DAN MOODY ELECTED GOVERNOR; MANY HOT CONTESTS IN SATURDAY'S PRIMARY

The Democratic primary held last Saturday created more interest here than any other held in recent years. Aside from the general statewide interest in the race for Governor, and for Attorney General, the races for many county and precinct offices were hotly contested. The county vote for Governor, Attorney General and the various local offices was as follows:

For Governor
Dan Moody 1443
Lynch Davidson 400
Mrs. Ferguson 856

For Attorney General
J. V. Allred 1090
T. S. Christopher 188
Claud Pollard 144
(Others less than 100)

For Congress
Marvin Jones 2187

For Representative
Dewey Young 2214

For District Attorney
Harwood Beville 1248
Jas. C. Mahan 712

For County Judge
J. R. Porter 2214

For District Clerk
Mrs. Flora G. White 2172

For County Clerk
Chas. M. Lowry 865
Miss Lottie E. Lane 1059
L. A. Stroud 297

For Sheriff and Tax Collector
M. W. Mosley 557
Edward Carlson 62
M. O. Barnett 1132
W. L. Crane 491

For Tax Assessor
J. O. Adamson 392
J. H. Richey 274
Miss Eula Naylor 1458

For County Treasurer
Mrs. Annie Park 2143

For County Attorney
R. Y. King 856
Curtis E. Thompson 1010

For County Surveyor
C. E. Killough 2198

For County Chairman
J. J. Alexander 2130

None of the county races will go into the second primary except that for county clerk, between Miss Lane, incumbent, and Mr. Lowry. M. O. Barnett won the sheriff's race by a majority of 22 votes over three opponents, and Miss Naylor defeated two opponents handily.

One of the interesting side lights in this election was the reception accorded Hedley candidates by Clarendon voters. It seems to be largely a matter of geography with them. If your location is right, you get the votes; if not, you get what the little boy shot at Hedley evidently is not located right.

Hedley precinct candidates fared as follows:
For Commissioner, Pre. 3
R. L. Fairris 82
W. E. Obristle 70
A. B. Bynum 127
J. F. Stiles 817
J. F. Waldron 60

W. E. Reeves 57
Reeves' name not on ticket
For Constable, Pre. 3
H. P. Aull 201
J. D. Shaw 274
Joe Gilliam 54
Gilliam's name not on ticket
J. B. Bain and A. E. Tidrow will run it off for Commissioner in Pre 4. Bain got 42 votes and Tidrow 38.

E. B. Richardson was high man for Public Weigher at Lelia Lake, with 183 votes; Melvin Cook was second with 68. We understand they will run it off.

Jas. C. Mahan has been elected District Attorney over Harwood Beville, the Collingsworth county man carrying three of the four counties in the district.

The Informer intended to publish the full county vote in tabulated form in this issue, but we were unable to get it in time. Except for the courtesy of the County Clerk and her force, who copied the vote for us, and Frank Kendall, who brought it to us yesterday afternoon, our report in this issue would have been meager. Our thanks to them.

MRS. J. S. PERRINE DIES IN WICHITA HOSPITAL

Hedley people were very deeply grieved Tuesday when a message came from Wichita Falls announcing the death at an early hour that morning of Mrs. J. S. Perrine at a hospital in that city. She had been taken down there some four weeks ago, when her illness was recognized as being serious, but human love and human skill were unable to win the battle.

A vast throng of friends who loved her met the train that bore her body back home Tuesday evening. The town was closed for the funeral Wednesday, at 2:30 p. m., the service being conducted by Rev. A. B. Crocker, pastor of the First Christian Church, Clarendon. Interment was made in Rowe cemetery. A great concourse of friends, from here and elsewhere, attended these services.

As some of the data desired was not available in time for this issue, we will publish a more suitable obituary in next week's Informer.

First Baptist Church Notes

Everybody seemed happy to have our Superintendent back in Sunday School again last Sunday. He reported a pleasant vacation spent in Colorado and New Mexico. Our Sunday School picnic at Naylor Springs on Friday was a great success. We had lemonade to drink, a bountiful dinner to eat, a sandy bottom creek to wade in, and some candidates to hurrah, besides a flitter or two to patch on the roadside, and the usual joys.

