SCHOOL CLOSING EXERCISES THIS WEEK

Last Sunday morning at the Methodist church Dr. Geo. S. Slover, President of Clarendon College, preached the Baccalaureate Sermon to the Graduating Class of Hedley High School. It was an excellent and inspiring discourse, and heartily enjoyed by an audience that packed the church building.

Rev. B. W. Dodson delivered a splendid sermon to another large audience at the same church Sunday night.

Tuesday evening the Music and Expression pupils of Miss Muffet Sims appeared in Recital in the High School auditorium. The program was entertaining throughout, all the young folks reflecting credit upon themselves and their instructor. The large auditorium was crowded, and each number brought forth hearty and prolonged applause.

The Senior Play last night and the Graduating Exercises scheduled for tonight will be given attention in next week's paper.

BUNGALOW MAKES HOSPITABLE HOME

Simple Structural Design Gives It an Appeal All Its Own.

SUITABLE FOR FARM OR TOWN

Possibilities for Individual Treatment Are Afforded in Both Exterior and Interior—Good for Hot Climate.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

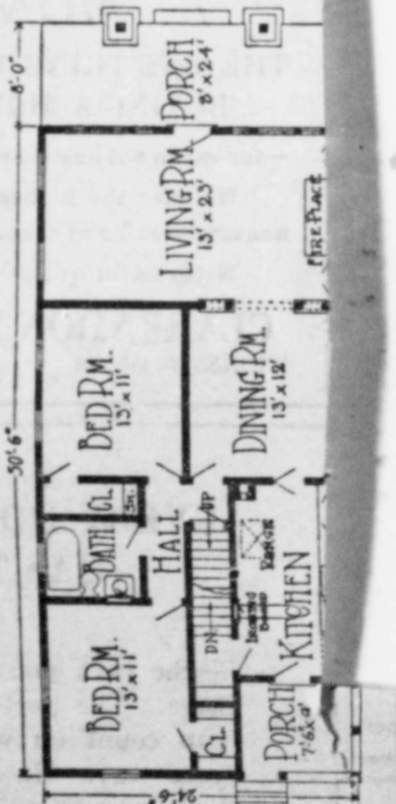

This is a type of bungalow which is the outgrowth of typical American requirements, and suggests itself particularly for those localities where the sun is strong and hot over long intervals in summer. For this reason it should commend itself to the intending home owner in the warmer sections of the country. It would make an ideal small farm residence, and not because of looks alone, but because it is of fairly simple structural design which could be developed satisfactorily even where there was a lack of skilled building labor.

The front porch has possibilities and could be screened in to make an outdoor living room. From it we enter into the living room, a well-proportioned room, 13 feet by 23 feet, has a fireplace flanked by built-in cases. More and more people are turning to realize the pleasure and advantage that comes from books, and encouraging to note the many plans which come to attention in provision has been made for the book and a fireplace surely of appealing combination.

A colonnaded doorway leads to living room to the dining room. The wall is set out a bit, gaining extra feet for the double window making the room seem larger than 13 feet by 12 feet it really is. Looking from the dining room is the view. Observe the built-in convenhere; a wall ironing board and kitchen cabinets that flank the window at the side. The sink is right below the double kitchen window. If this house were being built for a farm residence, it might be a good idea to turn the design around, giving a view of the road from the kitchen window, and letting the porch come at the side.

Only the woman who is the mistress of the house isolated on a farm away from near-by neighbors can appreciate what it means to have this glimpse of the road and passersby. It breaks in on the monotony of the day very gratefully.

There are two bedrooms, each 13 feet by 11 feet. There could be extra bedrooms upstairs. It will be seen that provision has been made for a stairway, reached from the door in the dining room. It would be a convenience in hot climates to have a sleeping porch come under the long dormer at the side—the same extension is sufcient to ward off rain or heavy winds. A word as to the outer finish of this house may be timely. It will be observed that shingles have been used. Drop siding or ship lap could be used to good purpose, and staining would give a pleasing exterior, in combination with the white-painted trim.

Inside, a plain papered, painted or calomined wall would be preferable for the living room. The small windows shown in the illustration merely represented the personal likes of the owner of this house. It would be more satisfactory were the windows to come to the usual length. With a fireplace of the colonial type, and which can be reasonably purchased in a stock design from most lumber dealers; case-ment-windowed bookcases at either side, cream-tinted walls, white mouldings, baseboard, window and door trim, and mahogany-finished doors, and blue velours drapes at the windows, one could have a room which would be a really comfortable place to rest in. The same decorative treatment carried through the house, with a variation in the wall tinting of each room, would make it a never-ending source of pleasure to the occupants and an inviting, agreeable place for the visiting friend or guest.

STUCCO MAKES NEW HOUSES

Skillful Application Creates New Style—Hides Old Features of Design.

Standards of architecture have changed greatly in the last two or three decades. The overornamentation of past years is now replaced by simplicity of design. In most cases it is the exterior appearance of a house that no longer pleases.

In most cases the framework or skeleton of the house is perfectly sound and can be made to conform with the latest fashion in architecture. The stucco finish is applied to the exterior walls, covering up old-fashioned features and creating a new, modern appearance.

Many of the old brownstone or sandstone houses are remodeled in this way. Not only does the stucco protect the soft natural stone, which may show signs of disintegration, but the whole appearance of the house is modernized.

The building, when remodeled with stucco, gains a distinctiveness and individuality which sets it apart from its neighbors, and these new qualities are bound to increase its renting or selling value.

In the remodeled house exactly the same texture finishes and wide variety of colors may be obtained as in new stucco work—in fact, to all outward appearance, if the remodeling is skillfully done, the house becomes a new one to such an extent that even the most expert eye cannot detect that an old house exists under the new surface.

Shocked the Old Dear.

He—But, my dear young woman, don't you ever wash?

She—No, only scrape and scrub.

And there was no one to tell the dear old thing they were merely two artists discussing technical methods.—Boston Transcript.

