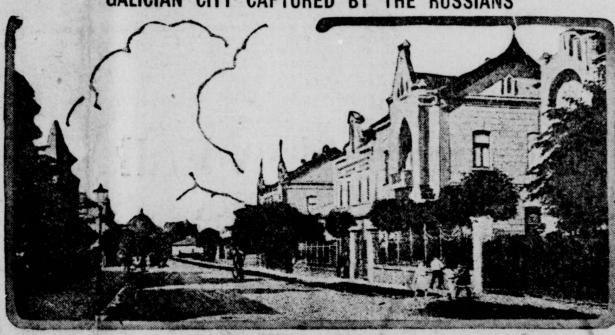

"Never mind the price," interrupted the commuter's wife. "I wouldn't take the machine as a gift. It's so lone some out here that I don't see a soul from one week's end to another except the woman who comes every Monday to do my washing, and now you want to deprive me of her society. Go away before I set the dog on you!"

CAMERA MEN SWARM AROUND WHITE HOUSE

There are probably more photographers to the square foot on the White House grounds when a picture of the president is to be made than any other single spot on earth. This picture shows above a part of the battery lined up to photograph President and Mrs. Wilson and his campaign managers, and below the picture they made.

photographer. Not since the time of Edgar Allan Poe have real poets worn their hair long-as in comic pictures-or affected the soulful expression. Nowadays when a man wears his hair like Spanish moss on a Florida oak he is suspected of being hard up. And if he exhibits what is supposed to by certain shifting and staring of his eyes he is pitied as one whose mental gearing

Bliss Carman, former editor of the Independent and a poet of note, was one of James Whitcomb ftiley's closest friends. After the Indiana songster's death on July 23, Carman told much about Riley to Mr. Joyce Kilmer of the New York Times Magazine and Mr. Kilmer in turn told it

Some 30 years ago Carman was introduced to the already famous Hoosier. Riley's keen birdlike eyes surveyed the tall frame of the new and young acquaintance: "Gosh, you're a stalwart, ain't ye?" he remarked, grinning. "I guess your parents must have trained you on a trellis."

Thea, as reported by Mr. Kilmer, Carman went

"The next time I saw Riley was in Philadelphia. went to read before the Browning society, and I don't mind telling you that I was scared to death. When I got out all alone on the stage and saw a thousand people staring up at me I felt more like running away than doing anything else. But when I saw Riley down in the audience, booking at me in his quaint, friendly way, then I felt all right. I wasn't afraid to read my poetry to Riley.

"After the reading was over Riley tucked me under his arm and said: 'Now, let's get around hotel and we'll take off our shoes and get a chew of tobacco and be comfortable.' "You know, such remarks as this were all the more piquant because Riley was so very puncflous and scrupulous in all his personal habits. He always was immaculately dressed. I never knew him even to make so much of a conces sion to comfort as to put on a smoking jacket or a lounge cont. But he liked to go to his room and stretch himself on his bed and talk. And he never talked about anything but literature, chiefly poetry. "Riley had a great fund of knowledge of poetry and knew lots of out-of-the-way homely verse. He delighted particularly in ridiculously bad newspaper verse. "Riley liked to read poetry aloud. When I went to his house of an evening, he generally was waiting for me with some favorite book, ready to read aloud." "What sort of poetry did he prefer?" "His tastes covered a wide range. Two poets to whom he was especially devoted were Longfellow and Swinburne. "Ittley liked Longfellow's directness and simplicity. The things that pleased him in Swin-burne's work were the masic and the deft crafts-"After Riley had received his degrees from some of the colleges, he seemed to feel that he ought to be known as a poet, rather than as a humorist and writer of dalect verse. He tried hard to live up to the name of poet, and wanted his nonsense rhymes of hts vagabondage forgotten. Yet his vernacular verse, or, as he called it, his dialect verse, was his chief contribution to

"Riley was just a poet. That was all he ever cared to be. He was not interested in anything but poetry. He knew nothing of politics-he had not voted for 30 years. And as for philosophy, he had nothing but contempt for the modern

"There was something very pathetic and charming about Hiley's tenacity in holding the serious poet pose. His nonsense was just one of his ways of writing which happened to prove popular; when he got a chance to write in another way how eagerly he seized it, and how persistently he ctung to It!

"His last years were the happiest of his life, think. He had his own car and rode around ladianapolis and its suburbs every day, generally taking with him some friend. He was honored and loved, and I think he fait that life had been

"Riley's father was a lawyer. His grandfather came to Indiana from Pennsylvania. His grandmother on his mother's side was Pennsylvania Dutch. His father was Irish.