Next Sunday morning we will preach on "Spiritual Baptism and the Pouring Out of the Holy Spirit." Text Acts 1:5 and 2:17
Were the pouring and the baptism two separate acts of the Lord? At the evening hour Bro
John Carney, a prohibition lecturer and reformer and chalk talker with a national wide reputation, will occupy the pulpit. Bro John Carney was a drunkard and a professional sign painter before he was converted. He has had many thrilling experiences. He uses a dozen or two hand painted pictures to illustrate his talks. The house will be crowded. Come early. Bring the children and let them get impressions from his pictures of truth that will bless their lives and help to mold their moral character for righteousness. The pastor will be absent in a revival at the evening hour, but one of the deacons will introduce Bro.
Carney and assist him with the service.

SHERIFF'S RAGE IS WON BY BARNETT

The following news dispatch was sent out from Clarendon to the daily papers Wednesday:

The sheriff's race in this county, which created more interest than any other, was won by Deputy Sheriff M. O. Barnett over three opponents by a margin of 22 votes. Barnett has established quite a reputation as an officer by his arrests of liquor law violators and the breaking up of the knob knocking ring that gave so much trouble about six months ago. More than thirty officers were looking for the bunch that was apprehended by Deputy Barnett.

The Short Skirt Triumphs

STOCKINGLESS NEW YORK CO-EDS

THEY'RE SHORT IN MANILA

THEY WORE THESE IN 1905

By PROEHL HALLER JAKLON

SHORT skirts are no longer news. And woman's apparel, what there is of it, isn't half the topic of heated conversation that it was a few years ago.

Of course, now and then you read a news item announcing that next season's skirts are to be shorter or perhaps you may encounter a wheezy old joke involving some peculiarity of woman's dress, but, in general, critical comment on feminine attire occupies less and less space in our news columns. Of fashions and modes we have aplenty, and the space devoted to style information steadily increases, for as a nation we have become dress conscious.

Short skirts are no longer news merely because news is supposed to concern itself with the unusual. And short skirts are no longer unusual. Today long skirts are almost as rare as the bustle. You see short skirts everywhere—shorter than they ever were—and the world goes along unshocked and, for all that has been promised and threatened, seemingly unharmed.

Women's clothes are lighter now than they ever have been, with the exception of the period directly following the French revolution, when the girls of Marseilles wore simple tunics modeled after the fashion of the ancient Greeks. The clothes of Miss 1926 weigh sixteen ounces. To add to them here would add scarcely one line.

And it seems that America by no means is alone in this matter of dress. France, England, Germany, in fact, most of the civilized world has turned for the new freedom in dress, and is away with it. In Paris the skirts are so short that an American woman who had lived for several years found upon returning to her shores that it would be necessary to remodel her clothes. In Berlin and London it is the same. The lower picture above shows a group of Berlin mannequins, with their numbers written on their dresses.

From the standpoint of health today's fashions have the endorsement of physicians, except where fashion demands dieting and self-starvation in order to attain that slimmish which Americans have come to recognize as beauty. Medical science many years ago warned the ladies that if they persisted in encasing themselves in long, tight-fitting corsets they were likely to injure themselves permanently. They laughed at this advice at first, but gradually they loosened the strings. Then the World War came, and the younger generation, finding it could play better without harness, discarded the corset entirely.

Some of the abbreviated dresses of today would have caused a panic in the streets of twenty years ago. Does that mean that women have become depraved? Is it "immoral" to wear skirts that reach only to the knee? "No daughter of mine will make such a spectacle of herself!" said parents with Nineteenth century standards of modes and manners. Now these same parents sit in the gallery a little puzzled and bewildered, patiently watching, secretly relieved that woman's attractiveness, far from being impaired, has been greatly enhanced by her new liberation.

One observer argues that the idea of immorality is closely allied to the idea of shame; and that, having got rid of a good deal of shame, we have attained to a higher degree of moral health than prevailed in Jane Austen's day when woman had only one preoccupation—sex. This is the opinion of Hugh A. Studdert Kennedy, former London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, and brother of the Rev. G. A. Studdert Kennedy.

