on hand and enjoyed every min ute of the day. Large delegations from Lelia Lake and Hedley went down on the morning train and increased the crowd.

C. D. Akers of Giles welcomed the visitors in his usual pleasant style, and K. W. Howell of Hedley in like manner responded.

The morning program consisted of songs and recitations by members of the different schools represented. Following which the most important feature took place-the spreading and eating of a picnic dinner in picnic style. The Giles people are always on top when it comes to feeding and entertaining the crowds. The dinner was indeed a feast.

Clarendon, June 3 .- The reception and banquet Mrs. Cornelia Adair, owner of the famous "J. A." ranch gave Saturday and Sunday, were probably the most novel ever given in the state.

There were no invitations. Mrs. Adair just announced that she was "at home to all the Panhandle" and this announcement was taken to mean just what it said. No less than 700 persons, principally ranchmen and persons identified with the cattle industry and friends of Mrs. Adair's from all parts of the Panhandle attended. It was like the famous cowboy affairs of days gone by, when cowboys rode hundreds of miles to attend festiveis. Six hundred loaves of bread were ordered for the dinner and two beeves were killed.

James Wadsworth, former speaker of the New York house of representatives, and general manager of the ranch, was master of ceremonies.

pends upon the existence of the race. The first hint of the purpose of Providence in founding the family is seen in the command, "Be ye fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it." The purpose of the family is not to perpetuate the race, but to perpetuate the race

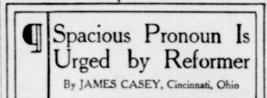

At its best. The physical life of the race must be healthy and pure. Much of a person's effectiveness is dependent upon the body. A weakened race physically will be an aimless and ineffective race. Persons in whom tendencies are strong toward disease, or who have corrupted themselves, commit a crime in marrying. The blood should be pure, the nervous system normal-neither deadened nor excited by stimulants or narcotics; the passions strong but controlled and the whole energy of the body pure through the temperate living of generations.

At its best. The tendencies toward insanity forbid marriage. To perpetuate the race at its best a person's mind must be not only healthy, as he receives it from heredity, but under control, thoughtful and well furnished. Persons who read only the weakest current literature of the day, who feed only upon the most sensational newspapers, are intellectually disenfranchised for marriage. Never in the history of the world has the race had more fundamental problems to solve than now. To perpetuate a race that is unable to grapple with its problems is reprehensible.

But character is essential to marriage. Without it the preceding elements are usually impossible. Criminals, drunkards and debauchees should not for social reasons be permitted to perpetuate their kind. Sincerity and reverence are the basis of all character, right living and true affection. Without these there cannot be that reverence for personality which is so essential in the home.

Yet two persons might possess all these elements and still should not be married. There should be that strong attraction which we call conjugal affection. When two healthy, thoughtful, pure and reverent persons, after thorough acquaintanceship, feel that the world of life has its center and meaning for them in this relationship and that they are willing to leave all others and leave to each other, then in founding a new home they are carrying out the purpose

The genius of the English language provides that in certain constructions a particular association of words (or ideas) may be implied as well as if expressed. Overlooking this fact, sundry would-be purists persist in outraging our ears with such sentences as the following: "An intelligent being (man, woman or animal) keeps his, her or its wits about him, her or it, lest he, she or it give himself, herself or itself away."

In order to get around this sort of thing we are advised to coin into ourselves sundry antic words, among others "he'er," "his'er" and "him'er." It may be true that music makes This will never do! These words not only offend sight and ear, but, if the analogies of our language are worth anything, they are full of double meaning, than which nothing could be more odious, particularly in words of daily use. If we must have a term to fill the hiatus, let it be a term of non-sex and not of bisex; a term that will cover not only man and woman but also tender baby and animals and even the mysterious spirit beings beyond-ghost, angel, demon, fairy, goblin, up to godhead itself (not "himself" or "herself," please).

Such a word we have, I submit, right under our hand. This is the pivotal word, so to speak. Let us emphasize it by attaching the aspirate. Dropping all "he-ings" and "sheings," the result is as follows: "An intelligent being keeps hor wits about hor, lest hor give horself away."

