POULTRY MONEY vs. Pin Money

Once poultry raising was "the old lady's job"... in that way she made pin money.

Now it pays the grocery bill on prosperous farms and provides enough ready cash to keep the old man's name off the "dotted line."

Want to tackle it? Let's go over the plans together.

TOWER OF LIGHT

LIBERAL ARTS

MAIN ENTRANCE TO PALACE OF LIBERAL ARTS

AMERICA this year celebrates its one hundred fiftieth year of Independence. And today the world knows that the immortal instrument which was signed on July 4, 1776, has meant much more than the growth and development of an independent nation on this side of the Atlantic.

With 1925 there began a series of American sesquicentennials which continues to command the attention of the world. They mark the beginning of the United States of America. Americans are interested.

For world history, as well as American history, was made at Lexington and Concord April 19, 1775; at Cambridge July 3, 1775; at Philadelphia July 4, 1776; at Vincennes February 25, 1779; at Yorktown October 9, 1781; at Paris September 3, 1783.

Born in those fateful nine years of revolution, our nation today, after 150 years of perseverance and progress, is the most favored on earth, the most powerful, the wealthiest.

So much has been taken here as a matter of course that it seems hard to realize that this anniversary is celebrated in the very England from which liberty was wrested, and that observances of it are officially ordered in many lands beyond the seas. The Fourth of July has become international in scope, for it has changed the governments of nations whose capitals are far from Independence Hall.

Had not the ideas of government held by the colonists been essentially British there would probably never have been any Declaration of Independence. It is as natural for the Briton to demand his rights as it is for him to live. The year of the Revolution was largely due to the fact that the three thousand miles of water between London and the colonies caused parliament to lose sight of the ties of consanguinity and of race.

Although the original thirteen colonies were so essentially English in thought and feeling they had never actually been established by England as a national enterprise. The only one which had ever received any official aid whatever was Georgia, and that was not sufficient to carry any such feeling of dependence as is essential for the preservation of intimate colonial relations. The right to colonize the North American continent had been granted by charters from a British king. According to the feudal system, which was then rapidly becoming effaced, the king owned all the land and distributed it among various favored vassals.

The sovereign in the same way regarded the New World as if it had been won by the sword. The most extravagant ideas prevailed with regard to the wealth of the American lands. It was at one time soberly believed in England that gold and silver and precious stones could be had for the taking and that the natives were the possessors of fabulous wealth. The king gave the charters in most cases with the idea that he would profit greatly from mines which would yield enormous returns to the royal exchequer.

When the colonists came here they found it necessary to make good their titles either by peaceful bargains with the Indians or by force of arms. From the very first the spirit of independence was fostered, for feuds which had to be maintained by constant vigilance and negotiations and by show of force did not carry with them a deep sense of obligation. Indeed, even at that early day, although for the throne the colonists entertained feelings of loyalty and devotion, a shrewd idea was abroad that the king did not really own the land which he had bestowed by his charter. The conquest of nature and of the savages begot a rugged independence which as the years went by became more and more distasteful to the authorities in England.

Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, offered the independence resolution in June, 1776, and a committee was appointed to draft the Declaration, consisting of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston. Jefferson, wrote the document, and alterations were made principally at the suggestion of Franklin and Adams. The paper was submitted to congress on June 28. It was laid on the table until July 1, when nine colonies voted in favor of it.

LIBERTY BELL

The independence resolution was actually adopted on July 2 and promulgated to the world on July 4, when John Hancock, of Massachusetts, affixed to it his bold signature.

The other members of the congress did not sign it until August 2, and the impressive scene connected with the signing was not witnessed until nearly a month later, although it is popularly associated with the Fourth of July.

Centuries of the progress of the rights of man bear witness in the Declaration. That "all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," was not new, for it was recognized at Sinai. That governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed had been stated and restated in many ways since the beginning of the colonies. Thomas Jefferson was criticised at the time for lack of originality in the Declaration. The document gained all the greater force from its statement of self-evident truths. Never was there a more masterly presentation of a bill of grievances than is contained in the Declaration, which "submits the facts to a candid world."

In 1876 the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence was celebrated with impressive exercises both in New York and Philadelphia. In 1926 was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary. Several of the original signers of the immortal document were still alive, although unable on account of extreme age to take part in the exercises to which they had been bidden. New York had a grand procession and a barbecue in the square now named after Washington, at which 10,000 persons were present. Josiah Quincy was the orator of the day in Boston, and addresses also were made by Webster and Peabody.

And now in 1925 we have the Sesquicentennial exposition at Philadelphia, open from June 1 to December 1. To it will come the nations of the world co-operating with us in our celebration, which has been designed to demonstrate that what fifty years ago was merely potential is today an accomplished fact.

Five main exhibition buildings, three of them colossal in size, house the great mass of exhibits that have originated in all parts of America and of the world. A score or more of smaller buildings, each of individual character, contain displays of foreign countries and separate states of the Union.

At the main entrance to the grounds are two pylons, 25 feet high, surmounted by colossal figures to be known as the Heralds of the New Dawn. They are symbolic of the story of American freedom. The visitor enters the Grand court and finds to his left, the Palace of Liberal Arts and Manufactures and the Palace of Agriculture and Food Products. Between them stands the imposing Tower of Liberty, more than 200 feet high and surmounted by the Light of Independence, symbolizing the inspired vision of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

The Palace of Liberal Arts and Manufactures contains seven acres of display space. All that human ingenuity creates from raw materials will find place in this building. Pottery and glass, textiles, furniture, silverware, cutlery and countless articles in everyday use will be exhibited. Modern methods of communication will be demonstrated by exhibits featuring the telephone, the telegraph, wireless and radio. The art of the printer and of the bookbinder will interest many by the novel displays arranged.