Writing in the Forum, Mr. Kennedy recalls a June day in London twelve years ago. Passing under the Admiralty arch, he was shocked to behold a woman "obviously of grace and refinement, beautifully gowned in the mode of the day, save for the outrageous fact, that the sleeves of her dress were completely transparent from the wrists to the shoulders."

Soon a crowd started to follow her. Some youths began to jostle her, and "before I knew what I was doing I had pushed my way through the crowd, enlisted the services of a policeman, and between the two of us we got the half-fainting girl into a taxi. By the time I had deposited her at Queen Anne's mansions, where she was staying with her father and mother, she had tearfully explained to me that they had just arrived from New York, that every woman in New York was wearing that kind of dress, that she never dreamed that such a thing would happen, and that she would never get over it."

THEY'RE SHORT IN BERLIN

Ten years, including war years, passed. Mr. Kennedy again passed under Admiralty arch into St. James' park. "Everywhere one looked, dotted about the lawns, were girls, not in gowns with transparent sleeves, but in gowns with no sleeves at all; in gowns that did not come one inch below the knee; in gowns devoid of necks and only very transparently supplied with backs."

"Ten years before, one lone girl clad after a fashion, which now would be regarded as almost Quakerish in its modesty, had created something bordering on a panic in this place: women openly dubbed her a hussy; men and boys openly followed her, and passers-by had wondered what the world was coming to."

"And this was what the world was coming to—bare arms, bare knees, bare necks, and, yes, bare backs, too. And yet I could not help but note how unconcerned everybody seemed about it. It seemed to me that the air was cleaner and purer than it had been ten years before, as if an unholy pressure had been relieved, and impudent hocus-pocus shorn of its imaginary power. Legs were everywhere, arms were everywhere, and yet the men and boys passing back and forth were going about their daily walk and conversation just as if nothing were happening, just as if the world around them were not coming to anything out of the ordinary, after all."

"A great artist once told me an interesting story. We were talking about women's dress, and how entirely it was a matter of the point of view. He recalled one day when he was a young art student that a curious thing happened at the life class he was attending. The model was a young girl of refinement and beauty of form, and the class was drawing her undraped figure. She was a good model, and had been sitting motionless for half an hour, when, suddenly glancing upwards, she saw the face of a man peering at her through the window of the skylight. She had been posing for half an hour before a class of fifty men, yet when she saw this face at the skylight, with an outraged cry, she threw a wrapper around her shoulders, jumped from the platform, and withdrew in tears to her dressing room."

"Now the artist has always been regarded as necessarily a man of looser morals than the man who follows other callings. It is an absurd as-umption, of course, but it arises from the fact that the average human being, dragged into a 'respect' for the 'mysteries' of women's dress cannot conceive of anyone, who does not give a rap for it, as anything but immoral. Artists are not less moral than other men, but have, on the contrary, gained a certain measure of freedom from that incubus of mystery which makes for, as nature intended it to make for, the excitement of desire. And the average human mind resents the acquisition of this freedom.

"A hundred years ago the 'womanly woman' had perhaps reached her most 'womanly' expression. The women of Jane Austen's day were almost completely preoccupied with questions of sex. They had it for their every thought. They sewed a little, cooked, and played the harpsichord, but when they did these things, it was always with some very gallant gentleman in view. And as to the very gallant gentlemen, they were so gallant that a chance view of my lady's ankle was sufficient to put them into a cold sweat."

"I begin to see this younger generation today as 'some holy thing.' With unerring, if unconscious wisdom, the modern woman is doing the first things first, she is getting rid of the mystery of the flesh. And the man who twenty years ago was fired by the suggestion of mystery of the clothed form finds himself unmoved in the presence of so much nakedness, because it is unashamed."

"The lack of morality is not in the nakedness but in the shame, and the shame grows less day by day. The question of sex is really occupying thought far less today than at any time in history. And so when a prince of the church declares, as he did recently, that he is shocked at the unparalleled depravity of woman's dress, and declares that he is 'at a loss to explain the universal decadence which has swept the world,' the woman of today is apt to answer him shortly enough."