"Hor" is a resonant word, and its spacious inclusiveness adds to its Wife of a millionaire eloped with a claims to recognition. "He" and "she" are merely terms of sex, and, butcher. ### Girls Who Live at Home Preferred By A. K. WHEELOCK, Chicago

I should like to ask a few questions regarding the white slave traffic.

Merchants say many of their girl employes live at home. In fact, prospective girl employes are asked nowadays: "Do you live at home? Is anyone dependent upon you for support?" It is the girl who lives at home who gets the position, as she can afford to make a good appearence. She has little or no board to pay. Her mother takes care of her clothing. I say, and hundreds will agree with me, let the girl who does not need and do housework thoroughly, so that when she does marry she can care for her home and make it the dearest spot on earth. In the old countries the rich as well as the poor are thoroughly domesticated. It would be a disgrace there not to know how. Let men who are thinking of marriage find out if their future wives understand how to care for their earnings and help save for the future. Again, there is the woman who has been widowed and left with little children. If the girls who live at home did not take these positions the woman would have a chance to make enough to care for her loved ones. It is the woman who must earn her livelihood who is the most interested

"It is people who write poetry about us who prevent us women getting the vote." The sentence arrested me in reading Violet Hunt's story of the "Celebrity's Daughter" at a weekend, with the smashing of windows, the cutting up of golf greens, the spoiling of letters and the threats of other horrors in my ears and eves. For men persist in writing poetry about women to their amazement, and no women are writing poetry about men.

Man is the poetic sex. He goes about-I may tell you-with snappets from the papers in his pocketbook, and takes them now and again as sort of stimulant. Moreover, the man writes his poetry secretly, sends it to the newspapers and they publish it. I could give you the address of bald-headed stockholders and bearded business men who write verses. ### RAISE ALFALFA SEED

Either Too Much or Too Little Water Affects Yield.

Sunlight Is Strong Factor and Isolated Plant Will Equal Several Crowded Together-Rows Should Be Thinned by Disk.

A high development of the individcal alfalfa plant is necessary for high seed production, therefore plants should not only be seeded in somewhat. wide rows, but even thinned, if necessary, in the row. Either too much or too little water will affect the yield. In the first case a second growth will take place, and in the other there may not be enough moisture to mature a crop. The margin is a narrow one, and unfavorable moisture conditions account for many low yields. An 18inch rainfall properly distributed is about right for a seed crop. Thirty inches will prove too much, especially if much rain falls in the blooming season. High temperatures are necessary for setting of seed and its development, though occasionally the flowers are blasted by over-hot weather. Occasional light frosts only retard seed development, but either continued light frosts or a killing one will spoil the chances of a seed crop. The exclusion of insects from plants tends to make them sterile, as the tripping of the fertilizing portions of the flowers does not take place. Bumblebees, from their weight, and wild bees, by the insertion of their bodies, accomplish tripping more perfectly than the tame bee, which draws the nectar with its probescis. Ordinarily alfalfa sets its seed with the pollen from another flower, but it is self-fertilizing if the flower be tripped. Lands where alfalfa easily finds moisture are seldom good seed producers, as they make a second growth from the stems of the first growth, which is so rank as to lie down. Sunlight is a strong factor in seed production, and the isolated alfalfa plant wil' equal several plants crowded together, having a much better developed system of branches to carry the seed pods. Two to three pounds of seed per acre is sufficient for row seeding, and a further allowance should be made in the number of plants in an arid climate. When moist seasons came the plants will thrive below and above ground, the spread of the branches will fill a very large area, and when moisture is lacking the rooots, with proper cultivation, have a much larger area from which to draw moisture. The distance between rows may be from 18 inches up as high as four feet, at which distance the yieds at Chico, Cal., were as good as at any other width. Probably a less distance will be better if the plants be thinned in the rows by the disk or plowing, and the yield of hay, which is not much lessened by row sowing over broadcasting, be finer when hay rather than seed is desired.

The crop to leave for seed depends on what season of the year gives the best seed-maturing conditions; also in the arid country it will often be evident at the time of the first cutting that there is not moisture enough in the ground to start and mature a second crop either for hay or seed, and it must then depend on the grower's judgment whether to cut for hay and then cultivate the ground awaiting rain. If the ground is merely dry on top a good cultivation will restore things, but if digging shows it to be dry clear down rain must be awaited, and if the alfalfa be allowed to stand for seed in such condition my experience is that a second growth will almost always start when rain comes. the seed be lost and two crops of alfalfa occupy the ground at the same time. This is less apt to occur when the rain gets clear down into the soil than if it were merely superficial, which affects the upper part of the plants and sprouts the buds at the expense of the main plant.