The Palace of Agriculture, Food, Civic and Foreign exhibits provides eight acres of exhibition space. Half of the building will be devoted to agricultural and food exhibits, including practically everything edible by man or beast. Methods of cultivation and preparation for market; proper selection, combination and preparation of foods; and extensive dairy, canning, yeast, baking and other displays are being featured. Adjacent to the palace a great live-stock show will be held September 12 to 19.

The other portion of the immense structure will house a number of exhibits from far-away lands not represented by their own buildings in the foreign section of the exposition. In this part of the palace are interesting displays prepared by commercial organizations and civic bodies throughout the country.

Educational exhibits from foreign countries as well as from all parts of the United States are displayed in the Palace of Education and Social Economy. The Palace of Fine Arts provides two acres of space in which are housed art treasures that include the work of many famous masters.

Lighting arrangements for the exposition are unique. Several outstanding features, once seen, will never be forgotten. Before the entrance gates will swing an immense Liberty bell containing 25,000 incandescent lamps of 500,000 candle power. It will be 70 feet high, 50 feet across and will weigh 42 tons. The bell will be suspended 22 feet above the street level. Concentration of 15,000,000,000 candle power and the massing of 26 superpower searchlights fitted with projectors and color screens to throw fan-like and criss-cross rays of rainbow hues, produce a spectacular effect only comparable to the aurora borealis and is visible a hundred miles away.

Illuminating of the city hall with its tower and surmounting colossal statue of William Penn standing out in bright relief is on an elaborate scale, the founder of the city appearing as though surrounded by an aura of pink light.

Europe is represented by several buildings typical of the different countries. Spain's pavilion contains a valuable collection of art and historic treasures, including paintings, tapestries, and old armor. Sweden is represented by a permanent structure known as the John Morton Memorial building. It is erected in honor of the only Swedish signer of the Declaration of Independence. A central Hall of Fame will contain statues of noted Swedish men and women. Sixteen rooms, each named for a prominent person of Swedish extraction, will contain a variety of interesting exhibits, among which will be interesting examples of early Swedish inventions.

Exhibits from foreign lands will include those from Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France, Germany, Spain, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Rumania, Tunisia, Liberia, China, Japan, India, Persia, Egypt, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Haiti, Panama and Nicaragua.

DEADLY DANGERS OF EXHAUST GAS

Experts Tell of Carbon Monoxide Peril in Motor-Car Garages.

With more than 20,000,000 motor cars registered in the United States and a contemplated 1926 production of 3,000,000 more automobiles, various organizations are starting an educational crusade against carbon monoxide (deadly motor exhaust gas).

Insurance investigators and chemical authorities, not to mention government health officials, agree that this gas is one of the most deadly of all gases. The very fact that it attacks without warning and that but simple precautions are necessary to prevent its large life-taking toll demands, authorities believe, a widespread educational program comparable to the tremendous increase in the use of automotive vehicles.

Most Deadly in Garages.

It is estimated that millions of automobiles are kept in public garages. It is in the garage that monoxide gas, as it is commonly called, gets in its deadliest work. Automobile engines are constantly running in all public garages, and they release a deadly flood of this highly poisonous gas for employees to breathe. Without proper ventilating precautions this menacing practice eliminates the entrance of the lighter oxygen and results in practically a closed chamber with the air loaded with this gas.

A well-known insurance investigator aptly explains monoxide gas and its effect as follows: "There is no means of detecting its presence by smell, sight or other senses. Its attack is insidious and quick, and a perfectly well person may topple over unconscious without warning. While the automobile engine is in operation it constantly creates a flow of carbon monoxide gas through its exhaust, and experiments have shown that only a remarkably short time is necessary to fill a garage with sufficient quantities of this gas to cause instant death to occupants."

Overbalances Oxygen.

A representative of a national ventilating society declares that carbon monoxide "overbalances oxygen when breathed into the lungs." Explaining the effect of this poison on a person, he said: "There are two properties of the blood essential to proper respiration, the white and red blood cells. The latter absorbs oxygen, drawn into the lungs, and distributes it to all parts of the body. Now monoxide gas is attracted to the red cells 300 times more strongly than is oxygen, and it easily saturates the blood. This absorption of monoxide gas by the blood temporarily replaces the oxygen supply and quickly induces asphyxia."

A small leak in the exhaust of a closed automobile will cause headache and a tired feeling to the occupants, authorities agree. The same is true of confinement in a closed room where gas burners are in operation. This is directly due to the presence of carbon monoxide and the lack of oxygen through improper ventilation.

Look Out for Accidents When Parked on a Hill

When leaving the car headed downhill, even if the machine is in gear, the emergency brake set and the wheels turned in toward the curb, don't park it too close to the car ahead. In a recent case of this sort the car ahead, when pulling away bumped the other car sufficiently to throw the gears into neutral and change the position of the wheels. The emergency didn't hold, and had it not been for the fact that the machine struck the fender of another car parked along the street, thus attracting the attention of people passing, the car would have been smashed to pieces.

Accidents Likely When Brakes Are Water-Soaked

Brakes should be given special attention after a car has been washed or has been driven through water or splashy mud. In either case, water is almost sure to get into and soak the external brake bands, and under such conditions water is very much of a lubricant and will have much the same effect as oil in preventing the brakes from taking hold promptly. Hence the first time you need to stop in a hurry, you are very likely to find that they refuse to take hold promptly and a bad smashup may be the result.

