Mrs. Linton Tells How Helpful Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is at This Period

Denver, Colorado.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Com-pound forseven, ears and I cannot tell you and I cannot tell you the good it has done me. It is good for young and old and I always keepa bottle of it in the house, for I am at that time of life when it calls for Lydia E. Pinkham's help. My husband saw your ad. in the papers and said the papers and said

You have taken everything you can think of, now I want everything you can think of, now I want you to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound!' So I let him get it, and I soon felt better and he told me 'I want you to take about six bottles.' So I did and I keep house and do all my own work and work out by the day and feel fine now. I tell every one about feel fine now. I tell every one about the Vegetable Compound, for so many of my friends thought I would not get well."—Mrs. R. J. Linton, 1850 West 33d Avenue, Denver, Colorado.

After reading letters like the above, and we are constantly publishing them, why should any woman hesitate to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound if she is in needof belp? It brings relief where other medicines fail, Paper for Dark Room, Modern photographic plates are so sensitive that often a screen of red glass in the dark room is not sufficient to prevent fogging. A French photographic expert gives the following pre scription for making a paper screen, which is 50 per cent more effective than red glass: Take unsized paper and dip it thoroughly in 100 cubic centimeters of water containing six grams of tartrazine. Then pass it over blotting paper and dry it. To render the coloring matter more adherent, a little gum arabic may be added to the solution.

Houston, Texas—"I was in a terribly run-down condition of health after a siege of ptomaine poisoning, and then the in-fluenza. I could not seem to regain my strength and was really not able to do my housework. I knew I needed a good tonic and builder and remembered how my folks used to regard Dr. Pierce's remedies in my girlhood days, and then I decided to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. After taking the second bottle I found it was doing me a world of good, strength returned rapidly and I felt better in every way. I am glad indeed to recommend the medicine that did me so much good and do not hesitate to give this statement."—Mrs. Gertrude Sell, 1236 Rutland St.

Formaldehyde as Disinfectant.

The efficacy of this disinfectant de ends largely upon temperature and humidity. In ordinary summer weather it is an excellent surface disin fectant. When the thermometer or hydrometer is below 65 the power of formaldehyde is reduced. In the win-ter time the room should be warmed artificially and the humidity raised by opening a steam radiator or by boiling a kettle of water in it.

SYNOPSIS.—General factorum in the house of her sister Ina, wife of Herbert Deacon, in the small town of Warbleton, Lulu Bett leads a dull, cramped existence, with which she is constantly at enmity, though apparently satisfied with her lot. Bobby Larkin, recently graduated high-school youth, is secretly en-Booby Larkin, recently graduated high-school youth, is secretly enamored of Deacon's eider daughter. Diana. The family is excited over the news of an approaching visit from Deacon's brother Ninian, whom he had not seen for many years. Unexpectedly, Ninian arrives. Thus he becomes acquainted with Lulu first and understands her position in the house. To Lulu, Ninian is a much-traveled man of the world, and even the slight interest which he takes in her is appreciated, because it is something appreciated, because it is something appreciated, because it is something new in her life. At an outing which the family takes, Ninian and Lulu become confidential. He expresses his disapproval of her treatment as a sort of dependent in the Deacon home. Diana and Bobby, in the course of "soft nothings," discuss the possibility of ings," discuss the possibility of eloping and "surprising the whole school." Lith has awakened to pleasant possibilities concerning Ninian's intentions toward herself.

July. When, on a warm evening a fortnight later, Lulu descended the stairs dressed for her incredible trip to the city, she wore the white waist which she had often thought they would 'use" for her if she died. And really, the waist looked as if it had been planned for the purpose, and its wide, upstanding plaited lace at throat and wrist made her neck look thinner, her forearm sharp and veined. Her hair she had "crimped" and parted in the middle, puffed high-it was so that hair had been worn in Lulu's girlhood. "Well!" said Ina, when she saw this coiffure, and frankly examined it, head well back, tongue meditatively teasing at her lower lip. For travel Lulu was again wearing Ina's linen duster-the old one.

Minian appeared, in a sack coatand his diamond. His distinctly conmouth and cleft chin gave Lulu once more that bold sense of looking-not at him, for then she was shy and averted her eyes-but at his photomuch as she would. She looked up little doubling chin. at him openly, fell in step beside him. Was he not taking her to the city? Ina and Dwight themselves were going because she, Lulu, had brought about this party.