"Riley had many prejudices. He disliked Poeery much. He disliked Poe's character so much that he could hardly read his poetry. Of course, he must have liked Poe's music and splendid

"Of course, you know the story of Riley's fa-thous imitation of Poe? He had taken a position on the staff of an Anderson, Ind., paper, and the editor of a rival paper kept ridiculing him. Riley imitation of Poe, and had it published in a paper in another part of the state with an elaborate story about the discovery of the manuscript.

"At once it made a great sensation all over the country. It made so great a sensation that Riley was terrified, and feared that he would be accused of literary forgery. Meanwhile the editor of the rival paper wrote: 'No doubt our young friend Riley will belittle this poem and say it is not the work of Poe. But it is Poe, and Poe's best manner.' The sensation grew to such proportions that Riley had to confess that he had written the poem. And then the editor of the paper discharged Riley because he had not pub lished it in his paper.

"Then the Indianapolis Journal gave him a job, which he held for years. He wrote reams of nousense verse, and wrote up in verse the shops of the merchants who advertised in the Journal.

"Riley's first book was called 'The Old Swimmin' Hole and 'Leven More Poems.' He published it himself. It sold so well that it was soon taken over by a publisher, and passed through many editions.

"Riley's exquisite penmanship showed the care with which he wrote. Originally he wrote a careless and rather illegible script, but he had so much difficulty in getting the printers to read his writing, and printing his dialect verse correctly, that he took up the study of penmanship. He was careful always to get the dialect of one part of Indiana as distinct from the dialect of any other part.

"'Any man's character,' he said, 'is best remembered, I suppose, by some of his habitual gestures and expressions.' I remember Riley as very deliberate in his motions, especially in his last years. Smooth shaven, ruddy, well groomed, he looked like a benign old English bishop more than anything else."

Mr. Don Marquis of the New York Sun aptly considers Riley and his poetry from an entirely different angle.

"James Whitcomb Riley," says he, "was the companion of fairies in Arcady; for the Hoosier belongs to a race apart. And while some are captured and broken to trade, the gentle poet escaped and kept always the vision of hidden things.

With these prefatory remarks the writer goes on with his essay: "There are two sorts of Indianan-the ordinary Indianan, who is not so very different from the Ohloan or the Illinoisan, and the Hoosier.

"The Hoosier belong not merely to a race apart, but to a separate species. He is human, but with a difference; he is aware of the kinship between humanity and the so-called lower animais (and even the plants and streams) on the one side, and on the other side of the kinship of humanity with the elves.

"When the moon turns the mists to silver and the owls wall and the frogs wake up along the creeks and lakes and the fairles saddle and bridle the fireflies and mount them and go whirring and flashing off in search of airy adventures the Hoosiers steal out of the farmhouses and hamlets and creap down to the bottom lands and dance and sing and cavort under the summer stars. They do so secretly, dodging the mere humans, for secrecy is the essence of their midnight,

"In the daytime they pretend they are just ordinary Indianans; their own brothers and mothers may not realize that they are Hooslers. "But in Indiana, as elsewhere, there is business and the need to attend to it. There must have been even in Arcady-somebody owned the flocks and herds of Arcady and turned them into butcher's meat and leather, and the shepherds

only piped on the sufferance of their commercial-minded masters. These Hoosiers, these wild bards and prancing, long-legged lovers of the moon, are often captured and broken and tamed to trade and industry by the more sordid citizenry. They are yoked to the handle end of the plow, chained to the desk; by the hundreds and thousands they become clerks and salesmen and railroad presidents and novelists and business men of all sorts.

"James Whitcomb Riley was a Hoosier who happily escaped; he was never captured, never enslaved; the things hilden from the rest of us, or revealed only in flashes, remembered but vaguely from the days of our own happy Hoosierdom, he continued to see steadily; he lived amon them familiarly to the end, and until the end was their interpreter to us.

"Bud come here to your uncle a spell,' says Riley in effect, 'and I'll show you not only a fairy, but a fairy who has for the moment chosen to be just as much of a Hoosier as the Raggedy Man, or Orphant Annie, or Old Kingry, or the folks at Griggsby Station.'

"The critics and the learned doctors of literature are already debating as to whether Riley had imagination or only fancy. (It would be a terrible calamity to some of them if they said it was imagination and it was officially declared later to be merely fancy: that is the sort of mistake that damns a critic and makes the sons and grandsons of critics meek, hacked, apologetic young men.) And doubtless the point is exceedingly important. For if a poet has imagination they say his work is significant. And if all the German troops will be prison

"The chief merit of Riley's dialect versewhich is the most popular part of his production and the part with which the critics chiefly concern themselves-is its effectiveness as a medium for character portrayal. Whimsical, lovable, homely, racy, quaint, salty, pathetic, humorous tender are his dialect poems; essentially, he has shown us life as a superior writer of prose sketches might do, adding the charm of his lyri-