The remedy for suspected wet brake bands is to drag the brake a few times immediately after leaving the washstand. The increased pressure on the brake bands forces out the water and allows it to dry off, so that when needed in an emergency, they will take hold promptly.

Where grease, oil, mud, dirt and so on have produced a sort of glaze on the brake bands, they cannot be expected to take hold as they should and accidents are likely to happen. About the only effective way to remedy this trouble is to take off the brakes and remove the glaze with a rough file or hacksaw blade or to wash the lining with gasoline and scrub it with a wire brush.

Double-Duty Garage Is Made for Convenience

By extending the floor dimensions four feet past the rear end, the garage shown in the illustration offers a storage place for the garden tools, coal, oil and gasoline. The kitchen door opens directly into the garage so that the storage space is readily accessible. The addition need only be a few feet high and the roof can be made removable so that a good scratching shed can be provided for chicks during hatching time. In this case the regular top is removed and a frame covered with canvas or glass is substituted.—Popular Science Magazine.

Few Simple Regulations to Cut Motor Accidents

We have too much automobile law. The next trend must be toward the elimination of all unnecessary requirements and the enactment of a few simple rules and regulations that may be easily understood, easily enforced and, as nearly as possible, universally observed, says an official of an automobile organization. Such an elimination would in many instances do away with about three-fourths of our present laws.

Traffic rules and regulations are yet in their formative period. Much remains to be done before avoidable accidents may be reduced to a minimum. The principal difficulty is the unwillingness of the public to accept and obey such rules and regulations.

It is a matter of undisputed record that between 90 and 95 per cent of all accidents result from the neglect of the individual pedestrian and less than 5 per cent are caused by the direct fault of the motorist or the reckless use of the motor car. Lying between these figures somewhere are from 3 to 5 per cent of the accidents where both parties are responsible.

INSIDE OF A MODERN HOUSE ON WHEELS

It is a very long step from the gypsy caravan to this modern automobile home of W. K. Kellogg, manufacturer, of Battle Creek, Mich. The automobile home is as comfortable as a home or hotel. The sleeping quarters are shown in the photograph with electric fans, a radio loud-speaker and beds. On the left and in front may be seen the car's refrigerator.

First Baptist Church Notes
 On last Sunday our Bible school had 204 present in time to count in the blackboard report, but several of those were new members. We should have 250 at least. The "Father's Day" program was excellent. Grand father Blankenship won the bouquet. The church attendance was good, but there was room for many more inside the meeting house at the evening hour. The class contest which has been going in the basement with much interest and friendly rivalry and fun was won by the Berean class. This class is one of the best young men's classes in the Panhandle section of Texas. Mrs. M. W. Mosley is its teacher, and its new officers are Alton Qaisenberry, President; Jack Youree, 1st V. P.; Homer Steen, 2nd V. P.; Prof. Weaver, 3rd V. P.; George Hamcock, Sec. T. eas. It has twelve members and has a winning spirit. The second prize was won by a very fine class of boys who have Bro. S. E. Nash for their teacher. Those boys are hard to beat at anything. Several other classes in the basement contest made it hard for the two winning classes to win over them. So, the two winning class have done something worthy to boast about. A well filled house was present on Monday evening to hear Mr. Joe Kelly's great lecture on "A Prisoner's Life." He won his hearers to a greater respect for the majesty and justice of the law and to a higher sense of mercy and justice toward the convicts. We must have some sort of a prison reform in Texas immediately. Next Sunday morning the subject will be "What Does It Cost to Live Godly Lives?" Text II Tim 3:12-13. In the evening hour the subject will be "What Should a Preacher Preach?" Text Matt. 10:27. Everybody will receive a cordial welcome. We have a few things to tell on some local town, gas wagon, seminary professors and over sensitive "Rubes."
 J. H. McCauley, Pastor.

SINGING SCHOOL AND MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT

The BULL'S EYE
 Editor and General Manager. WILL ROGERS

Another "Bull" Durham advertisement by Will Rogers, Ziegfeld Follies and screen star, and leading American humorist. More coming. Watch for them.

Meeting the "Bull" Durham Smoker Face to Face
 I am just making, as the Politician says, "A swing around the Circle," to see what was going on in "Real America." I had been in New York so long, I was getting a kind of a Subway "Slant" on things. I was becoming as narrow as a Metropolitan Newspaper Editorial Writer. My eyesight was getting so poor I couldn't see beyond the Hudson River, and my mind wouldn't function farther away than Albany, N. Y. I knew that New York was "amusing the world," but I wanted to meet the fellow who was "feeding it." I am kinder oddly constituted. You can cut off my amusement, but if my food stops you are going to have an argument on your hands. I, as Editor and Proprietor of the Bull's Eye, wanted to meet not only the readers, but the consumers of THIS Wonderful Product of OURS. (The American Tobacco Company and me.) Well, I wish you could see the type of Men they were. Big fine healthy upstanding He-Men. They were not the little Anemics that has to tap his Cigarette on the box before he can smoke it. They were our Producers of our Necessities of Life. When I saw the type of He-Men smoking "Bull" Durham, it almost made me cry, that I wasn't a smoker myself.

Dr. Caldwell's SYRUP PEPSIN

Monticello, 47 years. It seems any constipated in and had to be kept com only "stiff" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish a natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin induces a gentle, easy bowel movement, but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

THOUGHT MALARIA STILL IN SYSTEM

Until Dodson's Liver Tone Drove Out Quarts of Sour Bile and Other Poisons.