ORANGES EQUALLY VALUABLE FOR OLDER CHILDREN AND GROWN-UPS

Orange Juice Is Excellent for the Kiddies.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Orange juice supplies vitamins and valuable mineral matter necessary for proper growth and physical well being. Physicians now recommend it even for babies because it provides vitamin C, the vitamin in which milk is most likely to be lacking and with- out which scurvy and other disorders often occur. Oranges are equally valuable for older children and grown-ups, and the United States Department of Agriculture recommends their use at any meal. At breakfast it is usually convenient to serve either the whole fruit or the plain juice, but there are other simple ways of using them that give variety to the meals and do not involve long cooking such as might lessen the value of vitamin C.

Delicious Beverage.

For example, a delicious and nutritious beverage may be made by mixing two-thirds of a glass of juice with the white of one egg beaten to a froth. An orange gelatin dessert also is delicious and easy to make. Allow about 2½ cups of orange juice, which is not heated. Soften one ounce (one-half box or one envelope) of gelatin in half a cup of cold water, mix with one cup of boiling water to dissolve the gelatin thoroughly and add two tablespoonfuls of sugar or more if the orange juice is unusually sour; when the mixture is cool add the juice of half a lemon and the orange juice. Strain into a mold, and set in a cold place to harden. If desired the jelly may be served with plain or whipped cream. Orange jelly made in this way but molded in an orange rind basket is an attractive delicacy to send an invalid. An orange snow may be made of the above mixture and the whites of two eggs beaten stiff. Before the gelatin mixture begins to set, beat it gradually into the egg whites, then allow it to cool and set. The egg yolks can be used to make a custard sauce to serve with this dessert instead of cream.

Makes Pleasant Variety.

Oranges introduced into fruit cocktails, fruit salads, or fruit tarts, bring this food increasingly often on the table. A simple layer cake with filling and frosting made of confectioners' sugar and uncooked orange juice is another popular dish that uses a small quantity of the fresh juice. The mother who is anxious to have her family eat oranges as often as possible will think of additional ways in which orange juice can be included in the ordinary diet to give the meals a pleasant variety and a greater food value.

APPROPRIATE DRESS FOR ALL OCCASIONS

All Outer Clothing Should Be Selected From Standpoint of Their Suitability.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

All outer-clothing, men's and boys' suits and overcoats, women's and girls' suits and topcoats, should be selected from the standpoint of good materials and workmanship, their suitability to the wearer's needs and becomingness of line and color. Careful attention should be given not only to the quality of material but to the general workmanship, cut, fit, manner of finish of seams, pockets, belts and buttonholes—all of which count for service.

Simple one-piece dresses of wool for cold weather and of silk for summer are as suitable for the rural woman who she appears in public at market or meetings as for business women. The advantage of silk in summer is the saving in laundry work. The wearer may further preserve the fresh appearance of the dress throughout the summer by frequent changes of collars and cuffs, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests.

The same type of dress is appropriate also for the afternoon wear of the woman who is at home. For hard work she will probably prefer an inexpensive one that can be washed easily and frequently.

For use with the one-piece dress, a topcoat is necessary. The latter may often need to serve the purpose of everyday and dress wear, in which case it would be wiser to buy a raincoat for use in bad weather, to save wear and tear on the other coat. If one cannot afford both a heavy and a light-weight topcoat, it may be better to buy one of medium weight and depend upon an underjacket or a piece of fur for extra warmth. For general wear one-piece dresses to a suit. Suits, however, have a legitimate place in the woman's wardrobe, especially when combined with a waist of the same color. A good plan is to alternate the buying of the more expensive garments; for instance, not to buy a topcoat and a suit during the same season.

Blouses and separate waists for women are best made of washable materials, such as voile, batiste, handkerchief linen, crepe de chine, crepe georgette and washable silks, or madras and gingham for hard wear. The cotton materials require more frequent laundering than the crepes. Voile can be worn much longer without pressing than can any of the other cottons. Handkerchief linen is not very satisfactory because it crushes easily. For general wear, the tailored waists made of batiste, crepe de chine, wash silk or broadcloth are especially suitable; simple blouses of sheer materials are also suitable when careful attention is given to detachable linings or to undergarments.

LETTUCE SOUP IS EXCELLENT

Three Foods That Are Sometimes Wasted Can Be Made Into Most Nourishing Dish.

Skim milk, stale bread and the outer leaves of lettuce—three foods that are sometimes wasted—can be made into a nourishing soup. The skim milk is a little richer even than whole milk in protein and, if used undiluted or practically so, as it is in the following recipe, it makes valuable protein dishes. It contains all the lime, too, of the milk.

Lettuce Soup.

1 head lettuce, or 1 large slice stale bread
the equivalent in bread
the outer leaves Butter or other fat
if desired
1 small slice onion Salt and pepper
2 quarts skim milk

Put the lettuce and onion through the meat chopper with the bread to save the juice. Put into a double boiler with the skim milk and cook until the lettuce is soft. To avoid overcooking the milk soften the lettuce in a small amount of the milk and cook the remainder only enough to heat it and to make the soup smooth. Add fat, if desired, and the salt and pepper.

Other green vegetables such as string beans, spinach, asparagus or celery can be used instead of lettuce.

OMELET THAT IS DIFFERENT

Dish for Sunday Supper or Lunch That is Satisfying and is Quite Easily Prepared.

Sunday supper or lunch is a meal which must sometimes be expanded to admit unexpected company. A dish that is satisfying and easily made from materials usually kept on hand is recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Peanut-Butter Omelet.

4 tablespoons milk 1 teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons pea- 4 eggs
nut butter

Mix the peanut butter with the milk, add the well-beaten yolks of the eggs, and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Cook the omelet in the usual way, and serve it folded on a hot platter with a cream or tomato sauce.

Household Questions

Never allow grease to burn on the outside of the frying pan. Scour it thoroughly every time it is used.

Hang a curtain rod across a corner of the room you iron in. Place shirts and house dresses on hangers and hang them on the rod. When finished the rod can be taken off hooks and put away.

Add sugar to your apple sauce after it is removed from the stove and it will remain light in color. Sugar cooked with the sauce turns it brown.

