POPULATION ANNOUNCED

Population of Donley county, as announced by the Census Bureau, Washington last Saturday, shows figures for the county of 10,000, which is a gain of 1,000 over 1910, and is divided as follows:

Precinct 1, 1,976.

Precinct 2, including Clarendon, 1,976.

Precinct 3, including Hedley, 1,976.

Precinct 4, 430.

Precinct 5, 1,277.

The city of Clarendon figures are 2,456. Hedley is given only 594.

Conservative men estimate the county figures represent about 65 or 70 per cent of our real population. We'll let Editor Braswell comment on Clarendon's showing, only expressing the opinion that it is some hundreds short.

As for Hedley's small showing, it may be attributed to the tiny area embraced in our town incorporation, which really takes in only about 50 per cent of the town. We'd risk our reputation on the statement that there are 1200 bona fide residents within a one mile radius of Hedley's center. Our scholastics total a few above 400, which makes that 594 population announcement look a little sick.

All in all, we do not feel that the Census Bureau has flattered us. However, Hedley will live and flourish in spite of that and other minor impediments.

JUST RECEIVED a car of nice Jersey MILK COWS. For sale. See me.

Capt. and Mrs. E. E. McGee left Sunday for their home at McLean. They expected to stop off for a visit with relatives at Lelia Lake and Clarendon. Hedley folks are very fond of this splendid couple, and are always glad to have them pay a visit to the old home town. Capt. McGee told the Informer man Saturday that he was just now beginning to realize how many good friends he had in Hedley. He said the manner in which he and Mrs. McGee were "feasted" and otherwise entertained here was simply wonderful. We hope to have them with us again soon.

PE-RU-NA
THE REMEDY FOR EVERYDAY ILLS

"I have used Pe-ru-na for years in cases of colds and catarrh. The results have been good, in fact, more than you claimed. Have also taken Lacupia and can easily say it is one of the best blood purifiers I have ever used."

Mr. J. F. Arendt

For Catarrh and Catarrhal Conditions

The evidence of one man like Mr. Arendt is more convincing proof to you of the merits of Pe-ru-na than any written words of ours. For fifty years Pe-ru-na has been the standby of the American family for diseases due to catarrhal inflammation of the mucous membranes lining the organs of the body. Thousands, like Mr. Arendt, have proved the effectiveness of Pe-ru-na for coughs, colds, nasal catarrh, stomach, bowel and liver disorders or any disease characterized by a catarrhal condition. If your suffering is the result of a catarrhal disorder try Pe-ru-na. It is a true, tried medicine.

SAW SOLDIERS OF FIVE WARS

John Pemberton Oak Has History Probably Unequaled by That of Any Other Tree.

Soldiers of five wars have been buried beneath the John Pemberton oak tree, Bristol, Virginia-Tennessee, nominated for a place in the hall of fame of the American forestry association at Washington by Mrs. H. F. Lewis, secretary of Virginia for the Daughters of the American Revolution. Under this tree Col. John Pemberton mustered his troops for the battle of King's Mountain. A marker has been placed on the tree by the Sycamore Sholas chapter, the American Forestry Magazine, in making the announcement. The soldiers of the War of 1812 met here. Then came the Mexican war and the old tree saw men again leave their homes to fight. Next came the struggle between the states, and the oak witnessed the drilling of men to fight one another in their own country. Then came the world war and again the veteran oak saw our boys answer their united country's call.

Any way is good that brings the desired results, and bad that is ineffective.

ORIENTAL TYPE IS POPULAR FAD

New York Fall Fashion Note of the TRIMMED VELVET SUIT

Suits Heavily affected by

Fall fashion has East problem. The Nile be the seater, and shall slings gorgeous hue be shall Helen of Tring and corded that the New York ev solution, t as seen in the smar avenue or in the tawd Bowery, are that nothing of feminine raiment will be it fall, or the coming season unless it bears some earmarks of the Orient. Said earmarks may be almost literal, for one eastern note is seen in earrings that dingle-dangle from many smart lids. Fall millinery fabric itself is exotic with rich stuffs such as abound in Arabian Nights lore. There are rich brocades of purple or dusky rose, lustrous satins of Algerian blue or Chinese crimson, stiff ribbons of metallic thread interwoven with flower, bird and butterfly designs, and even velvets embossed with rich embroideries in gold and silver threads or incrustated with seed pearls or rhinestones. And from these gorgeous hats hang earrings of wooden beads in startling hues, or of black jet, or even real sparkling gems.

Among the new fashions shown at the recent Chicago fashions revue was this charming mole trimmed chiffon velvet suit, hand embroidered.

Suits are heavily embroidered until they resemble the coronation robe of some fairyland prince. Wool and silk, metallic threads, jewels, colored hemp, or painted designs are used in working out this effect. Many of the suits and coats have the sleeves fairly embossed in embroideries, and all over embroidered bodices are very common. Some of the suits may be quite plain and simple in themselves, but are flecked by the Orient with a vest of some gorgeous fabric or a neck chain sold with the suit. Even appliques of black oilcloth are strewn over many garments, and hats are profuse with these oilcloth splashing in gay colors.

Problem Put Up to Private Kelly Was Something Over Which He Had Been Pondering.