There are entire sections where everyone seems to think they have malaria. Others believe they never fully got the malarial poison out of their systems.

Arnold Whitson says: "For years I took calomel for the aches, biliousness, headache, constipation and the deathly feeling associated with what we believed to be malaria."

"Last year I heard about Dodson's Liver Tone and bought a bottle for a few cents. Man, man, what a Godsend. In the morning it drove out quarts of black, sour bile. I got back my appetite for food, braced right up and haven't had a sick spell since. Whenever I feel a little bilious or the stomach gets sour, one dose of Dodson's Liver Tone is all I need. It is surely a blessing."

Hundreds of others tell the same experience. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

Every time the bottom drops out of the market another class graduates at the school of experience, says the Detroit News.

THE BEAVER

Synopsis—Part wolf, part dog—when two months old Baree has his first meeting with an enemy, Papayuchisaw (young owl). Fighting hard, the antagonists are suddenly plunged into a swollen creek. Badly buffeted, and half drowned, Baree is finally flung on the bank, but the water has destroyed his sense of direction and he is lost, lonely and hungry. For many days his life is one of fear and distress. He meets various creatures of the wild and goes through a thunderstorm. He is learning more and more. He strays into the trapping grounds of Pierrot and Nepeese. Nepeese wounds Baree with a rifle, but he escapes. Baree discovers and learns nature's secrets rapidly. Nepeese is determined to catch Baree and tame him and tries again. Baree is strongly drawn to the girl, but still fears man.

Chapter V

Impelled by the wild alarm of the Willow's terrible cries and the sight of Pierrot dashed madly toward him from the dead body of Wakayoo, Baree did not stop running until it seemed as though his lungs could not draw another breath. When he stopped he was well out of the canyon and headed for the beaver pond.

Exactly wherein lay Baree's fears it would be difficult to say—but surely it was not because of Nepeese. The Willow had chased him hard. She had flung herself upon him. He had felt the clutch of her hands and the smoother of her soft hair, and yet of her he was not afraid! If he stopped now and then in his flight and looked back, it was to see if Nepeese was following. He would not have run hard from her—alone. Her eyes and voice and hands had something stirring in him; he was awed with a greater yearning and a greater loneliness now—and that night he dreamed troubled dreams.

Baree was glad when the dawn came. He did not seek for food, but went down to the pond. There was little hope and anticipation in his manner now. He remembered that, as plainly as animal ways could talk, Umisk and his playmates had told him they wanted nothing to do with him. And yet the fact that they were there took away some of his loneliness. It was more than loneliness. The wolf in him was submerged. The dog was master. And in those passing moments, when the blood of the wild was almost dormant in him, he was depressed by the instinctive and growing feeling that he was not of that wild, but a fugitive in it, menaced on all sides by strange dangers.

Deep in the northern forests the beaver does not work and play in darkness only, but uses day even more than night, and many of Beaver-tooth's people were awake when Baree began disconsolately to investigate the shores of the pond. He did not try to hide himself now, and at least half a dozen beavers had a good look at him before he came to the point where the pond narrowed down to the width of the stream, almost half a mile from the dam. Then he wandered back. At that morning he hovered about the pond, showing himself openly.

In their big mud-and-stick strongholds the beavers held a council of war. They were distinctly puzzled. There were four enemies which they dreaded above all others: The otter, who destroyed their dams in the winter time and brought death to them from cold and by lowering the water so they could not get to their food supplies; the lynx, who preyed on them all, young and old alike; and the fox and wolf, who would lie in ambush for hours in order to pounce on the very young, like Umisk and his playmates. If Baree had been any one of these four, wily Beaver-tooth and his people would have known what to do. But Baree was surely not an otter, and if he was a fox or a wolf or a lynx, his actions were very strange, to say the least. Half a dozen times he had the opportunity to pounce on his prey, if he had been seeking prey. But at no time had he shown the desire to harm them.

It may be that the beavers discussed the matter fully among themselves. It is possible that Umisk and his playmates told their parents of their adventure and of how Baree made no move to harm them when he could quite easily have caught them. However this may be, courageous old Beaver-tooth took it upon himself to end the suspense.

It was early in the afternoon that for the third or fourth time Baree walked out on the dam. This dam was fully two hundred feet in length, but at no point did the water run over it, the overflow finding its way through narrow sluices. A week or two ago Baree could have crossed to the opposite side of the pond on this dam, but now—at the far end—Beaver-tooth and his engineers were adding a new section of dam, and in order to accomplish their work more easily they had flooded fully fifty yards of the low ground on which they were working. The dam held a fascination for Baree. The top of it was high and dry, and there were dozens of smoothly worn little hollows in which the beavers had taken their sun-baths. In one of these hollows Baree stretched himself out, with his eyes on the pond. Not a ripple stirred its velvety smoothness. Not a sound broke the drowsy stillness of the afternoon. The beavers might have been dead or asleep, for all the stir they made. And yet they knew that Baree was on the dam. Where he lay the sun fell in a warm flood, and it was so comfortable that after a time he had difficulty in keeping his eyes open to watch the pond. Then he fell asleep.

Just how Beaver-tooth sensed this fact is a mystery. Five minutes later he came up quietly, without a splash or a sound, within fifty yards of Baree. For a few moments he scarcely moved in the water. Then he swam very slowly parallel with the dam across the pond. At the other side he drew himself ashore and for another minute sat as motionless as a stone, with his eyes on that part of the dam where Baree was lying. Not another beaver was moving, and it was very soon apparent that Beaver-tooth had but one object in mind—getting a closer observation of Baree. When he entered the water again, he swam along close to the dam. Ten feet beyond Baree he began to climb out. He did this with great slowness and caution. At last he reached the top of the dam.