CLARENDON DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The largest District Conference, perhaps, in the history of the Clarendon District convened in the Methodist church at Hedley April 23 to 25, under the leadership of Dr John R Henson, presiding elder. Every preacher in the district was present to represent his charge and the laymen were there in large numbers. Dr G W Shearer, presiding elder of Amarillo district, was a welcome visitor and preached a great sermon of spiritual power at 11 a. m. Tuesday. He prefaced his sermon by saying, "This is the largest attended District Conference I have attended in many years."

The pastor, Rev S. H. Young, and his fine flock of loyal Methodists made the occasion a memorable one by their splendid entertainment and big hearted hospitality. The session of the conference was full of interest and business from beginning to end; and, most of all, it was deeply religious and spiritual and as Bishop Fitzgerald used to say, "It had the spiritual glow."

The opening sermon Monday night was preached by the undersigned. It rained all day Tuesday, the first day of the conference, but the large, spacious church was well filled thru out the day. All the reports given by pastors and laymen had in them the note of victory. Led by that prophet of optimism, John R Henson, it was natural that nothing but the spirit of optimism and progress could be manifest at any time. Sweeping revivals in many charges, in which several hundred souls have been saved and added to the Church, the membership thru out the district revived and a forward movement along every line of Christian activity was reported, and unmistakable signs confirming the same were clearly manifest on every hand. Methodism in these parts is already at the front. She is one of the largest and most influential denominations in every way. Our church in Clarendon district is already very strong, and it is getting stronger every day. The Educational, Centenary, Sunday School, Epworth League, Missionary and other interests of our great church were given right of way and fully magnified in the reports and discussion by preachers and laymen.

The conference took high ground in discussion and resolution on the subject of Tithing. A number of fine talks were made on the importance of urging our people to "bring all the tithes into the storehouse," etc., and in this way solve all financial church problems.

Rev. J. T. Griswold delivered a splendid address on Christian Education Tuesday night.

Rev. W. H. Terry, Conference Sunday School Secretary, made a strong address on the great need of a higher standard of work in our schools and the importance of bringing every Sunday School up to the standard. Rev. R. M. Hockaby of Lockney represented the Epworth League and its missionary work, and also the memorial fund for two of our recent deceased missionaries, Harry Hughes and John F. Caperton. The address was much appreciated. The presiding elder and others urged the preachers to do all in their power to secure, as soon as possible, the payment of Centenary pledges. The conference licensed eighty young men to preach. Four were recommended for admission on trial, as follows: S. I. Ming, F. O. Garner, R. C. Brogan and A. D. Moore.

The following lay delegates to the next Annual Conference were elected: H. B. Hill, Mrs. Sid Baker, B. E. Derrett, D. C. Moore, Mrs. P. E. Yarborough, Mrs. J. E. Boyd, Mrs. W. R. Silvey, N. R. Tisdale. Alternates: E. Elland, W. C. Veasy.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the Rev. John R. Henson, our beloved presiding elder, will have completed his quadrennium on the Clarendon district at the approaching Annual Conference; and since the law of the church makes it impossible for him to continue in this capacity;

Be it resolved, that we, the members of this District Conference, hereby express our sincere regret to part with this efficient and godly servant of the church. And that we put our highest approval and endorsement upon his work and leadership. He has been cheerful, aggressive, evangelistic, painstaking and orthodox in his administration.

We pray God's richest blessings upon him and his family, and trust that he may have larger fields of usefulness in the future.

Signed: J. T. Griswold, J. B. McCarley, S. H. Young, C. C. Wright, J. T. Hicks, A. B. Davidson.

Few men have ever been more sincerely and universally beloved than J. R. Henson. He is unique, original, sympathetic, whole hearted, brotherly, deeply religious, a man among men, a fine preacher and a great character.

The conference pledged itself to send a large attendance to the Summer Bible School to be held at Clarendon May 29 to June 5. A very fine program has been prepared. A large attendance from three or four districts is expected. It will be an intellectual and spiritual feast. Several of our greatest religious leaders in the Southland will be present; specialists in different departments of church work. Noted speakers and preachers of National reputation will be on the program.

Grandma Rogers, one of the landmarks of Northwest Texas Methodism, and a saintly mother in Israel, addressed the conference. Her message, full of love and apostolic zeal, and the closing song, "Blest Be the Tie," with an old fashioned handshaking, lifted every one a little nearer heaven.

The next District Conference will be held at Wellington—A. B. Davidson, in the Texas Christian Advocate.

WOMAN SICK TWO YEARS

Caused by Troubles Women Often Have—Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Medina, New York.—"I had a great deal of trouble such as women often have, and this affected my nerves. For over two years I suffered this way, then I read in the 'Buffalo Times' about Lydia E. I am very much better and feel justified in praising the Vegetable Compound to my friends and neighbors who suffer from anything of the kind."—Mrs. Wm. H. ADKINS, 311 Erin Road, Medina, N. Y.

Baby's Stomach Was Puffed Up Tight With Gas

"I was fearful we were going to lose our little boy. He couldn't eat anything and his little stomach was all puffed up with gas and felt tight and hard. A neighbor told me about Teethina and I stopped everything else and gave him that and now he has 16 teeth and is the jolliest little fellow in the world," writes Mrs. C. E. Grimes, Colquitt, Ga.

Here is another striking instance where much suffering and anxiety could have been avoided had Mrs. Grimes known of Teethina and had given it at the first sign of trouble.

Pretty Afternoon Frocks; Depicts Ornate Handbags

AFTERNOON frocks express a most exquisite mood in pastel-colored crepes. Quality, color and classic lines are the three graces which go to make up the charm of these ravishing gowns. Beauty unadorned is the master touch, attained through manipulation of fabric. A very handsome bag can be fashioned by deft fingers from wide moire ribbon, corded and shirred as shown in the picture to the left. If one has the genius of the milliner, a hat of the same ribbon can be evolved, and this two-piece set will enhance the costume's appearance.

Two handsome bags are shown in this illustration centering interest in leather versus rich fabric. The mode to the left is black patent leather with cutouts revealing a white kid foundation.

Persian coloring and design are the charm of the heavy tapestry bag to the right.

Many of the newer beaded bags take to Egyptian motifs and colors. The design is usually set in a relief of color on a ground of steel or copper colored beads.

