GOLDEN DOLLARS

Golden dollars from a golden product—that's what dairying means to this community.

And the beauty of it is that this golden harvest is not limited to one time, but comes in the year round. A few good dairy cows will add greatly to the family income and be a life saver in a lean year.

The dairy cow is our best friend—let's have more of her kind here in our neighborhood.

HEAVY RAINFALL DOES SOME DAMAGE HERE

A heavy rain fell over this section Wednesday evening, doing some damage to crops, but not a great deal in Hedley territory, so far as we have learned. The roads were considerably washed in spots.

The greatest damage done was to the Fort Worth & Denver railroad. The track was washed out at several places between here and Lelia Lake and between Lelia Lake and Clarendon. Traffic was held up eighteen or twenty hours. The north-bound passenger was held up here from 7:12 Wednesday until after dinner Thursday, and we had six passenger trains here within an hour after the track was made tractable.

It looks like more rain might come—but we hope not just yet.

MAIZE FOR SALE—Smooth, clean heads. At my barn, one mile east of Hedley. $16 per ton. J. R. Boston.

"Uncle Jim" Lancaster of Waxahachie is here on a visit at the home of his nephew, W. T. Youree. Uncle Jim is 84 years old, but doesn't look it. He fought through the Civil War—four years—and our guess is that he gave a good account of himself. He looks like that sort of a man. We hope he will have a pleasant visit in our town.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

First Baptist Church Notes
 Quite a number of our Sunday School forces are away in the wheat harvest on the Plains, and several families celebrated the Fourth of July with a trip out of town, but we had 159 present in the classes last Sunday anyway. Several new members were added to the rolls. Two classes went star grades. Also, the attendance in the preaching services was very encouraging, and especially so at the evening hour. The pastor is happy to report that the evening hour sermon has received a hearty endorsement from a great number who heard it. One good woman said: "It was the most appropriate and most needed sermon Hedley has heard in eight years." Several good men said, "You are right about it; just pour it on." We are just getting our batteries in position. The forts of sin will be shelled when we get their range. In fact, we do not expect to win a war in one battle.
 Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Sufficient Grace." The subject for the evening hour will be "Why Some Men Fear the Truth Will Leak Out." Just as well come on in, gentlemen, it is leaking out anyway. Everybody knows what makes you so nervous and anxious and irritable. Better face the issue here than further up the creek; better now than later. Come on in. We rang your number last Sunday night, and we will ring it again.

BAREE, Son of Kazan

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

It was a splendid night that followed. Perhaps Baree would have slept through it in his nest on the top of the dam if the bacon smell had not stirred the new hunger in him. Since his adventure in the canyon, the deeper forest had held a dread for him, especially at night. But this night was like a pale, golden day; it was moonless; but the stars shone like a billion distant lamps, flooding the world in a soft and hilly sea of light. A gentle whisper of wind made pleasant sounds in the treetops. Beyond that it was very quiet, for it was Puskowepesim—the Moulting Moon—and the wolves were not hunting, the owls had lost their voice, the foxes slunk with the silence of shadows, and even the beavers had begun to cease their labors. The horns of the moose, the deer and the caribou were in tender velvet, and they moved but little and fought not at all. It was late July, Moulting Moon of the Cree, Moon of Silence for the Chippewyan.

In this silence Baree began to hunt. He stirred up a family of half-grown partridges, but they escaped him. He pursued a rabbit that was swifter than he. For an hour he had no luck. Then he heard a sound that made every drop of blood in him thrill. He was close to McTaggart's camp, and what he had heard was a rabbit in one of McTaggart's snares. He came out into a little starlit open and there he saw the rabbit going through a most marvelous pantomime. It amazed him for a moment, and he stopped in his tracks.

Wapooos, the rabbit, had run his furry head into the snare, and his first frightened jump had "shot" the sapling to which the copper wire was attached so that he was now hung half in midair, with only his hind feet touching the ground. And there he was dancing madly while the noose about his neck slowly choked him to death.