SYNOPSIS.

Major McDonald, commanding an army post near Fort Dodge, seeks a man to intercept his daughter, Molly, who is headed for the post. An Indian outbreak is threatened, "Brick" Hamlin, a sergeant who had just arrived with messages to McDonald, volunteers for the mission and starts alone. Molly arrives at Fort Ripley two days ahead of schedule. She decides to push on to Fort Dodge by stage in company with "Sutler Bill" Moylan. Gonzales, a gambler, is also a passenger. Hamlin meets the stage with stories of depredations committed by the Indians. It is decided to return to Ripley. The driver deserts the stage when Indians appear. The Indians are twice repulsed in attack on the stage by Hamlin, Moylan and Gonzales. The latter is killed, Moylan is killed in next attack. Indians retire, and Hamlin and Molly wait for the next move. They plan to attempt escape in the darkness by way of a gully. Molly is wounded.

He could feel her breathing, and realized the danger of her return to consciousness. If she should be frightened and cry out, their fate would be sealed. Yet he must accept the chance, now that he knew the way to be clear. He held her tightly in both arms, his revolver thrust back into its holster. Bending as low as he could with his burden, feeling carefully through the darkness before advancing a foot, he moved steadily forward. Where the gully deepened their heads were at the edge of the bank, but much of the there watching for us still, believing way was exposed, except for the dark shadows of the slope. Fortunately there were clouds to the west, already obscuring that half of the sky, but to over in the east already, isn't it? the east nothing was visible against the faint luminousness of the sky-line. Once, far over there to the left, a gun was fired, the flame splitting the night be safe enough." asunder, and against the distant reflection a black figure rose up between, only to be instantly snuffed out again. Hamlin put down his uplifted foot, and waited, in tense, motionless silence, but nothing happened, except the echo of a far-away voice.

A dozen feet farther, some fourfooted animal suddenly leaped to the edge of the bank, sniffed, and disapment, slight as it was, served to peared noiselessly. So taut were his nerves strung that the Sergeant sank the sleeve. upon his knees, releasing one hand to grip his revolver, before he realized she implored swiftly. "Whatever you the cause of alarm—some prowling say is best, I will do." prairie wolf. Then, with teeth grimly locked, bending lower and lower, he crept across the rutted trail, and past the dead body of the Indian. Not until then did he dare to breathe naturally or to stand upright; but now, the gully, bending to the right, led away from danger, every step gained adding to their safety. He was confident now, full of his old audacity, yet awake to every trick of plainscraft. The girl's head rested against his shoulder, and he bent his cheek to hers, feeling its warmth. The touch of his unshaven beard pricked her into semi-consciousness, and she spoke so loud that it gave him a thrill of ap- ran. prehension. He dared not run in the darkness for fear of stumbling, yet moved with greater swiftness, until the depression ended at the river. Here, under the protection of the bank, Hamlin put down his burden and stood erect, stretching his strained muscles and staring back into the dark.

What now? Which way should they turn? He had accomplished all he had planned for himself back there in the coach, but now he became aware of other problems awaiting solution. In less than an hour it would be daylight; he almost imagined it was lighter already over yonder in the east. With the first dawn those watchful Indians, creeping cautiously closer, would discover the stage deserted, and would be on their trail. And they had left a trail easily followed. Perhaps the hard, dry ground might confuse those savage trackers, but they would scour the open country between bluff and river, and find the dead warrior in the gully. That would tell the story. To go west, along the edge of the river, wading in the water, would be useless precaution; such a trick would be suspected at once, and there was no possibility of rescue from that direction. They might as well walk feared, for wide as it appeared stretchopen-eyed into a trap. There was but one hope, one opportunity-to cross shallow sluggishness. The peril lay the stream before dawn came and in quicksand, or the plunging into hide among those shifting sand-dunes some unseen hole, where the sudden of the opposite shore. "Quicksand principally; it is in all these western rivers, and the two of us together on one pair of fe will make it harder to pull out of the suck. If I tell you to get down, do so quickly."