The introduction of lace yokes and sleeves matched in color to the silk crepe of the dress finds further elaboration in the addition of several flourishes of lace on the skirt portion. It's the little things which count. A somber black dress is relieved of

DAIRY POINTS

IMPROVE CAPACITY OF COWS

Testing Associations Aid Dairyman in Culling Out Undesirable Animals in Herd.

The chief agencies for improving the capacity of dairy cows are the cow testing association and testing for advanced registration, according to state dairy extension specialists. The former aids the farmer-dairyman to size up his herd, cull out the undesirable animals and get his dairy upon a business basis. The testing of purebred cows for advanced registry sorts out the most desirable cows and bulls for the improvement of the breed, and furnishes large numbers of bulls that are available to farmer-dairyman for mating with cows selected through the use of the cow testing association.

In the Holstein-Friesian Register, the largest of all the breeds, 90,000 cows and 6,600 bulls have been admitted. Among these animals are found cows which have produced over 1,000 pounds butterfat in one year. The highest yearly record for butter is held by May Walker Ollie Homestead who produced 1,523.2 pounds. The cow holding the world's milk record is Segis Pieterje Prospect, which in one year produced 4,672 gallons, or an average of over 51 quarts a day.

SEE DAIRY PROFITS IN 1923

Good Year is Seen Ahead by Iowa Expert, but Much Depends on Individual Farmer.

From all indications, farmers who milk cows in 1923 have a good year ahead, says C. B. Finley, an Iowa dairy expert. However, profits will depend much upon the individual farmer.

The extent to which it will be possible to cash in on the good year ahead will depend largely upon ten things, which are as follows:

1. Get a field of alfalfa or clover large enough to supply the herd.
2. Have ample silage.
3. Feed rations suited to the cows' needs.
4. Weed out the unprofitable cows.
5. Weigh the milk each day.
6. Feed according to production.
7. Make your barn more sanitary and comfortable.
8. Supply the best quality of product to the consumer and the creamery possible.
9. Put your herd on a business basis by being in a cow testing association.
10. Buy a sire from good producing purebred ancestry.

BASIS FOR DAIRY INDUSTRY

Don't Wait in Meadows for Cow to Back Up to Be Milked—Waste Converted into Milk.

"Don't sit down in the meadow and wait for the cow to back up to be milked—go after the cow." The basis for the whole dairy industry is the cow, and if farmers are going to utilize to the best advantage the quantities of roughage that annually are wasted on every farm they must go after the cow.

There is no way to convert the corn, the hay, the clover, the straw, and the abundance of other forage into a marketable form so quickly and so economically as by feeding to the dairy cow. She works day and night, summer and winter, week days and Sundays, in flood and drought, to convert the unmarketable waste of the farm into a finished and valuable product of human food.

The first thing is to get the cows. Profits are then assured.

STEADY INCOME FROM DAIRY

Distributes Marketing Throughout Year and Gives Employment in the Dull Months.

The dairy herd returns a constant income to the owner, distributes the marketing period throughout the year, gives employment for the winter months which would otherwise be largely wasted from a productive standpoint, and reduces the crops to their most compact form. If dairying continues to be managed by men of industry and foresight it cannot fail.

ADVANTAGE IN KNOWING COW

Small Breeder is in Better Position to Increase Milk Yield Than Large Owner.

In the matter of knowing the individuality of the cows the small breeder has an advantage over the man with a large herd. The man with 100 or more cannot know his animals so well nor hope to get so much out of them. The old saying, "Know thyself," is no more excellent than is the one, "Know thy cows."

PLAN TO AVOID DIRTY MILK

Where Cows Are Kept Indoors for Greater Part of Day Pay Attention to Bedding.

Dirty milk is most often caused by the accumulation of dirt on the cow when confined to the stable for the greater part of the day. While the cows are kept indoors most of the time, more attention should be given to the bedding, and the manure should be removed frequently.

"By all means, Inspector," said Bertrand yawning. "I am a mere amateur. All caves look alike to me. Mind the briars; they prick most acerbously."

Arkwright's inspection of the cave was brief. "It is empty, but the place has been used, and recently," he reported. "Strange they should not have chosen it; it is the best hiding place in the pit."

"Perhaps they only recently discovered this desirable residence, and were about to shift their quarters," suggested de Jussac. "No doubt. If a few watchful policemen ambush themselves efficiently during the dark hours, they will catch the amiable consort of that cutthroat yonder. One hopes so. It is painful to the law-abiding to know that malefactors are at large. Particularly when they are females."

Inspector Arkwright looked at him dubiously, and made no reply. Billy, also, when the two rejoined him, eyed de Jussac with extreme thoughtfulness, and had some difficulty in suppressing his emotion. He was still mounting guard over Jake, who lay upon his improvised stretcher and gazed up at the sky with a singularly beatific smile. De Jussac offered him a cigarette, which he accepted silently.

"I think," said Inspector Arkwright, "I'll call on you two gentlemen to assist me and we'll get him out of this. I want the place cleared."

It was not an easy matter to carry the gate and its burden out of the pits. By the time they had achieved it, the ear arrived from Jervaux and wound its way over the flat turf. Jake was lifted into it.

"I must trouble you to accompany me, Mr. Spencer," said Arkwright. "Anything to oblige the police," said Billy, squeezing himself into the front of the car. It was a tight fit.

The journey to Stanhoe was made almost in silence. When the car arrived at the police station Jake was duly disposed of, while Billy cooled his heels in a dingy waiting room that had been whitewashed some time during the period when Sir Robert Peel was reorganizing the force. Presently Inspector Arkwright joined him. The inspector closed the door, and regarded Billy with a sphinx-like but faintly humorous eye.

"I think, Mr. Spencer," he said quietly, "that you have no very high opinion of my intelligence."

"Wrong there," said Billy, politely. "I don't know that I'd class the Stanhoe staff with the world's great thinkers. But I've heard a lot about Scotland Yard, and, if I may say so, you come fully up to sample."

"There is no harm now in my telling you that I know precisely what your movements have been, Mr. Spencer. I know that it was you, and not the prisoner, who stayed at Ivy cottage as the tenant of Mrs. Sunning. I know that your companion, at the same time, stayed next door. I have also a fairly accurate comprehension of the reasons which led you to accept temporary employment in the Jervaux abbey household. I did not, till now, know who you were. But the papers you gave me establish your identity. And that makes all the difference."