A few yards away Baree was almost hidden in his hollow, only the top of his shiny black body appearing to Beaver-tooth's scrutiny. To get a better look, the old beaver spread his flat tail out beyond him and rose to a sitting posture on his hind quarters, his two front paws held squirrel-like over his breast. In this pose he was fully three feet tall. He probably weighed forty pounds, and in some ways he resembled one of those fat, good-natured, silly-looking dogs that go largely to stomach. But his brain was working with amazing celerity. Suddenly he gave the hard mud of the dam a single slap with his tail—and Baree sat up. Instantly he saw Beaver-tooth, and stared. Beaver-tooth stared. For a full half-minute neither moved the thousandth part of an inch. Then Baree stood up and wagged his tail.

That was enough. Dropping to his forefeet, Beaver-tooth waddled directly to the edge of the dam and directed over. He was neither cautious nor in very great haste now. He made a great commotion in the water and swam boldly back and forth under Baree. When he had done this several times he cut straight up the pond to the largest of the three houses and disappeared. Five minutes after Beaver-tooth's exploit word was passing quickly among the colony. The stranger—Baree—was not a lynx. He was not a fox. He was not a wolf. Moreover, he was very young—and harmless. Work could be resumed. Play could be resumed. There was no danger. Such was Beaver-tooth's verdict.

If some one had shouted these facts in beaver language through a megaphone the response could not have been quicker. All at once it seemed to Baree, who was still standing on the edge of the dam, that the pond was alive with beavers. He had never seen so many at one time before. They were popping up everywhere, and some of them swam up within a dozen feet of him and looked him over in a leisurely and curious way. For perhaps five minutes they seemed to have no particular object in view. Then Beaver-tooth himself struck straight for the shore and climbed out. Others followed him. Half a dozen workers disappeared in the canals. As many more waddled out among the alders and willows. Eagerly Baree watched for Umisk and his chums. At last he saw them, swimming forth from one of the smaller houses. They climbed out on their playground—the smooth bar above the shore of mud. Baree wagged his tail so hard that his whole body shook, and hurried along the dam.

When he came out on the level strip of shore, Umisk was there alone, nibbling supper from a long, freshly cut willow. The other little beavers had gone into a thick clump of young alders.

This time Umisk did not run. He looked up from his stick. Baree squatted himself, wiggling in a most friendly and ingratiating manner. For a few seconds Umisk regarded him. Then, very coolly, he resumed his supper.

Just as in the life of every man there is one big, controlling influence, either for good or for bad, so in the life of Baree the beaver pond was largely an arbiter of destiny. Where he might have gone if he had not discovered it, and what might have happened to him, are matters of conjecture. But it held him. It began to take the place of the old windfall, and in the beavers themselves he found a companionship which made up, in a way, for the loss of the protection and friendship of Kazan and Gray Wolf.

This companionship, if it could be called that, went just so far and no farther. With each day that passed the older beavers became more accustomed to seeing Baree. At the end of two weeks, if Baree had gone away, they would have missed him—but not in the same way that Baree would have missed the beavers. It was a matter of good-natured toleration on their part. With Baree it was different. He was still a kitten, as Nepeese would have said; he still wanted mothering; he was still moved by the puppyish yearnings which he had not yet had the time to outgrow; and when night came—to speak that yearning quite plainly—he had the desire to go into the big beaver house with Umisk and his chums, and sleep.

During the fortnight that followed Beaver-tooth's exploit on the dam Baree ate his meals a mile up the creek, where there were plenty of crawfish. But the pond was home. Night always found him there, and a large part of his day. He slept at the end of the dam, or on top of it on particularly clear nights, and the beavers accepted him as a permanent guest. They worked in his presence as if he did not exist.

He still could not induce Umisk and the other young beavers to join him in play, and after the first week or so he gave up his efforts. In fact, their play puzzled him almost as much as the dam-building operations of the older beavers. Umisk, for instance, was fond of playing in the mud at the edge of the pond. He was like a very small boy. Where his elders floated timbers from three inches to a foot in diameter to the big dam, Umisk brought small sticks and twigs no larger around than a lead pencil to his playground, and built a make-believe dam of his own.

Umisk would work an hour at a time on this play-dam as industriously as his father and mother were working on the big dam, and Baree would lie flat on his belly a few feet away, watching him and wondering mightily. He could see some reason for nibbling at sticks—he liked to sharpen his teeth on sticks himself; but it puzzled him to explain why Umisk so painstakingly stripped the bark from the sticks and swallowed it.

Another method of play still further discouraged Baree's advances. A short distance from the spot where he had first seen Umisk there was a shelving bank that rose ten or twelve feet from the water, and this bank was used by the young beavers as a slide. It was worn smooth and hard. Umisk would climb up the bank at a point where it was not so steep. At the top of the slide he would put his tail out flat behind him and give himself a shove, shooting down the toboggan and landing in the water with a big splash.

One afternoon, when the toboggan was particularly wet and slippery from recent use, Baree went up the beaver-path to the top of the bank, and began investigating. Nowhere had he found the beaver-smell so strong as on the slide. He began sniffing and incautiously went too far. In an instant his feet shot out from under him, and with a single wild yell he went shooting down the toboggan. For the second time in his life he found himself struggling under water, and when a minute or two later he dragged himself up through the soft mud to the firmer footing of the shore, he had at last a very well-defined opinion of beaver play.