"Yes." "Then there may be holes out there in the bottom. I don't mind those so much, although these cavalry boots ere no help in swimming."

"I can swim." "Hardly in your clothes; but I am glad to know it, nevertheless. You could keep afloat at least, and the holes are never very large. Are you carry you all right." To the girl, that passage was never more than a dim memory. Still partially dazed from the severe blow on her head, she closed her eyes as Hamlin stepped cautiously down into the stream and clung to him desperately, expecting each moment to be flung forward into the water. But the Ser geant's mind was upon his work, and every detail of the struggle left its impress on his memory. He saw the dark sweep of the water, barely visible in the gleam of those few stars unobscured by cloud, and felt the sluggish flow against his legs as he moved. The bottom was soft, yet his feet did not sink deeply, although it was rath er difficult wading. However, the clay gave him more confidence than sand underfoot, and there was less depth of water even than he had anticipated. He was wet only to the thighs when he toiled up on to the low spit of sand, and put the girl down a moment to catch a fresh breath and examine the broader stretch of water ahead. They could see both shores now, that which they had just left, a black, lumping, dim outline. Except for the lapping of the water at their feet, all was deathly still. Even the Indian fire had died out, and it was hard to conceive that savages were hidden behind that black veil, and that they two were actually fleeing for their lives. To the girl it was like some dreadful delirium of sleep, but the man felt the full struggle. There was a star well down tune. Without a word he lifted her again to his shoulder, and pushed on. The water ran deeper, shelving off rapidly, until it rose well above his waist, and with sufficient current so crossed it often enough at the known that he was compelled to lean against it to maintain balance, scarcely venturing forward a foot at a time. Once he stumbled over some obstruction. barely averting a fall; he felt the swift clutch of her fingers at his throat, the quick adjustment of her body, but her lips gave no utterance of alarm. His groping feet touched the edge of a hole, and he turned, facing the current, tracing his way carefully until he found a passage on solid bottom. A bit of driftwood swirled down out of the night; a water-soaked limb, striking against him before it was even seen, bruised one arm, and then dodged past like a wild thing. leaving a glitter of foam behind. The sand-dunes grew darker, more distinct, the water began to grow shallow, the bottom changing from mud to sand. He slipped and staggered in the uncertain footing, his breath coming in quicker gasps, yet with no cessation of effort. Once he felt the dreaded suck about his ankles, and broke into a reckless run, splashing straight forward, falling at the water's edge, yet not before the girl was resting safely on the soft sand.

Strong as Hamlin was, his muscles trained by strenuous out-door life, he lay there for a moment utterly helpless, more exhausted from the nervous strain indeed, than the physical exertion. He had realized fully the desperate nature of that passage, expecting every step to be engulfed, and the reaction, the knowledge that they had actually attained the shore safely, left him weak as a child, hardly able to comprehend the fact. The girl was upon her feet first, alarmed and solicitous, bending down to touch him

The faces of both turned in that direction where appeared the first twilight approach of dawn. Already were visible the dark lines of the opposite shore, across the gleam of water, and beyond appeared the dim outline of the higher bluffs. The slope between river and hill, however, remained in impenetrable darkness. The minds of both fugitives reverted to the same scene—the wrecked stage with its dead passengers within, its savage watchers without. She lifted

There was silence, her hands pressed to her face, her eyes fixed on him. Then she questioned him soberly. "You mean, kill me?"

"Sure." he answered simply, without looking around; "I would have had to do it-just as though you were a sister of mine."

Her hands reached out and classed his, and he glanced aside at her face, seeing it clearly.

"I-I thought you would," she said, her voice trembling. "I-I was going to ask you once before I was hurt, but-but I couldn't, and somehow I trusted you from the first, when you got in." She hesitated, and then asked: "How did you know I was Molly McDonald? You never asked." The Sergeant's eyes smiled, turning way from her face to stare out across the river.

"Because I had seen your picture." "My picture? But you told us you were from Fort Union?"