Kelly had drawn a summary for being absent from post while on guard duty. "Where were you?" demanded the judge advocate, "when the sergeant of the guard passed just in front of your post?" "At the rear." "Where were you when the corporal passed just behind it?" "At the front." "And now," triumphantly, "where were you when the sergeant and the corporal walked around your post from opposite directions without seeing you?" "Judge," said Kelly hopefully, "that's been worrying me. Where was I?"—The American Legion Weekly.

The Basement Was Vacant. "You say," remarked a Brooklyn woman to a candidate for a job in her household, "that you were a month in your last place?" "Yes, mum," was the response. "A week with the lady on the top floor a week with the lady on the third floor, a week on the second and a week on the ground floor."

Good Intentions. "Did you ever fool with the stock market?" "No, I was in earnest. The stock market did the fooling."

Linen in Favor for Summer

Stanch Favorite Fabric in Loveliest Colors—Must Be Embroidered to Be in Style.

It is delightful to see that real linen, as transparent and filmy as the finest of handkerchiefs, is being worn once more, says Harper's Bazar. In the loveliest of colors it is abroad on summer sands and lawns, but never as an unadorned fabric; it is invariably embroidered either in fine white cotton braid, in matching wool, or in satin ribbon. The ornamentation may take the form of small motifs applied at equal distances, or of a single motif covering the entire front of the skirt, but ornamentation there must be. There is one other mode of adornment for these frocks—broad bands of perforation exquisitely embroidered often give the effect of entre-deux.

This renaissance of linen, however, has by no means submerged the popularity of organdie, which is used in many charming ways this season. Slips of black silk or satin, or of some color, are often worn under full length, sleeved tunics of organdie which are left open in the front. Be it white, rose or jade, the crisp transparent fabric is unutterably lovely when thus combined.

beards are also hung about the collars of many suits and coats, giving a bona fide "bearded lady" effect. Even the lines of the new dresses, suits and coats are taken from the East. The prevalent, sackish line of the new coats is a direct adaptation of the Arab's burnous. Dresses display the bolero as taken from the uniform of the Balkan soldier, and the flare line of the new suit coats is taken from the uniform of the Greek soldier. Evening gowns are very much a la Cleopatra. Black net embroidered in an all-over scroll pattern in black silk is very popular, and the gay oriental note is given by a rich girdle of velvet or satin in many colors. Many of these girdles and sashes extend into a train. Some of the trains are wired up so as to form a canopy behind milady. Dolores of the famous peacock gown is held responsible for this fad—another folly for which the Follies may be blamed.

Shoes and hose are embossed in color and crusted with jewels until an American lady on a New York hotel dance floor looks like a direct Egyptian importation or a lady from a cigarette package. "Dardanella" is the tune demanded by these dancers.

There has been a good deal of argument in connection with the all-important veil. There are certain women who, fondly imagining they are possessed of Spanish beauty, insist on draping themselves with floating veils on all occasions. The result is frequently very unsmart, for however graceful a floating veil may be, it is entirely unsuitable as an accompaniment to a tailored costume. Yet often the hard type of headgear, as felt or straw that suits our "tailleur" is greatly assisted by one of the new draped colored net or dyed lace veils. But it must be short and practical, and exploit the sartorial fitness of things.

Quakerish. The American designed street costume shows a Quaker influence in its soft gray coloring and demure lines.

hats. A broad-brimmed chapeau of deep rose organdie is encircled with a garland of white grapes; another of faintest maize is adorned with black cherries and with leaves of green crepe ribbon, while broad hats of red horse-hair bear a luscious burden of ripe red strawberries.

Daring Combination of Colors. A simply made evening dress in which a daring combination of colors appears, producing an effect that while sounding a bit lurid is made in this way: A lavender understrip is barred with very narrow purple velvet ribbon in the form of a lattice work, with here and there red roses caught to the lattice. Veiling this gay slip is a simple frock of old blue tulle made with a full skirt and sleeveless bodice having a V-shaped decolletage. A sash of dull blue girdles it at the normal waistline.

New Sashes. New sashes are of metal ribbons, broad molres or chiffon weight taffetas tied at a low waistline, with a perky butterfly or an oblong bow at the left side.

The Lost Fur

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

The snow was piled in great banks along Fifth avenue and the stages crowded through the street like a ship in an angry sea.

Bess Wilson had been standing waiting for a seat on one of these buses until she felt she could stand not another moment.

Getting to and from business under the horrible conditions of the city streets was a most trying ordeal each morning and evening, and Bess, together with two of her business friends, was getting weary of the struggle.

"It is only under such conditions as these that I ever regret being poor and having to work for a living," laughed Bess disconsolately as they vainly hailed the tenth bus that passed them on its uptown way.

"It wouldn't hurt some of these wealthy people to give us a lift either," commented Nesta. "They could so easily fill up their great cars and help traffic a little."

The words had scarcely fluttered from her lips when a big motor, driven by a well-poised young man, stopped before the three tired girls.

"Hurry of room in my back seat if any of you want a lift," he invited, with a sharp military touching of his cap.

"Oh," sighed Nesta, perhaps the most tired of the three. "I was just saying some one would be good enough to take us uptown."

Young Vincent Drake laughed and jumped out to let the girls in his great car.

Bess Wilson hesitated. "I go to the West side," she sighed. "You two go ahead. I will just have to wait for a No. 15 bus."

Drake invited her into the car while she was yet speaking.

"I can strike toward the West side at any angle," he told her. When they were all three comfortably and thankfully tucked in he turned laughing and impersonally for orders.