Baree's stay with the beaver shows that at bottom he is more dog than wolf, and so fitted for human companionship.

SMART TAILORED MIL OUTFITTING

PARIS sends us, in terms of these five fascinating, new street hats, the latest word of five world-famous modistes as to tailored millinery. They are gossipy messages, all of them emphasizing the disappearance of the mannish note in headwear and the return of dignified types in street clothes.

One glance at this little galaxy of stars in the millinery sky, reveals that the combination of straw braids and millinery fabrics makes a strong appeal to French designers. Every one of these models is an example of fabrics used in the body of the hat, and quick a eco high-spe wear in operators. Mothers call with this quantity production garments that are well made and sturdy materials. The fields of handmade clothes and tailored things are different and thereby hangs another story.

There are few style changes in little tots' clothes from season to season. Designers vary the patterns in materials used and the decorations, or promote certain colors and fabrics, but the same dependable cottons, linens and silks reappear every season. In

GROUP OF TAILORED HATS

In three out of five, fabric and straw are combined to make the shape.

The group pictured, leads off with a black satin hat faced with milan straw. The shape is in line with the big majority of others intended for street wear and turns up at the back. Rose foliage is arranged about the crown on the right side, where a single rose is posed on the brim. Rose foliage is used in flat collars also, with the leaves regular in arrangement (the tip of one overlapping the base of another) and finished with two small, flat roses. Velvet ribbon with silk accents for the hat with draped crown at the left and satin, in three shades, makes the interesting model at the right. The upturned brim with wings at the side, is covered with fine folds of satin, shading

Plain broadcloth, chambray, poplin, linene and gingham appear in popular colors; batiste and dimity are woven in dainty stripes and cross-bars and percales are shown in quiet colors and inconspicuous stripes or figures. The keynote of the styles in this season's children's clothes is daintiness and neatness. The simplest needlework is used for decorative touches, as feather stitching, scallops, tiny embroidered flowers and outline stitch for sketching amusing figures on pockets. Little

The most original and spirited hat in the group has a high crown of milan straw and an eccentric taffeta-covered brim that makes the most of the fashionable upward turn at the back. Crisp taffeta ribbon is used in the buoyant bow and drapery. The plainest hat in the group is similar in shape. It is a milan with a brim that folds in a plait at the back and has a collar and facing of satin.

Outfitting little folks has become a simple matter, thanks to the manufacturers of clothes for children. Ready-made things for little tots are so excellent and so low-priced that there is no economy in making their ordinary everyday garments at home. This is accounted for by the stupendous quantities turned out by the factories and by their methods of Japanese figures are popular—lanterns, parasols and people—and so are birds, bunnies, chickens and puppies—done in outline or cross-stitch.

For wear on the beach there are coats and capes of cotton toweling or cotton chenille; cut-out flowers or figures in the same fabrics but contrasting colors make amusing decorations for them or pictures representing beach sports are sketched on them with gay-colored cotton floss. Some little beach coats are entirely covered with cut-out applique figures. Bathing suits are knitted in one piece and made usually in bright colors. Sweaters are important items in little folks' outfits, and are shown in all colors, but peach, tan and yellow tones are featured, and overalls are never omitted from the equipment of happy youngsters.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.
(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

Probably you have observed that you tire of the gossip of your town. Where I live we have gossip five and ten years old, and I have become so tired of it that I almost secretly when the subject comes up. People are more interested in the details. I was late on a porch with four women. Their prattle was more than I could bear. Silence would have been.

Why are there so many impudent, idle, dishonest, worthless, disturbing people? Because they get away with it so easily. . . . You make a mistake if you do not promptly "call down" the dead beat, the loafer, the liar, the impolite, the dishonest. To firmly rebuke all such is the most effective way an honest private citizen has of preaching.

There is a new trouble in the world: Complaint is made that there are more educated people than can be supported. The preliminary wall comes from Bulgaria, and no doubt will spread.

In a great majority of cases the desire to be educated is a desire to escape work. The educated wish to be professors, politicians, preachers, lawyers, doctors, entertainers, and exploit the workers.

In Bulgaria there is such a rush for education that too few are left to cultivate the fields and work in factories. The plain people are complaining and may revolt.

There are lately almost as many patent practitioners as there are patent medicines. Every school, every college, is turning out some kind of new professor to collect another unnecessary tax, and further unnecessarily burden real workers. There is a gent in nearly every public school teaching athletics, learned as a part of his education. Another gent or madam teaches music, which becomes jazz rendered on mandolins and saxophones.

A good many in this country are also of the opinion that there is too much education; if a Bulgarian rebel will come to this country with his doctrine, he will gain quite a following.

George Bernard Shaw once wrote: "If you only knew all the things I think and dare not say!" Friedrich Nietzsche dared write them. This man thought nothing he didn't write, and whatever he wrote was cast in as mean and vicious form as his terribly clever brain could suggest. Angry and drunken men are said to speak the truth. Nietzsche spoke the truth when as good-natured and sober as he ever became. Anyone may read him and find out what is behind the veneer of civilization. And this terrible old savage was educated. He lived all his life in the university atmosphere; none of the professors had more learning, and none knew as much about human nature. With it all he had ability to write so clearly, forcefully and witily that his enemies could not peacefully laugh at him, as so many writers are treated; they rushed for their ink horns and goose quills, and smote him so lustily that he became one of the most famous of men.