"Yes; that is my station, only I had been sent to the cantonment on the Cimarron with dispatches. Your father was in command there, and worried half to death about you. He could not leave the post, and the only officer remaining there with him was a disabled cavalry captain. Every man he could trust was out on scouting service. He took a chance on me. Maybe he liked my looks, I don't know; more probably, he judged I wouldn't be a sergeant and entrusted with those dispatches I'd just brought in, if I wasn't considered trustworthy. Anyhow I had barely fallen asleep when the orderly called me, and that was what was wanted-that I ride north and head you off."

"But you were not obligad to go?" "No; I was not under your father's orders. I doubt if I would have con sented if I hadn't been shown you picture. I couldn't very well refus then."

The seed may be sown any time from March until May, but March is the better time. If sown in June it is best to sow one or two quarts of oats to every three hundred pounds can't realize yet that we are out of grass seed. The cats grow quickly and shade the grass.

Kentucky blue grass makes a very pretty lawn. From thirty to fifty pounds to the acre should be sown Some persons prefer to mix clover with blue grass. In this case sow three or four pounds of clover seed to an acre. Sow the seed broadcast. been scouting through hostile Indian Care should be taken to get an even stand and prevent the growth of weeds.

After the seed is sown the lawn should be rolled to pack the earth around it.

The lawn may be mowed every two weeks in the spring and at longer in tervals in the summer. It should never be mowed too late in the fall.

No lawn is complete without trees and shrubs. The larger trees should be planted in the background, with the shrubs and smaller bushes in front of them. Strive for naturalness in the arrangement of your lawn plants.

POINTERS ON STREET TREES

They Should Be Selected to Accord With the Width of the Highway.

Keep these points in view when planting either on country highways or city streets: Choose trees according to width of street; pepper trees on a twenty-foot street or Italian cypresses on a broad avenue would be nearly equally inappropriate, though the first is the greater mistake of the two. Allow plenty of space for each tree to develop unrestricted its natural growth and individualism; a green wall on each side is not the end sought. Choose trees that are native or from climates not widely dissimilar to ours; except where long-continued special care is assured. Any kind of a tree is no kind; trees should be ble, and the cost of caring for the best certainly is less than that required by the poorest. Above all (or rather below all) dig the holes large, deep, and wide, and refill with soil "good enough for any plant."

Garden Cities. England has passed laws making the building of garden cities compulsory. From statistics it has been found that people deteriorate unless their towns have beauty in natural scenery. The craving for beauty is an instinct of civilization. Our artificial life brings vital exhaustion, depression, overwrought nerves, with their train of nagging ills for which nothing is so beneficial as contemplation of beauty in natural scenery. It is not considered sufficient that a city be surrounded by fine parks. What seems to be needed in addition is a system of little parks, or breathing places, scattered about right in the center of residential sections; places which can be reached from one's own door in a few mments, so that the busy people can get quite often a sight of the beauty there displayed for their uplift and solace. It is a wise movement which should spread to other places.

This overheard conversation appeals to the weary one as nearly epigrammatic. The young people on the seat ahead of us in the homewardbound car the other night talked it out so loud that we couldn't help hearing it and jotting down a few notes on it.

"So." said the girl, "he said he knew me when I was a little girl?" "He didn't say anything of the sort," contradicted the man.

"You said he did." "I didn't."

Why! Then what did you say?" "I said he said he knew you when he was a boy." That put such a wet blanket on the

To Clean Rubber.

A rubber coat can be nicely cleaned by the use of automobile soap, a jellylike substance of dark color, which can be procured at any automobile supply store or at a garage.

The soap can be used for other garments also, as it does not injure the finest finished material, but the effect seems better on rubberized goods. The first step in cleaning is to make a strong lather. Clean the coat thoroughly and then apply the soap over a small portion of the garment. Carefully wash off the soap by sponging with clear water and proceed to next space to be cleaned. Dry out of doors.

AWFUL ECZEMA ON FACE

Freeland, Md.-"Baby's eczema started in little spots and would burst and run all over his face and wherever the water would touch his face. It would make another sore. Pimples would break out and make his face sore and inflamed, and he was very cross and fretful. It was awful. He suffered tortures from it, and we had to tie mittens on his hands to keep him from scratching. A friend of mine sold me of the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I went to a drug store and bought them.