As they jolted and swerved along the traffic-bound, snow-encumbered avenue the girls took complete and most satisfactory inventory of the young man who so kindly rescued them from a more lengthy wait on the street corner. Each pair of eyes said, "I like him—don't you?"

Even had Drake been humbly inclined, he could not have dared giving his attention for so much as a moment to his three passengers. Driving was precarious and all his head and energy were well occupied. However, when Nesta and Helen were safely deposited amid the snowdrifts adorning their own neighborhood, he insisted on the third and lonely passenger changing from the back to the front seat.

"You'll get jostled back and forth across that big seat and, besides, I will have to shout for directions to your home."

So Bess found herself beside Drake minus the small fur piece she had unfastened from her throat. It had dropped on the seat and now, rather than trouble Drake, she let it remain until she should get out.

The trip over to the West side was without any special incident. Drake had cast an occasional swift glance at his tired little companion, but words between them were few. Perhaps Bess was too tired to do more than lift a pair of heavy lashes in acquiescence to some remark of Drake's, or it might be that the young man's remark that kept her so busy with this people all this week. Doctor orders that I keep out in the air as much as possible; so I took this means of combining duty with pleasure."

During the remainder of the drive to Bess' apartment door Drake was conscious that the girl's queer little personality was making its way through the silence she maintained.

"Thank you so much," she said softly as she stepped from the car. "I was very tired tonight and appreciate your kindness. Good-night."

She was gone so swiftly that Drake hardly realized her exit from his horizon. It was not until he had plowed his precarious way a few blocks beyond that he cursed himself for not having thought to get her address. He had a feeling that he could get to like Bess, but now he had lost his chance. She was a needle in a great haystack to him.

When Bess had climbed the three flights of stairs to the small apartment and removed her coat and hat, there was a quaint little smile hovering about her lips. She had not taken off her fur, because it was not on her neck to take off. It was in the back seat of young Drake's car. So the little smile stayed in Bess' eyes with persistent happiness while she prepared a nourishing dinner.

Next morning she made a stop on her way to business. It was at the "Lost and Found" desk of the leading daily paper.

The advertisement read: "Will young man who drove three girls home from corner Fifth avenue and Fifty-fourth street please return fur neck-piece left in car?"

As she turned away from the desk and started to make her way swiftly out lest she be late, she collided with a young man apparently bent on the same business as herself.

"Oh!" gasped Bess, breathless from the impact. Then, looking up, a beautiful flush swept her cheeks.

"So!" cried young Drake, with quite shameless elation, "then it was your fur?" He had jumped to speedy conclusions seeing Bess near the "Lost and Found" desk. "I am not sure I would have recognized either of the other two girls—had I bumped into them here," he added.

The implied compliment was rewarded by a lovely soft glance from the girl's eyes.

"You were going to advertise for the owner?" she questioned.

"Yes," young Drake told her, "and I don't mind letting you know I hoped you would be that owner. I have never had to return lost property before, so don't know how to do it." He looked expectantly at Bess for his solution.

"I would call it found property now," she said slowly, and decided then and there that she would like knowing young Drake much better than she already did. "Perhaps if you have time and still must stay out in the air you could stop by Fifty-third street some evening and deliver the fur. I am at that corner every evening about 5:15."

"I have time, I must stay in the air and I know you need your fur this cold weather. If tonight is all right I will be waiting."

"It is pretty cold," laughed Bess and the atmosphere surrounding her smile being anything but chilly, young Drake knew that every evening from then on would see him waiting at Fifty-third street. At least all evenings until Bess should cease to be self-supporting.

ADDITION TO NATIONAL MENU

Interesting Exhibit at Washington of Plant Foods That May Be Grown for the Table.

An interesting exhibit of fruits and vegetables was prepared by the office of foreign seed and plant introduction of the United States department of agriculture for the benefit of the agricultural editors who recently met in Washington.

Ranged upon the tables were specimens of cassava root, dasheen tubers, udo shoots, passion fruit, white sapote fruit, chayotes, and last, and best of all, a collection of highly colored and extremely fragrant mango fruits.

All the vegetables and fruits were fresh and all were grown in the United States at government stations. The culture of some of the vegetables and fruits represented at the exhibition is limited by climatic conditions to our southern states, but this feature will not bar them from the northern and western markets. The exhibition in this respect gave some idea of the increased range given to the American bill of fare by the introduction of these plants for commercial purposes.

The udo, a celerylike shoot of a Japanese vegetable, is not limited by climate and is now being grown successfully as far north as Nova Scotia. It is a salad vegetable of particularly pleasing taste and texture—something quite strange to the American palate.

The value of the exhibit is in the fact that each of its members has passed beyond the experimental stage of culture and may be regarded as an accepted agricultural resource.

ESCAPED AN OPERATION

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Many Such Cases.

Cairo, Ill.—"Sometime ago I got so bad with female trouble that I thought I would have to be operated on. I had a bad displacement. My right side would pain me and I was so nervous I could not hold a glass of water. Many times I would have to stop my work and sit down or I would fall on the floor in a faint. I consulted several doctors and every one told me the same but I kept fighting to keep from having the operation. I had read so many times of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped my sister so I began taking it. I have never felt better than I have since then and I keep house and am able to do all my work. The Vegetable Compound is certainly one grand medicine."