Baree gave a sort of gasp. He could understand nothing of the part that the wire and the sapling were playing in this curious game. All he could see was that Wapooos was hopping and dancing about on his hind legs in a most puzzling and unrabbit-like fashion. It may be that he thought it some sort of play. In this instance, however, he did not regard Wapooos as he had looked on Umisk the beaver. He knew that Wapooos made mighty fine eating, and after another moment or two of hesitation he darted upon his prey.

Wapooos, half gone already, made almost no struggle, and in the glow of the stars Baree finished him, and for half an hour afterward he feasted.

McTaggart had heard no sound, for the snare into which Wapooos had run his head was the one set farthest from his camp. Beside the smoldering coals of his fire he sat with his back to a tree, smoking his black pipe and dreaming contentedly of Nepeese, when Baree continued his night-wandering. Baree no longer had the desire to hunt. He was too full. But he nosed in and out of the starlit spaces, enjoying immensely the stillness and the golden glow of the night. He was following a rabbit-run when he came to a place where two fallen logs left a trail no wider than his body. He squeezed through; something tightened about his neck; there was a sudden snap—a swish as the sapling was released from its "trigger"—and Baree was jerked off his feet so suddenly that he had no time to conjecture as to what was happening.

The yelp in his throat died in a gurgle, and the next moment he was going through the pantomimic actions of Wapooos, who was having his vengeance inside him. For the life of him Baree could not keep from dancing about, while the wire grew tighter and tighter about his neck. Furiously he struggled. It was a miracle that the fine wire held him. In a few moments more it must have broken—but McTaggart had heard him! The Factor caught up his blanket and a heavy stick, as he hurried toward the snare. It was not a rabbit making those sounds—he knew that. Perhaps a fisher-cat—a lynx, a fox, a young wolf—

It was the wolf he thought of first when he saw Baree at the end of the wire. He dropped the blanket and raised the club. If there had been clouds overhead, or the stars had been less brilliant, Baree would have died as surely as Wapooos had died. With the club raised over his head McTaggart saw in time the white star, the white-tipped ear and the jet black of Baree's coat.

With a swift movement he exchanged the club for the blanket.

In that hour, could McTaggart have looked ahead to the days that were to come, he would have used the club. Could he have foreseen the great tragedy in which Baree was to play a vital part, wrecking his hopes and destroying his world, he would have beaten him to a pulp there under the light of the stars. And Baree, could he have foreseen what was to happen between this brute with a white skin and the most beautiful thing in the forests, would have fought even more bitterly before he surrendered himself to the smothering embrace of the Factor's blanket. On this night Fate had played a strange hand for them both, and only that Fate, and perhaps the stars above, held knowledge of what its outcome was to be.

Half an hour later Bush McTaggart's fire was burning brightly again: in the glow of it Baree lay trussed up like an Indian papoose, tied into a balloon-shaped ball with babiche thong, his head alone showing where his captor had cut a hole for it in the blanket. He was hopelessly caught—so closely imprisoned in the blanket that he could scarcely move a muscle of his body. A few feet away from him McTaggart was bathing a bleeding hand in a basin of water. There was also a red streak down the side of McTaggart's bluish neck.

"You little devil!" he snarled at Baree. "You little devil!"

He reached over suddenly and gave Baree's head a vicious blow with his heavy hand.

"I ought to heat your brains out, and—I believe I will!"

Baree watched him as he picked up a stick close at his side—a bit of firewood. Pierrot had chased him, but this was the first time he had been near enough to the man-monster to see the red glow in his eyes. They were not like the eyes of the wonderful creature who had almost caught him in the web of her hair, and who had crawled after him under the rock. They were beast-eyes. They made him shrink and try to draw his head back into the blanket as the stick was raised. At the same time he snarled. His white fangs gleamed in the firelight. His ears were flat. He wanted to sink his teeth in the red throat, where he had already drawn blood.

The stick fell. It fell again, and when McTaggart was done Baree lay half-stunned, his eyes partly closed by the blows and his mouth bleeding.

"That's the way we take the devil out of a wild dog," snarled McTaggart. "I guess you won't try the biting game again, eh, youngster? A thousand devils—but you went almost to the bone of this hand!"