It is not surprising that a woman antes the men. From the time she is a little girl, the subject is discussed before her; not only by women, but men themselves are always issuing warnings against each other. Likewise she hears nothing but compliments for women: how they are imposed on by men; how they are patient, and have ideals the men never fulfill; how men eat like pigs, smoke too much, run around too much, sleep too late, idle too much, and are stingy with their money. . . . The wonder is that a girl, after reaching seventeen or eighteen, will associate with men. . . . If she ever learns that women, too, have faults, she must learn it for herself: from the meanness of other women—the men never say anything about it.

A man I know was made a fool of in a courthouse, and greatly wronged. He was sued for damages, on flimsy pretext, and a lawyer who was to get half in case of recovery, was very unfair and insulting in examining the defendant, boldly making charges against him not in the evidence.

The suit was thrown out of court, and now the defendant says he will sue the offending lawyer for damages. I think such an action might hold, as the lawyer acted outrageously.

I even believe some judges might be impeached for actions on the bench. Many judges become old grandmothers, almost believe they own the courthouse, and act in outrageous fashion.

SHOULD HUSBANDS DO HOUSE WORK?

How Mrs. Dyer Solved the Problem.

Mrs. Mildred Dyer was lucky. She had a good-natured husband who helped her with much of her housework. Because she was in ill health for five years, it was often necessary for him to do this. But it bothered Mrs. Dyer. She felt that he had to work hard enough anyway. The time he spent in doing her work was needed for his own. She determined to find the road to better health.

She writes: "I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is simply wonderful. My health is better than it has ever been. I am getting stronger and gaining in weight." She has solved her problem and her household is happier. The Dyers live at Redlands, Calif., Route A, Box 183. How often does your husband have to do your housework? No matter how willing he is, no woman feels comfortable about it. Perhaps you, too, will find better health through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Storm Raised in Congress by President's New Order for Dry Enforcement.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S executive order authorizing the appointment of state, county and municipal officers as prohibition agents at nominal salary has raised a great storm in congress, and on Tuesday the senate decided its judiciary committee should conduct an inquiry into the legality of the order. "to enable the senate to determine whether legislation is advisable or necessary" in connection with the enforcement policy it embodies. The resolution directing this inquiry was introduced by Senator King of Utah, a dry, who said the order was unauthorized by congress or any state legislature and "appeared to be of dubious legality." Senator Robinson of Arkansas, minority leader and an ardent dry, denounced the order as executive usurpation and a serious blow to state rights and to prohibition itself. And naturally the wets in the senate, led by Edge of New Jersey, did not overlook the opportunity.

In the lower house Mr. Coolidge's action caused almost as great a rumpus. Britain of Illinois and Hill of Maryland introduced resolutions to prevent the order from being put into effect, and Linthicum of Maryland made a warm speech in which he declared the order was centralization gone mad. He and others called attention to the contrast between the President's order and the warnings he uttered in his recent Williamsburg speech of the danger of federal encroachments on the sovereignty of the states. The Republicans had said that in that address he had forestalled the raising of the state rights issue by the Democrats in 1928, and now some of them feel that he has lost the ground he then gained. The Democrats assert that his actions do not square with his professions.

Mr. Coolidge was seemingly surprised by the storm of criticism that met his order. On his behalf it was explained that it was issued at the request of General Andrews, chief prohibition enforcer, and was designed especially to cope with a situation that had arisen in California. There was no intention of applying it generally or in any state where such dual-holding of office is forbidden by law. Attorney General Sargent has held that the order is legal, but Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has said he would not have indorsed it if he had known it was to meet with such opposition. White House spokesmen said it never occurred to Mr. Coolidge that the order would be attacked as an invasion of state rights, for the reason that in the eighteenth amendment the states have invited, and in his opinion commanded, the federal government to share the concurrent enforcement of national prohibition. When the states invited the federal government into what had, theretofore, been their exclusive jurisdiction, the federal government could hardly be called a trespasser, according to the President's reasoning.

IN HIS speech attacking the executive order Senator Robinson gave the wets occasion for joy by this statement: "There has been considerable discussion on both sides of this chamber as to whether prohibition enforcement has failed so completely as to justify such radical measures as amendment of the Constitution or modification of the Volstead act. A referendum on the question has been proposed. Passing over the constitutionality of the proposal, I am moved to say that the course of events is tending to compel those who favor prohibition to consent to a referendum. There are some states in which there is widespread wet sentiment which are taking steps for state referendums. In my opinion there are five or six states which might vote for modification on such a referendum, but the rest of the states would vote dry." Senator Glass of Virginia, who is as dry as they make them, thought it not unlikely the Volstead act might be modified by congress. "Some of us dries," said he, "might concede that the act overshoots the eighteenth amendment."

ADMINISTRATION senators who are candidates for renomination and who are listed as dries got another jolt in the Oregon primaries, for the Republicans of that state rejected Senator Stanfield and gave the nomination to Frederick Steiwer of Pendleton, a lawyer and wheat grower. Stanfield formerly was considered a liberal on the liquor question but has become a militant dry. Steiwer, though indorsed by the Anti-Saloon league, also was backed by certain organizations that have a leaning toward wetness.

CONSTRUCTION of post offices and other government buildings to cost $165,000,000 during the next five years is provided for in the public buildings bill signed last week by the President. The measure specifically provides that $50,000,000 shall be spent for new buildings in the District of Columbia, $100,000,000 for new buildings throughout the country, and $15,000,000 for the completion of projects already authorized. The secretary of the treasury is to submit to congress when it convenes each year a list of estimates for the construction of needed buildings, distributing the money among the states fairly on a basis of area, population and postal receipts.