—Mrs. J. R. MATTHEWS, 3311 Sycamore Street, Cairo, Ill.

Of course there are many serious cases that only a surgical operation will relieve. We freely acknowledge this, but the above letter, and many others like it, amply prove that many operations are recommended when medicine in many cases is all that is needed.

YELLOWSTONE: First National Park

ground set aside for the people's use forever. The idea took. Congress established the Yellowstone National park, March 1, 1872.

The establishment of the Yellowstone as a national park after 65 years of "discoveries" was the first time such a thing had been done in all the world. It was the first national park in all the world. The United States set the example which practically all the civilized world has followed.

Uncle Sam's 1920 Yellowstone Bulletin is a fascinating booklet of 108 pages of text, maps and illustrations. It contains everything that the tourist needs to know, from how to get there to a time table of the geysers and from the different kinds of trout to the automobile regulations. The following items are taken from the introductory pages:

The Yellowstone National park was created by the act of March 1, 1872. It is approximately 62 miles long and 54 miles wide, giving an area of 3,348 square miles, or 2,142,720 acres. It is under the control and supervision of the national park service of the interior department.

The Yellowstone is probably the best known of our national parks. Its geysers are celebrated the world over because, for size, power, and variety of action, as well as number, the region has no competitor.

The Yellowstone National park is located in northwestern Wyoming, encroaching slightly upon Montana and Idaho. It is our largest national park. The central portion is essentially a broad, elevated, volcanic plateau, between 7,000 and 8,500 feet above sea level and with an average elevation of about 8,000 feet. Surrounding it on the south, east, north, and northwest are mountain ranges with culminating peaks and ridges rising from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the general level of the enclosed tableland.

The entire region is volcanic. Not only the surrounding mountains but the great interior plain is made of material once ejected, as ash and lava, from depths far below the surface. Geological speculation points to a crater which doubtless once opened just west of Mount Washburn.

There are five active geyser basins, the Norris, the Lower, the Upper, the Heart lake, and Shoshone basins, all lying in the west and south central parts of the park. The geysers exhibit a large variety of character and action. Some, like Old Faithful, spout at quite regular intervals, longer or shorter. Others are irregular. Some burst upward with immense power. Others shoot streams at angles or bubble and foam in action.

Geysers are, roughly speaking, water volcanoes. They occur only at places where the internal heat of the earth approaches close to the surface. Their action, for so many years unexplained, and even now regarded with wonder by so many, is simple. Water from the surface trickling through cracks in the rocks, or water from subterranean springs collecting in the bottom of the geyser's crater, down among the strata of intense heat, becomes itself intensely heated and gives off steam, which expands and forces upward the cooler water that lies above it.

At last the water in the bottom reaches so great an expansion under continued heat that the great heated water above can no longer weigh it down, so it bursts upward with great violence, rising many feet in the air and continuing to play until practically all the water in the crater has been expelled.

Nearly the entire Yellowstone region is made up of volcanic water phenomena. The geysers are confined to the central portion of the park, but in the middle of the park, where the hot water man separated point, mud volcanoes are frequent.

at Norris, and at Thumb the hot water has brought to the surface quantities of white mineral deposits which build terraces of beautifully incrustated basins high up into the air, often engulfing trees of considerable size. Over the edges of these carved basins pours the hot water. Microscopic plants called algae grow on the edges and sides of these basins, painting them hues of red and pink and bluish gray, which glow brilliantly. At many other points lesser hot springs occur, introducing strange, almost uncanny, elements into wooded and otherwise quite normal landscapes.

The Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone affords a spectacle worthy of a national park were there no geysers. Standing upon Inspiration Point, which pushes out almost to the center of the canyon, one seems to look almost vertically down upon the foaming Yellowstone river. To the south a waterfall twice the height of Niagara rushes seemingly out of the pine-clad hills and pours downward to be lost again in green. From that point two or three miles to where you stand and beneath you widens out the most glorious kaleidoscope of color you will ever see in nature. The steep slopes, dropping on either side 1,000 feet and more from the pine-topped levels above, are inconceivably carved and fretted by the frost and the erosion of the ages.

The forest of the Yellowstone National park cover an extensive area in the northern portion of the park, being especially abundant along the west side of Lamar river for about 20 miles above its junction with the Yellowstone. One traversing the valley of the Lamar river may see at many places numerous upright fossil trunks in the faces of nearly vertical walls. These trunks are not all at a particular level but occur at irregular heights; in fact a section cut down through these 2,000 feet of beds would disclose a succession of fossil forests. That is to say, after the first forest grew and was entombed, there was a time without volcanic outburst—a period long enough to permit a second forest to grow above the first. This in turn was covered by volcanic material and preserved, to be followed again by a period of quiet, and these more or less regular alterations of volcanism and forest growth continued throughout the time the beds were in process of formation.

The Yellowstone National park is the largest and most successful wild animal refuge in the world. It is also, for this reason, the best and most accessible field for nature study. Its 3,300 square miles of mountains and valleys remain nearly as nature made them, for the 200 miles of roads and the four hotels and many camps are as nothing in this immense wilderness. No tree has been cut except when absolutely necessary for road or trail or camp. No herds invade its valleys. Visitors for the most part keep to the beaten road, and the wild animals have learned in the years that they mean them no harm. To be sure they are not always seen by the people in the automobile stages which whirl from point to point daily during the season; but the quiet watcher on the trails may see deer and bear and elk and antelope to his heart's content, and he may even see mountain sheep, moose, and bison by journeying on foot or by horseback into their distant retreats.