"Act as good as you look, Lulie," Mrs. Bett called after them. She gave no instructions to Ina, who was married and able to shine in her conduct, Dwight was cross. On the way to the station he might have been heard to take it up again, whatever it was, and his Ina unmistakably said: "Well, now, don't keep it going all the way there"; and turned back to the others with some elaborate comment about the dust, thus cutting off her so-called lord from his legitimate retort. A mean advantage.

The city was two hours distant, and they were to spend the night. On the train, in the double seat, Ninian beside her among the bags, Lulu sat in the simple consciousness that the people all knew that she too had been chosen. A man and a woman were opposite, with their little boy between them. Lulu felt this woman's supenority of experience over her own, and smiled at her from a world of fellowship. But the woman lifted her evebrows and stared and turned away, with slow and insolent winking.

Ninian had a boyish pride in his knowledge of places to eat in many cities-as if he were leading certain of the tribe to a deer-run in a strange wood. Ninian took his party to a downtown cafe, then popular among business and newspaper men. The place was below the sidewalk, was reached by a dozen marble steps, and the odor of its griddle-cakes took the air of the street. Ninian made a great show of selecting a table, changed once, called the waiter "my man" and rubbed soft hands on "What do you say? Shall it be lobster?" He ordered the dinner, instructing the walter with painstaking gruffness.

"Not that they can touch your cooking here, Miss Lulu," he said, settling himself to wait, and crumbling a Luiu's hour. She was proof against any shadow. "Say, but you look tremendous to-night," Dwight observed to her.

Understanding perfectly that this was said to tease his wife, Lulu yet flushed with pleasure. She saw two women watching, and she thought: "They're feeling sorry for Ina-no-body talking to her." She laughed at everything that the men said. She passionately wanted to talk herself. "How many folks keep going past,"

By ZONA GALE

At length, having noted the details of all the clothes in range, Ina's isolation palled upon her and she set herself to take Ninian's attention. She therefore talked with him about himself.

"Curious you've never married, Nin," she said. "Don't say it like that," he begged.

'I might yet." Ina laughed enjoyably. "Yes, you might!" she met this. "She wants everybody to get married, but she wishes I hadn't," Dwight threw in with exceeding ran-

They developed this theme exhaustively, Dwight usually speaking in the third person and always with his shoulder turned a bit from his wife. It was inconceivable, the gusto with which they proceeded. Ina had assumed for the purpose an air distrait, casual, attentive to the scene about them. But gradually her cheeks began to burn.

"She'll cry," Lulu thought in alarm, and said at random: "Ina, that hat is so pretty-ever so much prettier than the old one." But Ina said frostily that she never saw anything the matter with the old one,

"Let us talk," sald Ninian low, to Lulu. "Then they'll simmer down. He went on, in an undertone, about nothing in particular. Lulu hardly heard what he said, it was so pleasant to have him talking to her in this confidential fashion; and she was pleasantly aware that his manner was open to misinterpretation.

In the nick of time the lobster was served.

Dinner and the play-the show, as Ninian called it. This show was "Peter Pan," chosen by Ninian because the seats cost the most of those at any theater. It was almost indecent to see how Dwight Herbert, the immortal soul, had warmed and melted at these contacts. By the time that all was over, and they were at the hotel for supper, such was his vex-face, its thick, rosy flesh, thick pleasurable excitation that he was once more playful, teasing, once more the irrepressible. But now his Ina was to be won back, made it evident that she was not one lightly to overgraph at which she could gaze as look, and a fine firmness sat upon the

They discussed the play. Not one of them had understood the story.

Why Not Say the Wedding Service?" Asked Ninian.

The dog-kennel part-wasn't that the queerest thing? Nothing to do with the rest of the play. "I was for the pirates. The one

Ninian thought this might have been out of compliment. Ina wished This was a mean alvantage, which that Monona might have seen, confessed that the last part was so pretty that she herself would not look; and into Ina's eyes came their loveliest

Lulu sat there, hearing the talk about the play. "Why couldn't I have said that?" she thought as the others spoke. All that they said seemed to her apropos, but she could think of nothing to add. The evening had been Nothing could so much as cloud to her a light from heaven-how could she find anything to say? She sat in a daze of happiness, her mind harfly operative, her look moving frem one to another. At last Ninian looked at her. "Sure you liked it, Miss Lulu?" "Oh, yes! I think they all took their parts real well." It was not enough. She looked at

Dwight Herbert savored his rarebit with a great show of long wrinkled

"Excellent sauces they make here-excellent," he said, with the frown of an epicure. "A tiny wee bit more Athabasca," he added, and they all laughed and told him that Athabasca was a lake, of course. Of course he meant tabasco, Ina said. Their entertainment and their talk was of this sort, for an hour.