"No transitional period is desirable for its own sake, and as far as the relation of the sexes is concerned, we are passing through a period of transition, a period in which license is, more often than not, mistaken for liberty, and old-time ideas vanish in a peal of laughter. And the laughter is the most wholesome thing about it. The surest way for the world to rid itself of the hocus-pocus of sex is to laugh at it."

A lady with a lamp shall stand
In the great history of the land.
Well, the lady has come, and she is standing.
And her skirts are short, and her arms are bare.
As to her back, I cannot see it, for her face is towards me; but on her face, upturned to the light of her lamp, is shining the glory of a new era."

NELLIE REVELL Says:

FOR five years I was barred by illness from the arena of active life, having been forced by circumstances to fight another sort of battle, and during practically all of my time, my office, home, gymnasium, reception room, and even my restaurant was a hospital room. But no matter what vicissitudes I have experienced, no matter what I have lost in this long struggle, nothing can deprive me of the memories I treasure.

I find a parallel in the story of the old colored man who had saved all year for his annual visit to the circus. At length the day rolled around and he set out for town in a shiny, bulging frock coat and a beaver hat that showed the ravages of many years. With him he took his whole fortune and thrilled with thoughts of the show, the gallons of pink lemonade and the yards of hot dogs the money would buy.

However, on his arrival at the show ground he dallied, not wisely but too credulously with the men who managed to live on one little pea and three empty shells the season through. After the usual preliminary luck the old negro enriched their pockets by the whole sum of his savings and was forced to walk back home without a glimpse of the big show, a taste of lemonade or the smallest bite of "saw-sages."

When he reached his little settlement the envious gathered around him to inquire about the wonders of which they had heard so much.

He was unable to tell them anything except that a white gentleman had been so kind as to let him try to guess under which shell a pea had its abode and that, no matter what he guessed, the pea was always elsewhere. And he hadn't seen the show, nor tasted the lemonade nor enjoyed the much-craved frankfurters.

"Dey done cheated you, uncle," spoke up one of the younger sophisticates, who had been "taken" the same way the year before.

"Nor, sub," said the old man, "Ah won some money at fust and dey didn't mind dat a bit. Ah was pow'ful lucky for a time; den mah luck tu'n an' dat white man won. I neveh did see a man so lucky befo'."

"Lucky nothin'. Dey done took yob money," persisted the man of the world. "An' dey didn't leave 'nough to see de show, nor buy nothin' to eat an' drink. Dey Jus' done took eveh' thing away fum you."

"Mebbe so, mebbey so," replied the half-convicted Uncle Mose, but dey wuz one thing dey couldn't take away fum me. Ah done heah dat lion roah."

"That's the way I feel about my illness. And even if fate should never permit me to come back entirely, the world owes me nothing. I have given it a receipt in full. 'Ah done heah dat lion roah,' and all of life's crooked dice can't take that away from me."

If I live to be a hundred (and I'll have to, if I only do 50 per cent of the things I promised to do when I recovered from my illness), I will never forget the scene in my hospital room one Sunday afternoon two years ago. Jennie Jacobs, the theatrical agent, had come to call, and as she got out of the elevator she heard peals of laughter emanating from my room.

"Fine," she thought, "there's some nice, jolly company there," and she was glad, for she, herself, had not fully recovered from an automobile accident, and questioned her ability to cheer anyone. Upon entering she beheld Molly Fuller, the vaudeville actress, and the writer indulging in the sacred art of helping each other carry on.

Molly, who is blind, was telling me how funny she was at the prospect of returning to work in the vaudeville sketch that had been written for her by Blanch Merrill. We roared at the humorous possibilities in an act of the sort, she described.

"You see," said Molly, "if an attack of asthma overtakes me in the porch scene, I can just asthma all I like, and the audience will think it is a fine bit of acting."

"Yes," I replied. "Think of having asthma and being paid for it."