GERMANS ARE TIRED OF WAR

British Officer in Cologne Finds Only Professional Soldiers Anxious for It.

CHANGES IN CITY ON RHINE

People Submit Calmly to British Rule—Street Car Officials Are Now Almost Servile—Business Picks Up.

Cologne.—The British army appears to have acquired a strong grip on this section of occupied Germany, and the soldiers get along very well with the people.

There is more business in Cologne in commercial and trade circles than in the other large German cities, which is owing to the business transacted with England and Holland.

Fight Ali Gone.—The British officers of senior rank with whom I have conversed here say that they do not believe there is any probability of the nation wanting to fight for many years to come.

speaks German fluently and has traveled all over the country in the last year, said, in speaking on this subject: "At the present time Germany could put a well-equipped army of 600,000 officers and men into the field if they could be organized to fight together.

"The French military authorities do not agree with this view in regard to the Germans and believe that they are secretly organizing to avenge their defeat.

"The Germans have plenty of airplanes, arms and ammunition. Out of 28,000 field guns they possessed when the armistice was signed they have destroyed only 2,000 so far.

"There is one thing certain to any sane person who knows the conditions existing here at the present time: that is, if Germany is to pay the indemnity, or any portion of it, in the near future she must be supplied with raw materials to start the factories to work and with foodstuffs for the people.

"There is a good deal of talk among the better class in favor of a constitutional monarchy on similar lines to that of Great Britain, but that would be impossible so far as any of the German princes are concerned.

Lovers Tie Feet; Plunge Into Sea

Hilo, Island of Hawaii.—Strapped together as they leaped into the sea to fulfill a double suicide pact, Uye Tafaburo, a Japanese of North Kohala, and Makino Kuyuyama, wife of another Japanese, partly failed in their endeavor.

Pineluka saw the pair, with ankles and bodies tied together, leap as one into the sea from the rocks below Haul, on the North Kohala coast.

Later Tafaburo's body was recovered by Hawaiian divers. The woman's infant child, wrapped in her obi, or girdle, was found hanging on a tree not far from the spot where she had failed in her attempt at suicide.

ernment of the country was concerned, and it was not until Queen Victoria had commenced her long reign that this was accomplished finally by Lord Melbourne, who was prime minister.

It was a strange sight to visitors in Cologne on Saturday, June 5, to see the British troops with massed bands parading the cathedral square in honor of King George's birthday.

Before the war Cologne was very prosperous and had a large garrison. There is a great change in the bearing of the railway and street car officials toward the ordinary people.

There is a little more meat in Cologne than in Berlin, which is due to the supplies coming up the Rhine from Rotterdam for the British army, and the bread is of a better quality.

New York.—Mrs. C. J. Goff, 87 years old, tried out flying at Camp Edwards, Sea Girt, N. J., and gave it her entire approval.

"Am I too old?" she asked Lieut. Paul Micelli as she presented herself in front of the flyer's plane.

"Not a bit," he assured her, and carefully strapped her in the passenger's cockpit. The plane roared along the ground, shot into the atmosphere and climbed zenithward.

"Was that ten minutes?" Mrs. Goff asked as she was helped out. She said she had also had a similar experience on Sunday.

THE HEDLEY SCHOOLS

The first month of the schools closed today Oct. 1st, and it has been a satisfactory month. The weather has been good and there was no account of cotton picking cases this last month.

The enrollments for the month are as follows: 1st, 80; 2nd, 89; 3rd, 41; 4th, 40; 5th, 41; 7th, 48; 8th, 48; 9th, 20; 10th, 20; 11th, 20; 12th, 20. Total of all pupils, 385.

The classes are now organized and doing good work, and showing much enthusiasm and school spirit.

That the high school has 64 students in it, is a compliment to the intelligence and progressive spirit of the people of Hedley and the whole district, for there are very few schools in the state of the size of Hedley that have so many young people in the high school.

On the school yard the pupils show much interest in school sports, especially basket ball, and there are some good strong players among the girls and boys and a few match games are being arranged with the schools of nearby towns, to be played on Friday afternoons after school hours, or on Saturdays.

We hope to improve the school ground equipment in the near future, so as to encourage a greater number of children in healthful school yard amusements and physical exercises.

In the last three weeks of this month we have had an abundance of good water for the pupils to drink, but we were short on water the first week of the month on account of no water to run the windmill.

Parents are invited to visit the schools at any time, and confer with the teachers about the work and welfare of the children.

The eleventh grade this year has only three pupils in it: Emer Pool, Margaret Hightower and Ojoteal Moreman. And the 10th grade has twelve students in it as follows: Alma Hall, Madeline Bell, Fay Cooper, Lois Nipper, Primaley, Margaret Cooper, Hefner, Ila Pool, Veiman, Eula Curd, Cytha Curd, Simmons. These young people make a fine 10th grade and while the 11th grade is one of the best classes for any town should be made a fine 11th grade.

Next Monday we will publish the school year book for all the 9th and 8th grades.

What Would a Wagon Be Without Wheels?