He began washing the wound again. Baree's teeth had sunk deep, and there was a troubled look in the Factor's face. It was July—a bad month for bites. From his kit he got a small flask of whisky and turned a bit of the raw liquor on the wound, cursing Baree as it burned into his flesh.

Baree's half-shut eyes were fixed on him steadily. He knew that at last he had met the deadliest of all his enemies. And yet he was not afraid. The club in Bush McTaggart's hand had not killed his spirit. It had killed his fear. It had roused in him a hatred such as he had never known—not even when he was fighting Oohoomi-sew, the outlaw owl. The vengeful animosity of the wolf was burning in him now, along with the savage courage of the dog.

Baree did not take his eyes from McTaggart as he smoked. He watched the man when the latter stretched himself out on the bare ground and went to sleep. He listened, still later, to the man-monster's heinous snoring. Again and again during the long night he struggled to free himself. He would never forget that night. It was terrible. In the thick, hot folds of the blanket his limbs and body were suffocated until the blood almost stood still in his veins. Yet he did not whine.

They began to journey before the sun was up, for if Baree's blood was almost dead within him, Bush McTaggart's was scorching his body with the heat of its anticipation. He made his last plans as he walked swiftly through the forest with Baree under his arm. He would send Pierrot at once for Father Grotin at his Mission seventy miles to the west. He would marry Nepeese—yes, marry her! That would tickle Pierrot. And he would be alone with Nepeese while Pierrot was gone for the missionary.

This thought flamed McTaggart's blood like strong whisky. There was no thought in his hot and unreasoning brain of what Nepeese might say—of what she might think. He was not after the soul of her. His hand clenched, and he laughed harshly as there flashed on him for an instant the thought that perhaps Pierrot would not want to give her up. Pierrot! Bah! It would not be the first time he had killed a man—or the second.

McTaggart laughed again, and he walked still faster. There was no chance of his losing—no chance for Nepeese to get away from him. He—Bush McTaggart—was lord of this wilderness, master of its people, arbiter of their destinies. He was power—and the law.

The sun was well up when Pierrot, standing in front of his cabin with Nepeese, pointed to a rise in the trail three or four hundred yards away, over which McTaggart had just appeared.

"He is coming."

With a face which had aged since last night he looked at Nepeese. Again he saw the dark glow in her eyes and the deepening red of her parted lips, and his heart was sick again with dread. Was it possible—

She turned on him, her eyes shining, her voice trembling.

"Remember, Nootawe—you must send him to me for his answer," she cried quickly, and she darted into the cabin. With a cold, gray face, Pierrot faced Bush McTaggart.

Chapter VII

From the window, her face screened by the folds of the curtain which she had made for it, the Willow saw what happened outside. She was not smiling now. She was breathing quickly, and her body was tense. She heard McTaggart's coarse voice, his boisterous greeting, and then she saw him showing Pierrot what he carried under his arm. There came to her distinctly his explanation of how he had caught his captive in a rabbit-snare. He unwrapped the blanket. Nepeese gave a cry of amazement. In an instant she was out beside them. She did not look at McTaggart's red face, blazng in its joy and exultation.

"It is Baree!" she cried.

She took the bundle from McTaggart and turned to Pierrot.

"Tell him that Baree belongs to me," she said.

She hurried into the cabin. McTaggart looked after her, stunned and amazed. Then he looked at Pierrot. A man half blind could have seen that Pierrot was as amazed as he. Nepeese had not spoken to him—the Factor of Lac Bain! She had not looked at him! And she had taken the dog from him with as little concern as though he had been a wooden man. The red in his face deepened as he stared from Pierrot to the door through which she had gone, and which she had closed behind her.

Great Voices Called Accidents of Nature

Great voices are rare and undoubtedly owe their wonderful purity of tone to an accidental combination of those physical characteristics which lead to the production of song. The human musical instrument, though built of living tissues, resembles in structure the reed organ pipe fitted with a vox humana stop. In both cases the note depends on the vibrations of a column of air produced in the organ by a reed and in the voice by the vocal cords. The human air chamber corresponding to the organ pipe is composed of the larynx and the bronchial system beneath it.