"But, personally, we never like him so well as when he is writing sheer moonlight and music. Probably no poet who ever wrote English-certainly no American poet-got more luscious language than Riley. A sweetness that is not so sugary that it cloys, having always a winy tang. toward the door of her sitting room For instance, from 'The Flying Islands of the and said:

. . in lost hours of lute and song. When he was but a prince-I but a mouth For him to lift up sippingly and drain To his most ultimate of stammering sobs

And maudlin wanderings of blinded breath... "There is no better evidence of the genuine ness of Riley's sentiment, particularly in the dialect poems, than the discretion with which he touches the pathetic chord when he touches it at all. One of the most popular poems he ever wrote was 'Old-Fashioned Roses,' and one word too much, one pressure the least bit too insistent would have made the thing as offensive as a vaudeville ballad. The taste which told him to be simple and the sincerity which begat the taste save the verses from the reproach.

"His verses for children and about children could only have been written by a man whose love and understanding of children was real, for children are quick to detect and repudiate anything of the sort that is 'pumped up' for effect and they contributed enormously to the general feeling of affection for him. The regard of the children was in a way a testimonial to his persisting youthfulness of spirit; he was still their playmate; perhaps it is an earnest of immortallty, if immortality can be. Certainly love endures longer than anything else, and this man with the childlike sweetness in his soul goes from us loved as few men have been."

The symptoms which usually present themselves are restlessness, pawing, spasms and a marked redness of the mucous membranes lining the cavities of the head. The above normal during the whole course of the disease.

Another condition very similar to sunstroke is that known as heat stroke or heat exhaustion. This is brought about by overexertion and insufficient heat elimination. The direct rays of the sun are not responsible for this affection, which very often occurs to an animal on a cloudy, sultry day Some of the more prominent symptoms of heat stroke are weariness, profuse sweating, difficult breathing, an extremely high temperature, and a rapid pulse, which gradually grows weaker and upon the approach of death muscular tremors will be noted. The treatment for sunstroke and heatstroke are the same. Remove the animal to a cool, quiet, well-ventilated place, and permit a stream of cold water to flow over the horse and if possible apply ice packs to the head. If ice is plentiful apply it all over the body.

SELLING DIRECT FROM FIELD Farmers Favor That Plan With Cab bages, Letting Dealers Stand

Risk of Storage.

Most farmers prefer to sell their cabbage direct from the field, prefer ring that the dealers stand the risk of storage; this is probably the better plan. Where it is desired to store cabbage for home use, or even for sale later, one of the many plans in use is that of trenching. A shallow trench is dug and the cabbage laid in it hear down, and then covered with soil Straw, litter, and manure are placed over this to prevent deep freezing Storing in a warm, damp cellar ruins the flavor of cabbage.

ABOUT BULB PLANTING

File your hoe, making the bevel about twice as wide as the thickness of the blade. Then keep it bright, and when you go out after weeds the hoe slips through the soil so easily that hoeing is not much like hard work.

In hoeing, a long, slow movement should be made, if the soil is in good condition. Simply "scuffing" half an inch of the top soil is enough to kill weeds, and one can go over a lot of ground in one day if the hoe is sharp and bright and the strokes long and smooth.

E. P. Ripley On Relation of Railroads and People.

J. S. COLE, CASHIER

The industrial leaders of this nation are talking to the public face to face through the columns of this paper. a lawyer or employed a lobbyist to explain it to the legislature, but the men who know and the men who do are now talking over the fence to the man who plows. When the leading business men of this nation get "back to the soil" with their problems, strife and dissension will disappear, for when men look into each other's faces and smile there is a better day coming.

Mr. E. P. Ripley, president of the Santa Fe Railroad, when asked to give his views in reference to relations existing between the railroad and the public said in part;

Frequently we heat statements to the effect that these relations are improving, that the era of railroad baiting has passed and that public sents ment now favors treating the railroads fairly. As yet this change in public sentiment, if any such there be, is not effective in results.

It is true that in the legislatures of the southwestern states during the than usual, but a consideration of the hostile bills introduced shows the there is still reason for much disquiet even though they were defeated by more or less of a majority.

Moreover, the idea that the railroads have been harshly troated does not seem to prevail in the offices of the State Railroad Commissions seem to cherish a notion that their business is not to act as an arbitrate between the railroads and the people, but which proceed on the theory that the railroads are able to take care of themselves and that their act as attorney for the people even though in so doing they don to the railroads. It requires no argument to demonstrate that the are entitled to justice equally with other citizens and taxpayers. That they have not received it and are not receiving it is perfectly susceptible proof. That they have practically no recourse in the courts has also been

The situation therefore is that the people, through their representatives, must elect whether the services of the railroads shall be adequately compensated or not; and it requires no fortune teller or soothsayer to predict that in the long run the service will take the class that is paid for and no better. The natural competition between the railroads and the natural desire to perform first-class service has heretofore resulted in giving the public much more than it was willing to pay for. Continuation of this will be impossible and no laws, however drastic, can long accomplish the impossible

It was defined by the first edition of the Standard Dictionary, in 1891: "One of Eng-OF COURSE HE BLAMED HER epithet." By the New Standard, 1913. METHODS OF PUTTING UP VARI-OUS KINDS OF FRUIT.