IT'S admittedly a foolish question. A wagon wouldn't be a wagon without wheels. It would be a sleigh or just a box. The wheels make the wagon go. They are, therefore, the most important part of a wagon. And they stand the roughest usage of any part of the wagon. They carry a double load—a load on the hub and a load between the rim of the wheel and the ground. To stand this strain they have to be stronger than any other part of the wagon. And the hub must be the strongest part of the wheel—it is the foundation of the wheel.

Weber Wagon hubs are made of the best grade "A" material, and are shaped with great care by expert workmen. The Weber hub is equipped with a collar that keeps grease from working in between the skein box and hub. This prevents loosening of spokes by the action of pressed-in grease. Weber wheels are also provided with extra large skeins and because of the wide bearing surface the skein box cannot cut into the skein.

When hauling heavy loads, you can always depend on Weber wheels. Let us help you Weberize your hauling.

"Doctor!" cried the girl. "You've come to tell us he has been found!"

"Sorry, Sweetheart—not yet. But he has been seen. We went out to City Park and—"

"We traced him to an inbound car," broke in Mrs. Kirkland. "We thought—"

"—Thought he might have come home," her husband completed the sentence.

"You're sure he hasn't, my dear?" breathlessly questioned the lady.

"Will—home?" exclaimed Amy.

"Why, Ellen and I have been right in by the telephone ever since Charlie rushed out to go to City Park—No, no, no, upstairs! She's back here.—Come into the library. You both look hot. I'll have Thillie bring lemonade."

Amy, who was nearest the parlor, heard a step behind her and glanced over her shoulder. "Oh!" she cried. "Why did you come down?— Goodness! you're pale!— that look!— You're ill!"

"Will!" screamed Ellen. Amy was recoiling, but the other girl advanced toward the dazed young man in the doorway, her arms imploringly outstretched. "Dearest! forgive me— please, please forgive me! I was cruel, but I did not realize— Forgive me and give me your ring again, dearest!"

"My God!" groaned the young man. He put his hand to his head. "Is it all coming back again? That hallucination upstairs—now this!"

"His—his voice too!" gasped Amy. "It is because he is—is insane?"

"Nonsense!" boomed Dr. Kirkland. "He looks rational—only dazed. He has shaved."

"Ah! that is it!" agreed Mrs. Kirkland. "That accounts for—"

"That and the terrible strain of the night—and this change of clothes which he managed to get hold of," confirmed her husband. "My dear boy, why do you look at us that way? Have no fear. I admit my mistake. You need not return to the sanitarium. Had I known how it would affect you—"

The young man's face relaxed a line. "Not return, doctor? You really think it unnecessary?"

"Quite! quite! Never fear. You shall stay quietly at home, if I have to mortgage my house to secure your bail."

"My bail?" ejaculated the young man. "Surely the bank has not charged me with—"

"Have you forgotten that already?" pitifully broke in Ellen. "Dearest, can it be you have forgotten me too?"

"Forget you, darling?" he protested. "Never! Shaking off his enervating daze, he sprang to her with ardent eagerness and caught her to him in an impassioned embrace. "Ellen! darling Ellen!" he cried. "To have you again after all these months! You are no hallucination—you are real! I feel your arms about my neck; your heart beats against mine!"

"Will, Will! my Will!" she ecstatically babbled. "You, yourself—yourself! You've come back to me, your own real self!"

"To be sure—to be sure," affirmed her father. "This complete change of expression, manner, intonation—absolute proof of full restoration to his true personality."

"O-o-o-oh! Is that it?" sighed Amy, but she continued to gaze at her restored brother with brows peaked and a troubled look in her brown eyes.

She burst into tears and ran to fling herself on the shoulder generously left free for her by Ellen. He met her with an affectionate kiss.

"There! This is better, isn't it?" he asked, squeezing her with the arm that was not about Ellen and patting her vigorously on the back.

"Y-yes," she penitently agreed. "Of course you and Ellen—I'd never have believed I could be such a self-lash pig!"

He laughed at the absurdity of the confession. "What? You funny little Toodlums. Who was so anxious last year for me to be the lucky man?" He kissed the blushing forehead of his blissfully happy fiancée.

"I don't care," Amy sought to defend herself. "You've been jealous of Charlie. You know you have."

He frowned. "You've not encouraged that fellow! I warned him—"

"Don't worry," she interrupted. "Ellen has settled him."

"Ellen?" he queried.

"My dear boy!" interposed Mrs. Kirkland. "You are still leaving us—"

"No, no, dearest," Ellen reassured him. "She is all right."

"Then why isn't she here?"

"But she has not yet returned from the Springs," replied Mrs. Kirkland. "She is down at the Springs?"

"Don't you remember?"

"My dear," said the physician, "you and the girls forget that he knows nothing of what has happened to his other personality, nothing whatever."

"Other personality?" sharply queried the young man. "What do you mean, Doctor?"

"Keep calm, my boy. It is a not unusual occurrence—nothing to worry about—a condition easily curable with proper treatment. You may find it difficult to believe, but ever since we met you at the station—"

"Met me? I didn't see you, I—"

"In your other personality," explained the physician.

"And took you home to dine with us," added his wife.

"You didn't remember even me," reproached Ellen.

"Nor me, when doctor brought you home," chimed in Amy.

He stared at Doctor Kirkland in consternation. "Heavens! You all talk as if— Delusions! more delusions, when I was so sure!"