THE Haugen farm relief bill was defeated in the house by a vote of 167 to 212, and though Senator Cummins of Iowa did not support the administration in its opposition to the measure, the result is said to be reacting against him in the Iowa primary campaign. Letters from Mr. Haugen declaring that Mr. Cummins has been indefatigable in his aid of measures advocated by the corn-belt leaders are being broadcast, but still the farmers are represented as being grouchy. Chief of the senator's opponents for the nomination is Smith W. Brookhart, who was unequipped in favor of Dan Steck, Democrat. His main argument in his campaign speeches is that he was robbed of his seat and that thereby the voters of Iowa were disfranchised. All in all, however, it was predicted last week that the veteran Cummins would win a renomination.

DELEGATES from the United States and 18 Latin-American countries and representatives from Europe and Asia assembled in Washington for the second Pan-American Red Cross conference. President Coolidge opened the proceedings with a graceful speech in which he gave the highest praise to the Red Cross societies of the world for their work in alleviating human suffering and in preparing the peoples of the world for international peace.

IN THE Geneva preliminary conference on disarmament considerable progress was made. The delegates decided, at the suggestion of M. Boncour of France, to urge the council of the League of Nations to speed up its machinery that is designed to terminate hostilities quickly. Hugh Gibson, American delegate, did his part by declaring, in the course of a debate on the desirability of exercising some sort of control over the armaments of participating nations, that his delegation would not present any obstacle to a discussion of armament problems which might have League of Nations aspects, though of course the Americans could not participate in such discussions. Hungary submitted a memorandum to the commission complaining bitterly that, though she was practically disarmed, she is surrounded by a group of allied countries possessing powerful military forces—meaning the little entente. She gave warning that unless some general reduction of armament materialized Europe and the League of Nations would be grievously endangered. This protest is similar to one already made by Count von Bernstorff on behalf of Germany. Representatives of the little entente protested against the tenor of the Hungarian document, declaring it was virtually a petition for the revision of the treaty of Trianon, which, they contended, had no place in the deliberations of the disarmament commission.

ABD-EL-KRIM, leader of the Rifians, having lost his headquarters town of Targuist and being abandoned by many of his supporters, has given up the fight against the French and Spaniards. He made some peace proposals last week that were rejected by the French on the ground that he was merely playing for time, and the chieftain thereupon surrendered to the French, putting his person, his family and his property under their protection. Previous to this he returned all the French, Spanish and native prisoners who had been held in the Rif. It was said by Paris officials that Krim would be treated "with generosity but with prudence," which means he will be exiled from the Rif but maintained in suitable state.

MRS. JOHN D. SHERMAN, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in her annual report to the convention of the federation in Washington, said that the specific objective of her presidential regime was the improvement of the American home so that "our people might be turned from their sad flight after irresponsible pleasure to a lasting satisfaction found in ideal life." Her recommendations included the establishment of a "General Federation Foundation" fund for special work; creation of a permanent federation board of trustees; an organized body of law observance and law administration for all departments, and support of legislation "in principle" rather than in the letter of the bill. About 5,000 women attended the convention. Mrs. Sherman and Mrs. Edward Franklin White of Indianapolis, first vice president, were re-elected. The new officers are Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole of Brockton, Mass., recording secretary, and Mrs. H. G. Reynolds of Paducah, Ky., treasurer.

CROWN PRINCE ADOLPHUS and Crown Princess Louise of Sweden with their large suite landed in New York Thursday and went immediately to Washington for the unveiling of the memorial to John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor. They are receiving all fitting official and social attentions and plan to make a tour of the country before returning home.

MT. TOKAICHI, a long quiescent volcano on Hokkaido island, Japan, suddenly erupted with disastrous results. Streams of lava poured over the countryside and there were numerous landslides. Hundreds of farmers were believed to have perished and at least one village was wiped out. A little later the Mayama Irrigate reservoir in the Akita prefecture of northern Japan, burst its banks and swept away half of the town of Kitsura. The town had a population of 7,000 and it is feared that the casualty list may be heavy.

ACCORDING to a report just issued by the federal trade commission, the national wealth of the United States amounted to $353,000,000,000 in 1922, an apparent increase in the ten-year period of 72 per cent, but only 16 per cent when allowance is made for changes in the purchasing power of the dollar. National income of the United States is estimated at $70,000,000,000 for the year 1923, which is somewhat less than the total in 1920, when it was $75,000,000,000, but more than in 1921, when, during that year of depression, it dropped to $53,000,000,000.

MARSHAL PILSUDSKI seems to have decided that Poland needs a dictatorship for about a year to give the national assembly time to revise the constitution. The election of a new President has been postponed for some days and the marshal himself apparently has consented to be one of the candidates. In order to impress the country with the fact that he had no intention of setting up a military dictatorship, Pilsudski ordered five regiments to leave Warsaw for their provincial garrisons. Americans who are engaged in extensive financial deals with the Polish government are much dissatisfied, and Minister Stetson suggested to Foreign Minister Valeski that America be kept better informed concerning the government of Poland and its plans.

FROM MRS. TIMS

Just before going to press today, the Informer received a letter from Mrs. J. L. Tims, who is at Marlin recovering from an operation. At the time the letter was written, she had not been allowed to sit up any, but her doctor had intimated that he might let her sit up a little while later in the day. She and Mr. Tims are anxious to get back home, and hope to start in about a week, but can't tell yet.

Mrs. Tims wants all of her friends to know that she appreciates the letters they have written and would answer each one if she could. But as this has been impossible, she is writing to all of them through the columns of the Informer.