Tartaric or Citric Acid Added to the Juice Will Be Found to Effect an Improvement-Must Not Be Used Always.

It is just about as easy to make elly from apples, quinces, peaches, or pears as from any other kind of fruit. f you know how, according to Miss Addie D. Root of the Missouri College of Agriculture. All that is necessary Is to add enough tartaric or citric acid to the fuice to make it taste about as sour as a good sour apple. This usually means about a level teaspoonful to a quart of juice. It destroys the delicate flavor of peach and pear juice somewhat but improves the flavor of sweet apple and quince juice.

Blackberries, blueberries, raspberries, partially ripe grapes, crab apples, sour apples, and plums usually make good jelly because they have enough acid already and also contain a substance called pectin which must be present and must be brought out with the juice by heating if jelly is to be made. That is why jelly-makers do not simply press out the juice from cold fruit. All apples and similar fruits have enough pectin for jellymaking purposes.

In making apple jelly cover the fruit with water before cooking and boil 20 or 30 minutes. After boiling has continued 10 or 15 minutes, add three-quarters of a cupful of sugar for every cupful of juice. The sugar that will be required should have been measured into a pan and warmed in the oven for a while before it is added. It should be carefully stirred in to pre vent burning.

As soon as the glasses are filled with the hot jelly they should be set in a cool place while jellying takes place. They should be sealed from the air, but if the jelly has been slightly overcooked it may be covered with panes of glass and allowed to harden in the sun. When it is well set pour hot paraffin over the top and put clean tin covers on the glasses. Store them away in a dry, cool place where the jelly cannot mold.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

A hot iron will soften old putty so that it can be easily removed. Never use water from a stone reser voir for cooking purposes. Never allow fresh meat to remain in paper: It absorbs the fuice.

Lemons will keep fresh if stowed in dry sand separately. Salt will remove the stain from silver caused by egg, when applied dry with a soft cloth. To polish a black marble clock rub over with olive oil and finish with a clean chamois leather. Never keep vinegar or yeast in stone crocks or jugs; their acid attacks the glazing, which is said to be poisonous. Put a silvered spoon into the most

Washing Rag Rugs. "How can I wash my rag rugs and summer carpets?" asks a correspond-

Dissolve four ounces of good, white soap in the same amount of boiling water. When it becomes a jelly, add five ounces of liquid ammonia, 21/2 ounces of alcohol, the same amount of glycerin, and two ounces of emer or chloroform if you know how to handle it. If not, best leave the last ingredient out. Bottle and cork and put away to use on blankets, heavy rugs, carpets, etc.

Use in the proportion of a teaspoonful of the liquid to a pail of water. Wash the carpet with washing soap in the usual way, stretch out on a flat space and nail the corners so that the rug is taut to prevent shrinking. When dry, take up and shake well.

Health Hints for Hot Weather.

Be sure the leftover food is not contaminated by flies. Be sure the icebox is immaculate. Remember that germs cannot resist boiling, and if there is any sick child or person in the household the safest way is to use enameled ware in the sick from and boil it thoroughly before it is used again or by another member of the family. Fly screens are useful in keeping out flies, but do not save one from the necessity of killing the flies that are already inside the house. All fruit and vegetables should be very carefully washed, and, better still, peeled if they have had much handling. Take reasonable precautions of this kind and then don't worry. Many a child has been worried into an illness by an overanxious mother.

Way to Save Gas.

When you have a couple of hours' troning to do, or if you have meat or vegetables to cook which require two or more hours time, put a teakettle full of water on the unlighted burner next to the one you are using. Then when your ironing or cooking is done, you will have a teakettle full of almost boiling water without burning any gas for that purpose.

Sanitary Ways.

As much garbage as possible should be burned in the range when a coal fire is going, unless there are animals to cat it. Cremation is the most sanitary way of disposing of kitchen waste. If there is a vegetable garden the garbage may be buried. Dig a deep hole, leave a small spade near by, and cover the garbage with a little earth each time it is deposited, and occasionally a shake of lime.

Darning Tip.

To make silk stockings wear longer than they were ever meant to do buy a small spool of mending floss just the same color and carefully darn the heels and toes both ways. This precautionary darning will not spoil the looks of the new hose and it considerably retards the time when they become threadbare.

"You must not dare a woman to do anything, even if she is growing old," says this successful creature, "for she will do it, even if her husband should object."

Here and there there may be a husband who will wonder what that word "even" is doing in this declaration of feminine intentions, but otherwise the sentiment will go uncorrected.