The throat, mouth and nasal cavities form the resonators which, by alternation in shape and size, are able to pick out and emphasize certain component parts of the fundamental tones produced in the larynx. The lungs form the bellows which produce the upward blast of air, and upon their quality depends the loudness of the voice.—London Daily Mail

Butter was known for at least 2,000 years before the Christian era. It was not used as food, however, but mostly as a medicine and ointment, and in some parts was employed as an illuminant for lamps. The butter was churned crudely in skin bags or pouches, and was a very inferior article. Cheese has been known since the earliest times, the oldest mention of it occurring in 1400 B. C. It was used as an article of food before but-

It has been said that a man is known by absorption, meaning that we can tell the quality and type of anyone's life by the things he allows to absorb him.

SUMMERY DESSERTS

With fresh fruit such as berries, melons and the luscious peaches, apricots and plums, you can come along with their season, we need not plan for made desserts unless they are very simple, as fruit is the best of dessert.

An occasional pudding not too rich or heavy or too complicated to prepare will be enjoyed.

Apricot Ice.—Take one cupful of corn syrup, two cupfuls of canned or fresh apricots, cook until soft, and put through a colander. If dried fruit is used cook overnight. Cook soft before mashing. Add two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, a cupful of water, mix well and freeze.

Tapioca Fruit Pudding.—Heat two cupfuls of milk in a double boiler and add one-third of a cupful of sugar and stir in six tablespoonfuls of tapioca. Cook until clear, pour into a bowl, cool, then fold in one cupful of heavy cream whipped with a teaspoonful of vanilla. Serve with sliced peaches or berries in season.

Cornstarch With Fruit Pudding.—Prepare a plain cornstarch pudding, using a tablespoonful of cornstarch to one and one-half cupfuls of milk and one-third of a cupful of sugar or less. If the fruit is sweet. Cover with crushed strawberries or raspberries, well sweetened and serve with cream.

Junket.—This is one of the simplest and most dainty desserts. It may be served with cream or fruit and cream. Heat to lukewarm one quart of milk, dissolve a tablespoonful of junket in a tablespoonful of water and stir into the milk. Add sugar to season, and pour into shallow dish. Allow the curd to thicken. Allow the curd to set in a warm room as the junket is quicker on the milk. The junket thickened set on top with a spoonful of jelly with chocolate or raspberry sauce.

A pastry shell previously cooled, filled with cream, sugar and topped with fruit is a dish both pretty and quick.

Lemon Sauce.—Melt one cupful of sugar and one cupful of butter in a saucepan and cook for ten minutes. Add a cupful of lemon juice and of the lemon, and a dash of butter and a dash of salt.

Dishes From Meat.—A cupful or two of any well-broiled meat or fish may be made into a petzizing dish.

Beef Patties.—Two cupfuls of cooked beef minced fine, season with salt, pepper, sage, thyme, lemon juice and grated onion. Add half a cupful of boiled rice, or dry bread crumbs and one egg well beaten. Add a little water if needed to make a paste. Form into flat cakes and fry in hot fat.

Chicken Goulash.—Cut into dice two medium-sized potatoes, uncooked. Put into a frying pan two tablespoonfuls of olive oil and, when hot, add the diced potatoes. Cook five minutes stirring constantly. Add a dash of paprika, a cupful of boiling water, a crushed clove of garlic, a cupful of chopped cooked chicken, and salt to taste. Cover and cook until the potatoes are done, stirring frequently.

Spanish Chicken.—Prepare a sauce with a tablespoonful of butter and two of flour, two cupfuls of water to which a teaspoonful or less of beef extract has been added. Add one cupful of chicken cut fine, one small onion cut into dice, one pimento also cut fine, and two tablespoonfuls of cooked peas. Heat until thoroughly hot and serve on toast.

Frankforts sliced very thin and heated hot in the oven will take the place of other meat; for a late lunch sliced onion served in sandwiches will be a good combination, provided you enjoy the odoriferous bulb. Lyon-naise potatoes are also good with frankforts.