"Now, now, my boy; there is nothing serious about your condition," replied the physician. "It is only that—"

"More delusions!" muttered the frightened young man. "It's all a daze—a dream—ever since I gave that attendant the slip—caboose, sleeper, daycoach—a blurred jumble. Yet it seemed—yes, I did take the Park Hill car. Then the park; then—that's all dark—nothing till I was lying there in the old brick-yard pit, the blood trickling down my face, but my head clear—"

"Oh! you fell! you hurt your head!" cried Ellen. "Let us see! Papa, look at it!"

"But it's nothing, nothing at all, darling," replied her lover. "Or rather, it's everything—the luckiest bump man. "That saves me! . . . All those months, those dreary awful months—worry, worry; groping, trying to remember. Yet it was there, the memory, down under. I knew it was there. It was that which compelled me to keep trying to escape from them—time after time. And when at last I did, it led me in that half-blind daze all the way home—it led me to the pit."

"The pit?" questioned Mrs. Kirkland.

"In the abandoned brickyard beyond City Park. . . . The moment I came to, and looked around, I recognized the place. I went straight to the hole where I had hidden the bonds."

"You hid them out there?" exclaimed Ellen.

"Yes. All flashed back into my mind—all about that day when Benn brought me down from Pueblo—the fear that drove me half insane when he flippantly suggested that we might get away with the bonds by smashing and setting fire to the car and pretending the bonds were burned up in the wreck."

"He did that? Charlie did that?" cried Amy. "But he is a detective!"

"Yes, I found that out afterwards, Toodlums. I suppose he was trying to test my integrity. I can't believe worse of him. But I was then in a bad way, and what he suggested completely unbalanced me. I was certain he meant to steal the bonds from me. I must have been half insane. To save them from him, I rented a safe deposit box and pretended to him that I had put them in it; but instead I went out past City Park and wandered about until I found the hiding place in the clay pit."

"So that was it," remarked Amy. "He did not reply. He was engrossed in gazing into Ellen's tender gray eyes. The fond parents beamed upon the blissful couple. Amy sighed and stole out of the room, unheeded by the others.

Ellen snuggled closer to her lover. "You fell into the pit," she recalled the mishap. "Your poor dear head!"

"Only a little cut," he reassured her. "I wiped the blood off my face, and hurried home with the bonds to see Momsey and Amy before rushing down to the bank. I did not wish to see you until I could tell you I had restored the bonds. There was no one in the front of the house; so I went direct to the bathroom. I washed my head and started in to my room—Who is the man visiting here?"

"Visiting here?" repeated Mrs. Kirkland. "What made you think that? There has been no man staying here except yourself, Will."

"No one!" he cried. "You say no one? Then I'm not cured!—it was an hallucination!"

"Here, here, keep quiet! This won't do," ordered Doctor Kirkland. "What was it? Explain."

The young man sought to repress his shuddering. "I—when I—when I opened the passage door there was a—something across at the mirror—it—"

"Pooh!" ridiculed the physician. "Your own reflection."

"Then why—why was it's back to me?"

"It's back!" quavered Ellen. "Oh, Will!"

"Pooh! pooh! Nothing to it, my boy," insisted the physician. "Merely a freak of vision. Think no more about it. Amy—What! Where is Amy?"

"Indeed, where—" murmured Mrs. Kirkland, gazing about the room. "She has gone out. . . . Perhaps she has gone to call Thillie. Would it not be well to telephone the good news that Will is safe home?"

"Yes, yes, to be sure—police, bank, sanitarium—all!" shouted her husband, and he rushed out to the telephone.

"They'll come here, dearest," whispered Ellen. "You shall not leave me!"

"How could I?" he rapturously replied.

Mrs. Kirkland sank into a chair to dab her tearful eyes and smile upon the lover.

"Quick! Is it Hallucination? Tell me." that ever happened. I don't know, but it must have jarred loose something in my brain. Ever since I came to, my head has been as clear as crystal. The very first moment I recognized the pit as the place in which—"

"Bump! shock!" boomed Doctor Kirkland. "Proves my diagnosis; functional lesion, or possibly a blood clot—physical shock— My boy, you're all right now—nothing to fear. All that is past—your amnesia, dissociation, this secondary personality that has caused you to fall to recognize us all these days."

"But I have not failed to recognize you. I knew you all at once."

"Why, Will," replied Amy. "Don't you really remember? You've been with us ever since two evenings before last."

At the statement his face became vivid with renewed alarm and consternation. He thrust the girl from him, to grope desperately inside his waistcoat. The others stared apprehensively at these signs of frenzy. From his bosom he jerked out a large bulging earth-stained envelope and waved it frantically at Doctor Kirkland.

"Look! look!" he panted. "Quick! Is it—hallucination? Tell me!"

The physician seized and ripped open the envelope. "Hey! what?" he exclaimed—"Bonds. . . . The bonds!"

"A-a-h!—Then they are real. . . . real as you, darling Ellen!"

The girl met the eager lips that bent down to her upturned face. "Yes, yes, dearest," she whispered. "Now you're your real self."

The physician's eyes widened in rapid countenance. "The bonds are real!"

CHAPTER XV.

The Man Himself.

Pensive and depressed, Amy went out through the side door and around into her garden. He had not looked at her—all his loving glances had been for Ellen.

So lost was she in the despondency of her mood that she failed to heed the hurried footsteps in the path behind her until they were very close. Vexed at the intrusion, she started to move forward across a small opening. From behind her came a low, vibrant call: "Amy!"