"When we would bathe his face with the Cuticura Soap and apply the Cuticura Ointment, he would be much better. He would wake up in the nights and cry with his face and we would put on some of the Cuticura Ointment and then he would rest all night. They have cured him completely of the eczema." MEXICAN MARKET PLAZA

December.

From the Texas border the party the Mexican capital.

been assembled, and servants hired, others. preparations were made to leave the capital over a narrow gauge railroad to Puebla, in the state of the same

Like many of the prosperous Mexican mining towns tucked away in the mountains, the general public has heard very little of Puebla except through the dispatches of the "war correspondents." It is a city of 92,000 inhabitants. The shops cater to the love of finery which has descended to the natives from the Spanish don. Everywhere can be seen Americans, most of whom are interested in some mining venture in the nearby mountains.

On the way to Puebla the famous Tehuacan Springs are passed and the drinking water furnished tourists for a hundred miles along the railroad is from the springs. No one seems to know just why the water is healthful but popular opinion says it is.

After leaving Puebla the party continued along the railroad to Etla. Once the center of onyx mining, this little village has lost much of the snap and enterprise that foreign adventurers gave it in the past. It is a sleepy town now.

Oaxaca, home of the Diaz family and center of innumerable revolutions, was reached early one morning. When within 10 miles or so of the city, runners from all of the hotels in Oaxaca came on board and tried to book the party for their respective houses.

At the train muscular peons took charge of luggage which was heavy and numerous. These short, sturdy natives had no difficulty in slinging a trunk weighing 175 pounds onto a strap which they supported by a band around their foreheads. They carried the trunks up the rough mountain trail to the hotel which was perched on a amall peak overlooking the lowland. They didn't stop when they had reached the crest, but continued to the second floor of the hotel before taking the trunks from their straps.

Oaxaca and Vicinity.

Oaxaca is the chief town of the state of Oaxaca. It is now a city of 32,000 persons. Juarez, revolutionist or savfor-it depends upon your politics in Mexico-lived there. It is about 7,-000 feet above sea level. Americans are numerous, as there are many silver and gold mines in the vicinity. Just south of Oaxaca are many plantations that raise cotton, sugar cane and cof-

At Oaxaca the travelers left the railroad and climbed the mountain trail to Miahuatlan. This town, situated about 70 miles from Oaxaca, has an electric lighting system.

The road kept getting rougher. Finally it was necessary to forsake the horses and hire ox carts. This plan worked fine until, thoughtlessly, the drivers were given some advance wages. Too much pulque left the party without drivers, so an engineer was drafted as ox driver. The next day all of the drivers returned for their jobs, and were hired of course.

The engineer crawled 40 miles up the mountains to the crest where a fine piece of timber land, 13,000 acres, was situated. Part of this timber, which was all white pine, had been operated for turpestine. The forsakon still of the operators was found and later it was learned that the venture had been a failure. Even the servants which were hired by the day for 50 cents "Mex" or 25 cents in American money, put on a spotless white cotton suit every morning before chopping wood for breakfast fire.

The Mexican of the mountains is a vegetarian, as one could tell easily if he ever watched a whole family digging beans from an earthen vessel. The dishes of most families are limited to three or four rough earthen pots and every one eats out of these utensils.

During a stay of several weeks in the wildest part of Mexico the party did not meet a single wild animal. A frightened deer was seen once Snakes are almost unknown in southern Mexico. The famed and dangerous tarantula of the plains was also Everpresent, however, was the maguey plant which furnishes all classes of Mexicans with intoxicating drinks. Pulque and mescal are made from this plant. The first is a fermented drink, the latter distilled one. Either is sufficiently flery to pass as a substitute for alcohol.

On the return trip a couple of days were spent at Oaxaca viewing the ruins of Mitla which have puzzled archeologists for years. It is said that Cortez found the ruins in :520. Humboldt, who traveled through Mexico in 1729, visited them. His name can still be seen carved in the bark of a tule tree.

Some of the rooms in the ruined building are quite intact. On the walls are many finely executed carvings which resemble somewhat those of the Egyptians. No one, even in the vicinity, seems to have the threads of the tradition which sometime must have surrounded the pile of stone.

Bulgars as a People.