Billy was silent. "I am, you see, in possession of the facts."

"There's one recent fact," thought Billy, "that you're not wise to."

"Your affairs, Mr. Spencer, though somewhat complicated, do not call for the intervention of the police," said Arkwright, with the ghost of a smile, "and no official cognizance will be taken of that matter; unless something unforeseen occurs. I am a thief hunter and not a captivator of rash young men. What I know, I shall, doubtless, keep to myself."

Billy felt an enormous sense of relief, combined with a sharp twinge of conscience.

"The irresponsible couple who ensconced themselves at Ivy cottage," said Arkwright, with a dry smile, "made a good deal of trouble for themselves."

"Inspector," said Billy, "did you ever do a fool thing?"

Inspector Arkwright twinkled. "A good many, when I was your age. And, sometimes, even now. However, I wish you good fortune. I am not ungrateful to you for your share in the running to earth of Mr. Jake. It is the duty of the civilian to assist the police. The woman will still be brought to book. And I shall call on your formidable employer before I leave. Good-by, Mr. Spencer."

Billy walked out of Stanhoe police station and made his way back to the abbey on foot.

"Gee!" he said pensively. "But that last stunt was awful dangerous! Of course, I see well enough what happened. But it was just a lucky accident neither Almee nor that blamed nuisance of a woman was seen getting away. The luckiest sort of accident. Inspector Arkwright isn't the fool I took him for, by a long way. I wonder how much he knows? But he can't know that."

He shook his shoulders. "It came near being a real crash—just when everything had come right. If it put the wind up me worse than anything yet. But there's nothing to be scared at now."

Despite the excellent turn affairs had taken, Billy's mind was troubling him. He had the air of a small boy whose raid on the jam cupboard is about to be discovered. When he arrived at the abbey there was no sign of his partner. After lingering for some time near the most likely haunts, Billy sighed and retreated to the garage.

He had not been there long when Almee's face appeared furtively round the angle of the door.

"Hello!" she said, stepping inside. She halted, and they looked at each other dubiously. Almee was decidedly pale, her eyes pathetic and rather frightened.

"I couldn't help it, Billy!" she said suddenly. "Couldn't help what?"

"You saw us getting away, didn't you? And the girl—and the Sphinx? Has Monsieur de Jussac explained to you?"

"I haven't seen him," said Billy, quietly, "but I guess it isn't hard to see how things were. You might as well tell me, though."

Almee, very gloomily, described her encounter with Calamity Kate.

"I know," she concluded, shakily. "You're thinking me an idiot. I'd no right to take such a risk—with the police there and everything. I—I suppose she's a thief. But she's done such a lot for that man, and she was so miserable. He's her husband. And I couldn't help thinking about you and me, Billy, and how I should feel if you—"

She broke down and began to cry quietly.

"That's how it was. Are you very angry with me?"

Billy gasped and, stepping quickly to her, pulled Almee's hands away from her face.

"Angry—with you?" he exclaimed, holding them tight. "I was afraid you'd be mad with me! You ought to be. Why, I did the same thing, and I'd no excuse! I ought to have made sure that woman was run in."

"You—did the same thing?" said Almee, staring.

"Yes! Of course, I never dreamed you were in the pits, or I wouldn't have done it. That crippled crook in the cave got over me. They've got him for five or ten years; and he's earned it. But he was all broken up about his wife. Neither of them deserve a scrap of sympathy. But—the poor devil was in such a state, that somehow I fell for it. He never whined on his own account; he was thinking of his wife. It got me on a raw spot. He knew I must have tracked him through her—he begged me to say nothing about her."

"And I didn't. I gave him that much rope. Never told the police I'd seen her close by. Running down women is their job. If it's got to be done, let them do it. They haven't any choice—but I had. All the same," said Billy, "if I'd dreamed for a moment you were in the pits, I'd have chased fifty female thieves sooner than you should take a chance! I ought to be horsewhipped for riskin' it."

"I think it was fine of you, Billy!" cried Almee with sparkling eyes.

"No!" he said. "It's you that were fine."

"This," said Almee, "is what comes of growing sentimental. Neither of us would have dreamed of making such fools of ourselves a week ago. What will become of her? Will she get away?"

"I don't know or care. If she made the road, there's juice enough in the Sphinx to take her a hundred miles from here. I only hope they don't find her with the machine. But I'll bet they don't. She'll get clear and cover her tracks—she's the sort that does."

"But the Sphinx," said Almee, with intense remorse, "our Sphinx, Billy! I've lost her for you!"

Billy laughed. "We'll mighty soon have another—there's two hundred landed at the docks last week—same model; and a factory being equipped to build the new model over here. Mass production."

"What! You never told me it had got as far as that! But—I wanted the old one, Billy—our Sphinx."

"Maybe you'll have her yet. Only I'm not going to let her make trouble for you. We're pretty near done with trouble."

"But how—"

"Never mind. I'll tell you some time. Gee! how you'll laugh! But I'm giving you the cinch—it is so."

"Billy!" she cried, "isn't that splendid! Though I—I—"

"Well?"

"I haven't been worrying so much about it lately," said Almee swiftly. "But it's good to know. And what's going to happen now?"

"I know one thing that's going to happen now," said Billy, and he kissed her with—as de Jussac would say—empressment.

"Billy!" said Almee a little breathlessly. "Aunt said we had to be decorous!"

"So we are," replied Billy. He kissed her again.

Half an hour later Billy, passing the main porch, encountered Lady Erythea.

"Spencer," she said, "I was about to send for you. The person from Scotland Yard, who has just left, informed me that he had not only captured one of the thieves, but that you had rendered him invaluable assistance. It really seems a remarkable ending to the affair—but it does not surprise me in the least! I said from the first that you were more likely to make a success of this problem than all the police in the country, if they would only consult you. I was perfectly right—my judgment, in fact, is never wrong."

"Yes, my lady."

"I am quite capable of reading between the lines," said Lady Erythea with suppressed triumph. "It is my conviction that the capture of this abominable thief was due entirely to you. The police are imbeciles."