Miss Jacobs looked on but said little, and when Molly rose to leave and began fumbling her way out, still joking about my not bothering to come to the car with her, an atmosphere of tragedy enveloped the room. Miss Jacobs' eyes filled at the sight of two friends she had known in perfect health now so afflicted. The situation was tense and Bide Dudley, the dramatic editor was never more welcome any place in his life than when he walked into my room at that moment.

When you get blue and discouraged stand on the sidewalk and watch the crippled, the blind and the unsuccessful go by. Then you will thank your lucky stars that you are well, able to work and have a job.

Doing an injury puts you below your enemy; revenging one makes you but even with him, forgiving it sets you above him.—Benjamin Franklin.

WANTED TO EXCHANGE—A ton of prunes, little used, for a mess of steamed clams. Or what have you?

Every man has some weakness. A common one is making suggestions to his wife about running the house. (Copyright by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

(Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

All my life I have been hearing how much men get a week.

I begin to marvel at fifty dollars, and seventy-five seems enormous.

I hear of a New York man who gets three thousand dollars a week, and so well worth it that his employer worries for fear he will quit; or die, which would be worse. Thousand-dollar-a-week men are common in New York, I am told. I was talking with such a man the other day, in my home, when a neighbor came in who is rather proud because of getting sixty-five dollars every Saturday night.

"Joe," I said to him, "shake hands with a man who draws down a thousand dollars a week."

But prices are higher in New York. I took the high-priced man to a restaurant in our town for lunch. Three of us ordered all we wanted, and we wanted a good deal. The food was really excellent. The girl waiting on us was pretty, young, modest, and neatly dressed. The New York man said she could be "fixed up," and make a hit in the Folies chorus.

There was music, and pretty good music. The fixtures were fine, and everything clean and nice.

The check was a dollar and forty-five cents.

I showed it to the New York man: I think it interested him more than anything else he encountered in our town. The day the New York man was at my house, some one had sent me flowers, because of my birthday. The flowers were arranged in excellent taste; they were fine and fresh, and as abundant as the design called for.

The man took so much interest in the flowers that, to satisfy him, I inquired around, and found out what they cost: it is easily done in the country.

The New York man was astounded: the price was so low that he had a picture taken to show his friends in New York what could be done in the country for a little money.

We are very comfortable in the country, and none of us get a thousand dollars a week, or anywhere near it.

I am of the opinion that every girl should be a vigorous, popular, good-natured tomboy until twelve or thirteen years old. . . . Then she must become a lady and keep it up the rest of her life.

One of the most intellectual and best-behaved Americans once said: "To me it has always been a mystery how the average man, knowing something of the weakness of human nature, something of the temptations to which he himself has been exposed—remembering the evil of his life, the things he would have done had there been opportunity, and absolutely known discovery would be impossible—I wonder that such a man should have feelings of hatred toward the imprisoned."

Occasionally there is an outlaw horse which will die rather than submit to a saddle on his back; to work; to be ridden, guided. Is there an occasional man who cannot be forced to submit to laws, taxes, regulation, authority, precedent?

I don't know, but believe morality is the easiest thing taught.

But the only effective teaching is punishment, and it must be continuous; there must always be a policeman at the crossing, or the congestion will become troublesome, dangerous, and time wasted.

We must always realize that not far away there is a courthouse, a judge and a sheriff.

US: we never get rid of the devil in us; we can't, because he is our Adam.

I read the other day of a man who was driving on a rainy, misty morning, and accidentally passed the stop sign at a street crossing. A policeman yelled at him: "You dumb bell, what's the matter with you? Can't you read? . . . And the driver replied: 'Me a dumb bell! And me driving a five thousand dollar closed car, and you out there in the rain.' . . . There is quite a moral in the story: a good many critics are standing out in the rain, and crying dumb bell at men driving expensive closed cars.

In a small town there is too much to eat, and too much to drink in a large one.