"Well, now," said Dwight Herbert when it was finished, "somebody dance on the table." "Dwightie!"

"Got to amuse ourselves somehow. Come, liven up. They'll begin to read the funeral service over us." "Why not say the wedding service?"

sked Ninian. In the mention of wedlock there was always something stimulating to Dwight, something of overwhelming humor. He shouted a derisive endorsement of this proposal. "I shouldn't object," said Ninian.

'Should you, Miss Lulu?" Lulu now burned the slow red of her torture. They were all looking at her. She made an anguished effort to defend herself.

"I don't know it," she said, "so I can't say it."

Ninian leaned toward her. "I, Ninian, take thee, Lulu, to be my wedded wife," he pronounced. That's the way it goes!"

"Lulu daren't say it!" cried Dwight. He laughed so loudly that those at the near tables turned. And, from the fastness of her wifehood and motherhood Ina laughed. Really, it was ridiculous to think of Lulu that way Ninian laughed, too. "Course she don't dare say it," he challenged. From within Lulu, that strange Lulu, that other Lulu who sometimes fought her battles, suddenly spoke

"I, Lulu, take thee, Ninian, to be my wedded husband."

"You will?" Ninian cried. "I will," she said, laughing tremulously, to prove that she, too, could join in, could be as merry as the rest.
"And I will. There, by Jove, now have we entertained you, or haven't we?" Ninian laughed and pounded his soft fist on the table.

"Oh, say, honestly!" Ina was shocked. "I don't think you ought to-holy things-what's the matter, Dwightle?"

Dwight Herbert Deacon's eyes were staring and his face was scarlet.

"Say, by George," he said, "a civil wedding is binding in this state."

"A civil wedding? Oh, well-" Ninian dismissed it.
"But I," said Dwight, "happen to be a magistrate."

They looked at one another foolishly. Dwight sprang up with the indeterminate idea of inquiring something of some one, circled about and returned. Ina had taken his chair and sat clasping Lulu's hand. Ninian continued to laugh.

"I never saw one done so offhand." said Dwight. "But what you've said is all you have to say according to law. And there don't have to be witnesses . . . say!" he said, and sat

Above that shroud-like plaited lace, the veins of Lulu's throat showed dark as she swallowed, cleared her throat, swallowed again,

"Don't you let Dwight scare you," she besought Ninian. "Scare me!" cried Ninian. "Why, I think it's a good job done, if you ask Lulu's eyes flew to his face. As he laughed, he was looking at her, and now he nodded and shut and opened his eyes several times very fast. Their points of light flickered. With a pang of wonder which pierced her and left her shaken, Lulu looked. His eyes continued to meet her own. It was exactly like looking at his photograph. Dwight had recovered his authentic

"Oh, well," he said, "we can inquire at our leisure. If it is necessary, I should say we can have it set aside quietly up here in the city-no one'll be the wiser."

"Set aside nothing!" said Ninian, "I'd like to see it stand." "Are you serious, Nin?"

"Sure I'm serious." Ina jerked gently at her sister's

"Lulu! You hear him? What you going to say to that?" Lulu shook her head. "He isn't in earnest," she said,

"I am in earnest-hope to die," Ninian declared. He was on two legs of his chair and was slightly tilting, so that the effect of his earnestness was impaired. But he was obviously in earnest.

They were looking at Lulu again. And now she looked at Ninian, and there was something terrible in that ok which tried to ask him, alone, about this thing Dwight exploded. "There was a fellow I know there in the theater." he cried. "I'll get him on the line. He could tell me if there's any wayand was off.

DRESS UP CANNED VEGETABLES TO OBTAIN BEST VARIETY FOR FAMILY

Best Canned Peas or Beans Will S tir Family to Rebellion if Always Cooked in Same Way.

Turnips, carrots, cabbage, onions, potatoes, parsnips, kale, celery, and winter squash-for a good many winter months these are the only fresh vegetables that appear on the table, so that for the sake of variety it is necessary to fail back on the stock of canned vegetables. Even the best canned string beans or peas, however, will stir the family to rebellion if always served in exactly the same way.