Billy shook his head. "On the contrary, Inspector Arkwright is an uncommonly clever man, my lady," he said respectfully. "As for me, I had—luck. Luck's a queer thing. Even cleverness won't always beat it."

Lady Erythea looked a little out of her depth. "In any case," she continued, "I am very pleased that this absurd suspicion of the police regarding you is cleared up, and that you come out of the affair with such credit. It confirms my opinion of you."

Lady Erythea contemplated Billy's tall figure and serenely handsome face with a certain regret.

"I am sorry," she said, "that you are leaving Jervaux."

Billy smiled. "The week I have spent in your ladyship's service," he said gently, "has been the happiest time of my life."

Lady Erythea was not given to expressing her emotions. But her austere face positively tinged a faint pink color with pleasure.

CHAPTER XXVI

"Where is My Daughter?"

"Why can't we stay on for another week, Billy?" said Almee, leaning a little further out of the study window, duster in hand. "Go to Aunt—the Missus, I mean—and ask her to let you keep the job. She'll jump at it."

"Nothing doing!" said Billy sternly.

Almee sighed. The hour was nearly noon on the day following the Odyssey of the rag pits. No news had been heard of Calamity Kate, who appeared to have drifted out of history on the Sphinx. A brief interval of peace had settled upon Jervaux.

"There'll be a vacancy for a parlour-maid an' chauffeur," announced Billy with decision. He was standing on the gravel just outside the window. "All the bother with the police is wiped off the slate. It's only a fool that backs his luck too far. And it's time to quit the game and turn the lights out."

"That means Aunt has got to know who I am, and who George is; and—and all the rest of it."

"There's no way out of that, I'm afraid."

"I know. But I do rather funk it, Billy. The worst if it is poor old George is in a tighter place than I am."

"We'll have to see her through it."

"Don't you think," said Almee, distinctly worried, "that it would be best if George arranged to cut short her visit and went home—and Amy Snooks gave notice, or just cleared out. You as well. Then we—we could explain it all by letter, or something. I think it would look better that way."

Billy looked at her a little oddly. "I am in a funk, Billy," said Almee, trembling slightly. "I don't care for myself, but it's awful to think of poor George having the storm break on her. She isn't built for it. I believe if the thing isn't sprung on us suddenly, and we manage it at the right time, we—we might get away with it."

"Right again," said Billy, "but I shan't go. I shall stay and put it through myself."

"No!" said Almee quickly. "I won't hear of that."

"You just leave it to me," said Billy, soothingly, "there's another way. I'll show you—"

The whirr of a motor interrupted him. A large automobile was approaching up the park road. Almee looked at it. Such an expression of horror came over her features that Billy was startled.

"What's the matter?"

"That's absolutely torn it!" said Almee in strangled tones.

"Eh?"

"It's Dad!"

Almee dived back into the room like a rabbit retreating into its burrow.

The automobile swept up to the main entrance; the Very Reverend Lord Scroope descended.

"Is Lady Erythea in?" he said, almost curtsy to the butler. "Announce me at once, please, Lord Scroope."

Mr. Tarbeaux showed him into the empty drawing room. Lord Scroope deposited his hat among a cluster of Dresden ornaments. His brow, usually white and serene as alabaster, was clouded. Lady Erythea entered majestically.

"Anthony!" she said.

Lord Scroope, omitting any greeting, regarded her fixedly.

"I received your letter by last night's post, Erythea, announcing Almee's engagement to Alexander. I borrowed the bishop's car, and I have been travelling from Westminster since seven this morning."

Lady Erythea received the news with a smile of approval.

"The silly child wished me to delay announcing her betrothal. But that, of course, I could not consent to. I wrote to you at once, Anthony. I commend the energy you have shown in hastening to congratulate them—and me. One so seldom sees you in a hurry."

Lord Scroope deliberately placed a pair of gold-rimmed pince-nez on his nose and stared at his niece-in-law.

"The news of this engagement," he said earnestly, "is unwelcome to me. Entirely unwelcome."

Lady Erythea stiffened in every limb. Her ear-trumpet was presented in one hand; with the other she raised her lorgnettes and directed them at Lord Regarded Each Other Glassily.

Scroope. The two regarded each other glassily.

"I do not understand you," said Lady Erythea with frigidity. "Alexander is a young man of unexceptionable character and prospects. Jervaux will be his. The Scroope estate is entailed, and I am sufficiently au fait with your affairs to know that when your two sons in the Service are provided for there will be no overpowering fortune left for Almee. It appears that if there is any complaint, it should come from me."

"The financial aspect of the question does not weigh with me," said Lord Scroope with asperity. "I object to the match itself. If Alexander is to marry at all—"

"If he is to marry!" interrupted Lady Erythea warmly. "Of course he is to marry. Though I confess I was very much afraid he never would. Permit me to tell you, Anthony, that in taking up this attitude as to the marriage of priests, you stand on a very shaky foundation. You yourself are a Clerk in Orders, and an extreme Ritualist. Shall I remind you that if you had not married Delicia—and an excellent thing it was for you—this situation would never have arisen!"

"I am not conscious of having expressed any such argument," said Lord Scroope very stiffly, but with a certain pinkness about the ears. "As for Alexander, he is in every way an excellent young man. But if he is to marry, the last thing I should have desired is his alliance with my daughter. Their temperaments are so opposed that I am convinced nothing but unhappiness could result—in fact, your news seemed to me almost incredible. I do not know what to do—the position is very difficult for me, if the child has really become attached to him," concluded Lord Scroope, with visible distress.

"Good gracious, man, what did you expect?" exclaimed his sister-in-law.

"I never entered my head," said Lord Scroope, emphatically. "I thought that your influence, and that of Alexander, would have a steady effect on Almee, who was in some need of it. But this—"

Lady Erythea showed increasing exasperation.

"You are talking rubbish!" she exclaimed, sharply. "Of all the girls known to me, no more suitable mate could be found for Alexander. Indeed, during her sojourn here Almee has endeavored herself to me scarcely less than to him. Her piety, her quiet devotion—the complete absence in her of all selfishness—all these speak eloquently in her favor."