For those who enjoy tomato sauce a quick one may be prepared from canned tomato soup, using a cupful or less, adding such other seasoning as desired.

peal to many pretty frocks made of georgette or chiffon. Deep cream colored ecru laces are used, in godets or narrow, triangular panels, set into circular or plaited skirts or in deep lace borders and circular flouncings. These and set-in medallions, are combined with all the light colors and with black, but the favorite combinations are those that have little color contrast or none, as in many lovely frocks of warm tan georgette made up into lace to match, or pale gold georgette with cream lace.

First Baptist Church Notes

Quite a number of our Sunday School forces are away in the wheat harvest on the Plains, and several families celebrated the Fourth of July with a trip out of town, but we had 159 present in the classes last Sunday anyway. Several new members were added to the rolls. Two classes went star grades. Also, the attendance in the preaching services was very encouraging, and especially so at the evening hour. The pastor is happy to report that the evening hour sermon has received a hearty endorsement from a great number who heard it. One good woman said: "It was the most appropriate and most needed sermon Hedley has heard in eight years." Several good men said, "You are right about it; just pour it on." We are just getting our batteries in position. The forts of sin will be shelled when we get their range. In fact, we do not expect to win a war in one battle.

Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Sufficient Grace." The subject for the evening hour will be "Why Some Men Fear the Truth Will Leak Out." Just as well come on in, gentlemen, it is leaking out anyway. Everybody knows what makes you so nervous and anxious and irritable. Better face the issue here than further up the creek; better now than later. Come on in. We rang your number last Sunday night, and we will ring it again.

POULTRY

GROWING CHICKS NEED CLEAN PEN

Costs of poultry production can be lowered by raising big flocks just lowered by raising big flocks just as the cost of pork production can be reduced by the raising of big hogs. Heavy mortality among chicks can often be prevented by timely observation and care.

By the time they are a week old the chicks should be allowed, in the ordinary season, to run out doors. Combine them in small yards at first or until they learn where the heat is to be found and they will go in and out of the brooder house freely. In the early spring the yard should be enclosed in muslin-covered frames which later can be supplanted by poultry netting or lath. As the chick grows the yard should be enlarged sufficiently to keep them on green grass. Once put on free range, there is likely to be difficulty in feeding the chicks unless they are kept apart from the hens. The same difficulty arises when chicks of different ages are being raised together.

Open Type of Equipment Useful for the Chicks

There are two good reasons why some open type of equipment is useful in raising young chicks. They are: Need for more room than is supplied by the regular equipment and need for the regular equipment and need for a house that can be thoroughly ventilated in hot weather.

A house can be cheaply constructed that will be of material help in such a situation. For a small flock this can be made six feet square and a board foot extended from six inches to a foot over the enclosure. The framework of the house may be made of 2 by 2-inch pieces if they are well braced. Two-inch wire mesh is satisfactory for the walls. No floor is necessary, as the house can easily be moved.

Transmit Tuberculosis From Poultry to Stock

Some thought should be given by poultry raisers, particularly in the dairy districts of northern Illinois, to the possibility of finding tuberculosis in their poultry flock. It has been definitely proved, as described in Orange Judd Illinois Farmer, that tuberculosis may be transmitted from poultry to other live stock or from other live stock to poultry.

Mash Brings Forth Eggs

It is the mash that is going to influence the egg yield, yet it has been their choice of grain or mash. By giving them a light feed of grain in the morning, their hunger will drive them to the mash hopper and hence to the nest. One hundred hens should consume 12 to 15 pounds of scratch grain daily. Two-thirds of which should be given to them at the night feeding. Let the hens go to roost with a full crop.

How to Handle Roup

Roup in chicks is successfully handled as follows: Remove all unwell birds from the rest, if over-crowded in houses, relieve the condition, giving the light varieties like the Leg. spread of the disease. If over-crowded in houses, relieve the condition, giving the light varieties like the Leg.

DISPATCHES FROM TANGIER—The appearance of a new leader of revolt against Spain and France to make the place of the fallen Abd-el-Krim.