No matter how canned vegetables are served, they should be boiled theroughly after they are poured from the can and before they are tasted.

Scalloped canned tomatoes are not only good in themselves but help use up stale bread. Canned sweet potatoes may be mashed and baked, or in layers with slices of apple between.

A little onion juice or celery salt, or a bit of green pepper or celery tops, or a tiny piece of bay leaf, improves the flavor of many vegetable dishes. The United States Department of Agriculture has a number of other suggestions for varying the appearance and flavor of canned vegetables.

Canned asparagus may be cut up and spread in layers in a baking dish, added just before serving. with bread crumbs in between, sprinkled with salt, pepper or paprika, seasoned with the liquor from the can, and baked. Okra or egg-plant scalloped in this way is equally delicious. Scalloped canned corn is good, and is improved by a little chopped onlon and pimento. A corn pudding may be made by adding milk and egg to canned corn.

Fresh or canned turnips cooked with fresh or canned celery may be an innovation to many bination may be served with white sauce, or after being covered with a white sauce in a baking dish, it may be sprinkled with grated cheese, bits of butter, seasoning, and bread crumbs, and browned in the oven.

Carrots diced and mixed with canned peas or string beans cut in small pieces, are one of the best known and best liked of the vegetable mixtures. Peas or small lima beans in beet or turnip cups, are attractive for a change; and lima beans with corn, need no introduction. Pastry trimmings baked in patty pans or toes may be mashed and baked, or mufin tins make good cups for made into sweet potato pie, or baked creamed vegetables, which are also good when served on toast.

Reheating canned string beans with a ham bone or a piece of bacon and then serving them with vinegar makes them seem an entirely different vegetable. A sour sauce can be made for canned string beans by blending one tablespoonful of fat, the liquor from a pint can, one tablespoonful of vinegar, salt and pepper to taste. After simmering the beans in this sauce for several minutes a well-beaten egg is

FACTORS AFFECTING COST OF BREAD LOAF

Quality of Flour and Price of Much Importance.

Where Different Materials Are Pur chased in Small Quantities Cost Is Much Higher-Use of Milk Increases Expense.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Tests in the experimental kitchen of the United States Department of Agriculture show that the quality of flour used, the retail price paid for it, the method of buying, whether in small quantities or by the barrel, the bread formula used, the kind and price of fuel, the sort of oven used, and the number of loaves made at one time are all factors affecting the final cost of the homemade loaf of brend In case of a batch of five loaves for which materials were bought in small quantities and which were baked in an minsulated gas oven when gas cost $1.20 a thousand feet, a single pound loaf was found to cost 7 1-3 cents, The recipe called for shortening, sugar and an exception to this statement. Their compressed yeast. Milk was not used taste is less acceptable in this way. in the formula tested and would have increased the cost of the bread.

A batch of eight loaves was made by a more economical formula, and all materials, though bought at retail prices, were purchased to better advantage. "Strorg" flour which gives a high bread yield was selected, and it was bought by the barrel, as the farm woman world be likely to buy it. Dried yeast was used, shortening was omitted, and the baking was done in a kerosene range. Under these conditions the cost of a one-pound loaf was found to be only 4 1-5 cents. The details and figures obtained in these tests are available upon application to the department.

ECONOMY IN USE OF CEREALS

Relatively Low in Price and Furnish Some Tissue-Building Materials and Body Fuel.

Because cereals are relatively low in price and because most of them furnish some tissue-building materials, as well as body fuel, the United States Department of Agriculture considers it tub with olive oil. The oil is sprinkled a good economy to use them freely, on a fiannel cloth and the spot rubbed and sometimes in place of part of the with this. Warm water and soap is

BREAD CAUSES INDIGESTION

When It Does So It Is Because of Lack of Essential Characteristics.

Hot bread is often thought to cause indigestion, but the United States Department of Agriculture says that when it does so it is because it lacks some of the characteristics of good bread. not because it is hot. Large or thick biscuits, whether raised with yeast, baking powder or soda, are likely, if cooked only a short time, to be soggy on the inside, and this, when it happens, is the objection to them, rather than the fact that they are served hot.

MEAT BONES FOR FLAVORING

Those From Veal Especially Useful With Cream Sauces and Soups-Pork is Excepted.

Meat bones, especially those from veal, that have been slightly browned in cooking, as in the case of steaks, chops, or roasts give a particularly good flavor to cream sauces and soups. This is a suggestion made by the United States Department of Agriculture, which adds that pork bones are