Lord Scroope gazed at her in bewilderment.

"I really do not follow you, Erythea. And I am greatly disappointed," said Lord Scroope heavily, "greatly disappointed. I did not foresee this."

"I am not responsible, my dear Anthony, for your lack of foresight," said his sister-in-law, acidly. A shadow darkened the window, and she turned.

"But your daughter can answer for herself."

Georgina stepped in through the open window, followed by Mr. Lambie. Suddenly observing Lord Scroope she halted and became rigid. Every scrap of color left her cheeks. Alexander halted also, and slowly turned a deep plum color.

"Since it is a fait accompli," said Lady Erythea to her brother-in-law, almost with a touch of pleading, "be amiable, Anthony, and bestow your blessing on the happy pair."

She raised her ear-trumpet as though to share in the benediction. Lord Scroope looked at Georgina dumbly and then stared at Lady Erythea.

"What did you say?" he asked dizzily.

"The happy pair!" said Lady Erythea, loudly and irritably.

"Where is my daughter?" exclaimed Lord Scroope with consternation. "Erythea, where is my daughter?"

Lady Erythea started. She glanced at Georgina's horror-stricken face, and then, with deep concern, moved to her brother-in-law's side.

"My dear Anthony," she said in a low voice, "come upstairs and lie down. It will soon pass off. Do not be alarmed, Almee. Lean on my arm, Anthony."

Lord Scroope shook himself free. "Are you in your senses, Erythea? This is my niece by marriage—Georgina Berners. What is she doing here?"

"Yes," gulped Alexander's fiancée. "I'm Georgina. I couldn't help it."

She collapsed into an armchair and burst into tears. Alexander stood over her like a large and protective dog; he laid a hand on her shoulder and glared at the others with defiance.

Lady Erythea turned pale. It was disconcerting to find two members of the Scroope family simultaneously smitten with insanity.

"Where is Almee?" insisted Lord Scroope, turning upon her. "Where is my daughter?"

"Dad!"

The dishevelled parlor maid darted in through the door. Almee's cap was awry, her face was pale, her eyes very bright; the top of her apron heaved tumultuously. She stopped short, as Lady Erythea glared speechless at this interruption.

"Don't cry, Georgie," said Almee; "it wasn't your fault."

"Have I been transported into Bedlam?" asked Lord Scroope, dizzily. "Or are you rehearsing a charade? What is she doing in this costume?"

Lady Erythea struggled for breath.

"This," she said grimly, "is my parlor maid, Snooks, whom I foolishly engaged on your recommendation. She has engaged herself again, however, to my chauffeur."

Lord Scroope looked at his sister-in-law with commiseration.

"This," he said, in the soothing tone with which one would address a delirious person, "is my daughter, Almee. I am rather glad to find her—in any costume. I began to wonder what you had done with her."

Lady Erythea's frame slowly stiffened. Her fingers clenched the ear-trumpet as though it were the handle of a club. Her eyes were terrible. Before the storm could break, Almee intervened.

"It wasn't Aunt's fault, Dad," she said breathlessly, "nor Georgie's—nor Alexander's. It was all mine. And if you all want to beat somebody, it had better be me! I—I'm here to explain!"

"Some explanation," said Lord Scroope quietly, "seems to be called for."

Almee, avoiding her aunt's eyes, addressed herself to the quivering ear-trumpet.

"I didn't want to come here. Dad made me. I was—frightened of you. Anyway, I didn't think Jervaux would suit me, and that you'd hate me. So I skipped the car at Burn Ash," said Almee, her speech pouring from her like a torrent, "and made the chauffeur bring Georgina on here. And I went off on my own!"

"Georgina arrived here, and you took her for me. You insisted she was me. And she didn't dare explain, for fear of getting me into a row. That's what Georgie is! She can't lie—she can't even act—but she'd let you cut her in pieces before she'd get me into trouble!"

"I got here the same night, and climbed into her room. And Georgie begged me to own up, and I wouldn't. And I came the next night; Georgie was ready to give it all away—and then the burglars got in. I was nearly caught, but the household chased me, the butler tore a great piece out of my skirt. But I got away, and at last right down by the crossroads, I ran into Bill—Mr. Spencer."

Almee paused for breath.

"silly thing I'd done," said Almee with a gulp. "It would come out that I was your daughter—it would be all over the country, and in all the newspapers!"

Lord Scroope, very pale, drew a deep breath, and gave a prolonged shudder.

"B—Mr. Spencer told me I'd got to go back and make a clean breast of it all. He wanted to tell you. But I didn't dare. I refused to let him say anything—I made him swear he wouldn't. It was my trouble, not his. So he did what I asked; even though it meant the police would suspect him, too. So he took the jewels to Aunt Erythea, and never said a word about me; and when she offered him the job as chauffeur he took it; so that the police wouldn't suspect him—or me! He came here and drove Aunt's car!"

"And you?" said her father quietly.

"What happened to you?"

"I went back to Scroope next day. I found Amy Snooks was coming here as maid—I made her go to Scarborough, and took her place. Dad. Just to be safe from those beastly police—in the hope they'd catch the thieves, if we gave them time—and then they wouldn't catch me and make me explain. And it's just what happened: Billy—Mr. Spencer—caught one of them yesterday, and the police have got him. No body knows anything about me, except you here!"

Almee panted like a deer at bay.

"And Billy's asked me to marry him, and I'm going to!" she said desperately. "I love him! There's nobody like Billy—he's been splendid! He isn't a chauffeur at all—till Aunt made him one. And I'd marry him, even if he was!" declared Almee, on the verge of tears.

There was a stunned silence. For once speech denied itself even to Lady Erythea. Georgina was sobbing gently in the chair. Alexander still stood over her and said nothing.

"I seem to find a thread of enlightenment in this story," said Lord Scroope, slowly. "Yes, I think I know enough of you, Almee, to understand. I have a question to put. You came here on the day following the burglary. Where did you spend the previous night? What were you doing?"

"I was in a cave!"

Lord Scroope passed a long white hand across his brow.