The Bulgars are not ethnologically related to the Anglo-Saxons, Dutch, Swedes, Danes and Norwegians, who are people of jure Teutonic or Scandinavian stock. The Bulgars, to the extent that they have Finnish blood in their veins, belong to the Yellow, or Mongolian breed, while place of timber and during the time the races just enumerated are the very villagers made life unpleasant for the cream of the white breed of men. There is a wonderful difference in this world between the house that is simply a place to live in, with four walls and a roof, and the house which is a real home. The difference is not so much in the house itself as in the combined effect or union of the house with its surroundings. There are certain styles of architecture that seem to blend naturally with shrubs, vines and flowers. With such a house any work done along the lines of amateur landscape gardening seems worth while, for every nook and corner of the yard, every flowering shrub and every tree throwing out its wide branches seems to add to the cozy, home-like appearance of the place.

This is one of the surest tests we have of excellence in architectural design. Some houses never seem to be at ease, or in accord with the site on which they are built. Every effort to improve and beautify the grounds serves only to bring out the more strongly the plain awkwardness of the house itself, which is of necessity the very heart and center of the whole picture. A well-designed residence, on the other hand, I care not whether it is a little four-room cottage costing but a few hundred dollars or a splendid residence costing many thousands, seems to harmonize and blend with its natural surround-

RAISE LAMBS IN THE SOUTH asks some merchant to credit him If Live Stock More Generally Introduced Vacant Area Could Be Greatly Increased.

(By D. T. GRAY.) When one rides through parts of the south and sees the thousands of splendid acres lying idle, growing up in brush and fine grasses, one wonders dollars worth of wool and as many some sections it is stated, not more than 50 per cent of the total acres is under cultivation. Money is tied up in the whole amount, however. If sheep and other kinds of live stock were more generally introduced the usable area could be greatly increased, as these animals would make use of the present waste places and hill sides and help develop the pasture side of our farming operations. The sheep need not occupy one foot of the present cultivatable area; he would but be the means of putting more capital to work. Then in addition to the fact that sheep is probably the best animal known to put the waste areas to use, the south is admirably suited to sheep production. In any line of live stock production pastures must be made the base and the south can have permanent pastures about ten months in the year. The remaining two months can be bridged over with temporary pastures.

Southdown is Good Breed for the Southern Farmer.

Then too, the climate of the south is so mild that the lambs can be born in can for home consumption, live more mid-winter and suffer none from the cold, which permits the farmer to get the lambs upon the early spring the boll weevil came. Almost everymarket at the time when high prices are realized. There is a good demand in this parish, and a bank of $10,000 for the early lamb. An excellent market can always be found for good fat stuff.

But now, after five years of fighting the weevil, writes C. H. Littleton in the Southern Ruralist, we find the country around here more prosperous than before the weevil came.

The farmers now are very careful about selecting seed for their crops: they seem to realize that the first essential is good seed, then rapid cultivation. Some gather squares and burn them until July.

The farmers pay more attention to poultry and stock raising than before; they have better hogs, cows, poultry and horses than before. They have tried peanuts. Irish potatoes and contaloupes in carload lots, and after paying expenses almost all have found that with the weevil cotton pays better than peanuts, potatoes or canta-

Over-Night Relief for Constipation

Small Dose on Retiring and You Are Well and Happy by Morning

It is only natural that the simplest of ailments should be the most general, and so we have a whole nation suffering from constipation and indi-gestion, for they are closely allied. But common as constipation is many people do not seem to know they have it. They will complain of headache, drowsiness or biliousness, all unconscious of the cause of the trouble.

You should have a full and free movement at least once a day. If you pass a day you are constipated, and the result will be that you will catch a cold easily or have a more serious ailment. To cure the constipation and forestall still graver trouble take a dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at night before retiring and by morning relief will come, without disturbance from sleep or any inconvenience. Legions of people use it regularly in such emergencies, some of them formerly chronic invalids who have suffered from constipation all their lives. Mr. A. B. Danner, 326 Riley St., Harrisburg. Pa., says: "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin gave me almost instant threatened to do great damage to relief from stomach and bowel trouble. I now eat anything I want, and sleep well." Many others will tell you that they have tried most things recommended for this purpose but have found Syrup Pepsin the only one always reliable. A bottle can be obtained at any drug store for fifty cents or