She stopped, trembling. It was his voice—yet so different. That deep, ardent note!—his voice as he had spoken to her in the night. Bewildered, quivering with mingled joy and fear, she timidly looked about. He stood before her, unshaded, no longer pale and haggard, but erect, ruddy, and smiling. "That look! . . . that look! . . . how it changed

Rush of Bachelors to Europe for Wives

WASHINGTON.—America, only nation in which men outnumber women, now is supplying husbands for women of Europe, where there are not enough males to go around, reports to the immigration bureau indicate.

Approximately 343,000 persons, mostly men, sailed from the United States in the year ended with June, according to reports to Commissioner General Caminetti of the immigration bureau.

Furthermore, single European women and women widowed by the war are rushing to the United States in the hope of securing husbands, reports gathered from reliable sources indicate.

"A majority of the immigrants to the United States are women," Caminetti said. Immigrants totaled 605,000 during the year. Women greatly outnumber the men in England, France, Italy and in nearly all European countries. This is partly a result of the war. After the armistice thousands of English women sailed to Australia and other colonies, numbers of them frankly stating they were going to find husbands. Some had become engaged to Australian soldiers on leave in England during the war. Others said they hoped to be married in Australia."

In the United States men have always outnumbered women. The 1970 census showed there were approximately 2,000,000 more men than women fifteen years of age or over.

The number of single men outnumbered single women by more than 5,000,000. Now the discrepancy between the sexes is far more pronounced than in 1910, the present census is expected to show.

Bachelors in the United States total more than 25,300,000. It is estimated, while spinsters probably do not exceed 19,500,000.

This Piece of News Is Important If True

WHEN Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman of Illinois was practicing law in Macomb, Ill., he lived for a time at a hotel there that was endeavoring to maintain certain standards of class and tone. Summer came, with its openwork shirtwaists, humidity, resort folders and sleeping-under-blanket lars. The dining room in the hotel got the noonday sun, and Sherman's table was in a particularly hot part of the room. He found himself thoroughly uncomfortable for his coat on, and so he removed it, one noon, and hung it over the back of his chair.

The shirt he thus exposed may not have been as natty as those shown on young men who ride in motorbobs in the shirt and collar advertisements, but it was clean and the colors were conservative. Within a moment or two after Sherman took off his coat, however, the proprietor of the hotel went to him and told him in a low tone that eating in one's shirtsleeves was contrary to the pomp and dignity of the establishment.

Sherman glared at him and stated that men in shirtsleeves are, for the most part, the toilers and represent the bulwark of this great nation.

To this the proprietor merely smiled tentatively and declared that while all that Sherman said might be true, yet shirtsleeves didn't go in the dining room of his hotel.

Then Sherman issued an ultimatum. He said he would finish his meal in his shirtsleeves unless stopped by the police, and that in future, if the objection continued, he would eat at another hotel or on a street corner—that in any event he would not wear a coat again at mealtime until September 15.

And as soon as he had finished Sherman went out in search of a hotel where shirtsleeves were not barred. When he had found one, Sherman made up his mind that he would give the proprietor no cause for regret. He resolved to make himself just as neat and attractive as possible. So he went straightway to a notion store and bought himself the finest pair of nickel-plated, coiled wire sleeveholders they had in stock.

Uncle Sam "Counts Noses" of His Seals

THE annual census of the seals, now being taken by the bureau of fisheries, is expected to show about 600,000 of the animals, or three times as many as when the government undertook the custody of them a half score years ago.

Although the seal spends much of its life at sea, its habits make the census taking comparatively easy. Hugh M. Smith, commissioner of the bureau of fisheries, explains the "count of noses" is of importance to prevent "blind killing" of the animals for their fur, possibly resulting in their extinction.

Under present government control, Mr. Smith asserts the seals are increasing about 10 or 12 per cent in number annually. Last year's count showed 550,000, of which 26,000 were killed for their pelts.

In the middle of Bering sea, lying 40 miles apart, are two islands—St. George and St. Paul—the only land to which the seals ever resort. Every spring they visit the islands to raise their young, leaving in the fall to winter in the north Pacific, and it is during the summer that the census is taken.

The killing of the animals is also done in the summer, this under law being confined to the surplus males. Last year lack of labor resulted in 10,000 fewer animals being killed than government officials had planned. Japan and Great Britain, along with the United States, share the revenue produced from the seal kill, a treaty giving this country 70 per cent of the animals, with the other two countries each receiving 15 per cent.

"In the old days," says Mr. Smith, "when 100,000 seals were being killed annually the government obtained $10 a skin, while now we are getting $140, which nets us about $120 a skin. Increase in the value of furs and the different method of conducting the business explains this."

Besides the sale of pelts, the government is operating a fertilizer plant on the islands for disposing of the carcasses, from which there also is extracted an oil used for dressing tops of automobiles.

Sounds Altogether Too Good to Be True

PAPER suits, much in vogue in Germany and Austria, soon will make their appearance in the United States, and if inquiries to the department of commerce can be taken as an indication of the probable demand they may become even more popular in the lower-the-cost-of-living campaign than was the lowly overall a short time ago.

Cable orders for samples of the suits have been dispatched by the department of commerce, it is announced, and when the samples arrive they will be displayed not only in Washington but also in the local markets.

The bureau of commerce has no interest in the matter.