"A cave?" he repeated, blankly. "You have reverted, it seems, to the customs of our Neolithic ancestors—"

"It was a ripping cave," said Almee a little hysterically, "down in the crag pits. All the little rabbits for company. It was more peaceful than Jervaux. I know it wouldn't have suited Georgie."

"May I ask when this unknown young man permitted himself to propose to you?"

"Yesterday!"

"We will not pursue that matter," said Lord Scroope, gloomily; "this hardly seems the time or place for detailed explanations. I feel—"

The door opened and Monsieur de Jussac entered. He gave a slight start as his eyes traveled rapidly over the group.

"A thousand pardons! A family matter, I perceive," he said quickly. "I will withdraw—"

"Don't go, Vicomte!" exclaimed Almee. "Anyone who's a friend of mine is welcome here. You may as well be in at the death."

"If I can be of any service—"

Bertrand. He bowed courteously to Almee's father. "Lord Scroope, I presume."

"You," said Lady Erythea to Bertrand, trembling with wrath, "were also in this conspiracy! You appear to know the whole story!"

"Oh, of course he knows it," said Almee, wildly, "just as Billy knew it, and Georgina, and Diana, too. They all did their best for me—right from the beginning. I wasn't worth it—but they did."

"It seems," said Lady Erythea, gripping the back of a chair, "that everyone in my household knew all about this—except myself and my nephew! Who, through his position and his innocence, now finds himself—"

"I beg your pardon, Aunt," said Alexander, pallid but calm. "I also, know everything that was to be known—from the moment Almee entered this house. I knew that Georgina—was Georgina. I am as culpable as any."

Uncommon Sense . . .

SALESMANSHIP

WHETHER you are taking orders for threshing machines or life insurance, or drawing a salary of ten dollars a week, you are a salesman. In the first instance you are selling somebody else's product. In the last you are selling your own. You will sell threshing machines or life insurance faster if you know something about them, and believe in them.

You will sell your own services for a higher price if you believe in yourself. If the merchandise you offer is not worth the price you ask for it, you can't be sincere in your efforts to dispose of it.

And if you do not absolutely know that your services are worth more than you are getting for them, you will never be able to get more.

All salesmanship that is worth anything is based on confidence. You will find it hard work to convince people of anything you do not believe yourself.

Before you make any effort to raise your own salary be sure that it ought to be raised. Compare yourself with other people doing the same work for the same wages.

If they are better than you are at the job, don't ask for a raise until you have made yourself better than they are.

Your hands or your brains are the commodity you have to dispose of. Make them just as efficient, just as productive as you can.

Discover and eliminate the faults that keep them from doing their best.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

THE GREAT HEARTED

ONLY the great-hearted can be true friends. All along the shadowed ways of life the great-hearted are constantly sending out sunlight and cheer, which humans of inferior natures can never know or bestow.

To do good, without having their motives suspected, is their grand intention. They seek no praise. They move about with the quiet of summer breezes, leaving in their trail the delicious scent of gardens and the peace of tranquil skies.

In the happiness they give to others, they find a gratification rich beyond price. If but once in your life you should be fortunate enough to meet a great-hearted man or woman, the remembrance of it will linger in your mind until the end of your days.

Great hearts often dwell in lowly places. Sometimes they are found in trail bodies, poorly clad, but there is about them a radiance of spirit brighter than a thousand stars and clear as the beaming of the noonday sun.

Great hearts blow to flame the spark that blazes with love; they espouse Truth and Mercy; they sing from morn till night of kindness and good will, when their days are lonely and their tables are bare.

They are neither silent nor neglectful when the ill and the discouraged need succor or sympathy. Meek or lowly, they are the ministering angels from heaven, carrying to the sorrowing "good tidings of great joy."

RECIPES FOR RAREBITS

RAREBITS are not especially easy of digestion, should not be served to the children, and like souffe must be served at once when prepared.

Nut Rarebit. Take one and one-half cupsful of milk, heat in a double boiler, then add one cupful of cheese and stir un-

PEW! First Tomato—What do the farmers do with the tomatoes they raise? Second Tomato—They eat all they can, and can all they can't.

Work, study, practice—bring yourself up to a higher point of usefulness. Then when you begin to talk about getting more money you will have an argument.

Believe in yourself thoroughly and other people will believe in you. But remember that you cannot sincerely believe in yourself unless you are convinced that you can really produce more than the other men who are doing the same kind of work.

SCHOOL D

From idle slumbers they call youth and point the way to honor and fame; from the valley of gloom they bid the despondent to look up to the glorious heavens; from the mire of sin they lift up the fallen, seeking no reward but the joy that is theirs from doing good.

Always and always reaching on and on, beyond perfection that is no longer perfection, to that perfection which, too, ends doubt!—Annie, 'like Greenwood.

Tomato Rarebit. Heat one tablespoonful of butter with a small grated onion, add one-half teaspoonful of dry mustard, six drops of tabasco sauce and a cupful of tomato soup. Cook well together, then add one cupful of grated cheese and stir until melted, then fold in two well-beaten eggs; when creamy pour over well-buttered toast.

Baked Bean Rarebit. Melt one tablespoonful of butter, add one cupful of cheese and one cupful of milk; when the cheese is melted add one cupful of mashed baked beans, one beaten egg, mustard, salt and cayenne to taste. Pour over hot toast.

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"DUNCE"

DURING the middle ages certain theologians were called "schoolmen" because they were taught in the cathedral schools and cloisters founded by Charlemagne and his successors. At first these men were revered and looked up to. Their writings were the court of last resort; their opinions, authoritative. Later, however, their works fell out of favor because the form of their speculations was unattractive and their works were not written in classical Latin.

There were some, though, who still clung to the teachings of the schoolmen in general and to the doctrines of one Duns Scotus, a great teacher of the Franciscan order, in particular. Whenever an adherent of the old learning would seek to bolster up his contentions by referring to the works of Scotus, his opponent would seek to silence him with the rejoinder: "Oh, you are a Dunsman," or, more briefly, "You are a Duns," an epithet of scorn which gradually found its way into the language with the slightly altered spelling "dunce".

Thus it is that the name of one of the best known doctors of the church, admitted a keen and sharp-witted teacher, has been turned into a by-word for stupidity and obstinate dullness.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine.

A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.