I know a man who has a very conspicuous fault. Everyone recognizes and deplores it, as he is otherwise a rather promising fellow. . . . Everywhere people say: "Why doesn't he quit it? Why does he regularly make himself ridiculous?" . . . I think I supplied the answer to one fellow who asked the question: "For the reason that you and I do ridiculous things, and think they are smart." . . . It is said everyone should go to a doctor every six months, and have himself looked over for physical faults. On such a visit, the doctor will look into all your secret places. . . . Why not make an equally candid examination of yourself?

With her wet clothes clinging to her tightly, she was like a slim shadow as she crossed the soggy open and buried herself among the forest trees. Baree still followed. She went straight to a birch-tree that she had located that day and began tearing off the loose bark. An armful of this bark she carried close to the wigwam, and on it she heaped load after load of wet wood until she had a great pile. From a bottle in the wigwam she secured a dry match, and at the first touch of its tiny flame the birch-bark flared up like paper soaked in oil. Not until it was blazing a dozen feet into the air did she cease putting wood on it. Then she drove sticks into the soft ground and over these sticks stretched the blanket out to dry. After that she began to undress.

The rain had cooled the air, and the tonic of it—laden with the breath of the balsam and spruce—set the Willow's blood dancing in her veins. She forgot the discomfort of the deluge. She forgot the Factor from Lac Bain, and what Pierrot had told her. She danced about Baree, tossing her sea of hair about her, her naked body shimmering in and out of it, her eyes aglow, her lips laughing in her unreasoning happiness—the happiness of being alive, of drinking into her lungs the perfumed air of the forest, of seeing the stars and the wonderful sky above her. She stopped before Baree and cried laughingly at him, holding out her arms:

"Ahe, Baree—if you could only throw off your skin as easily as I have thrown off my clothes!"

She drew a deep breath, and her eyes shone with a sudden inspiration. Slowly her mouth formed into a round O, and leaning still nearer to Baree, she whispered:

ing; but when she left him, followed by Baree, and limping a little in the tightness of her shoes, the smile faded from his face, leaving it cold and staring.

"Mon Dieu," he whispered to himself in French, with a thought that was like a sharp stab at his heart. "She is not of her mother's blood—non. It is French. She is—yes—like an angel."

There was a change in Pierrot. During the three days of her dress-making Nepesse had been quite too excited to notice this change, and Pierrot had tried to keep it from her. He had been away ten days on the trip to Lac Bain, and he brought back to Nepesse the joyous news that M'sieu McTaggart was very sick with pechipo—the blood poison—news that made the Willow clap her hands and laugh happily. But he knew that the Factor would get well, and that he would come again to their cabin on the Gray Loon. And when next time he came—

It was when he was thinking of this that his face grew cold and hard, and his eyes burned. And he was thinking of it on this her birthday, even as her laughter floated to him like a song. Dieu, in spite of her seventeen years, she was nothing but a child—a baby! She could not guess his horrible visions. And the dread of awakening her for all time from that beautiful childhood kept him from

THOUGHT MALARIA STILL IN SYSTEM

Until Dodson's Liver Tone Drove Out Quarts of Sour Bile and Other Poisons.

There are entire sections where everyone seems to think they have malaria. Others believe they never fully got the malarial poison out of their systems.

Arnold Whiteson says: "For years I took calomel for the aches, biliousness, headache, constipation and the deathly feeling associated with what we believed to be malaria. 'Last year I heard about Dodson's Liver Tone and bought a bottle for a few cents. Man, man, what a Godsend. In the morning it drove out quarts of black, sour bile. I got back my appetite for food, braced right up and haven't had a sick spell since. Whenever I feel a little bilious or the stomach gets sour, one dose of Dodson's Liver Tone is all I need. It is surely a blessing.'"

Hundreds of others tell the same experience. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

Collected "Spare Parts" A man came so frequently under the surgeon's knife at a London hospital that he made a hobby of collecting himself in glass jars and bottles. Starting with tonsils, he went on with molars and such components, until he had filled a shelf with "spare parts," carefully dated and described.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Women Need a Mild Laxative -Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headaches, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

BELL SERVICE STATION

NELLIE REVELL Says:

FOR five years I was barred by illness from the arena of active life, having been forced by circumstances to fight another sort of battle, and during practically all of my time, my office, home, gymnasium, reception room, and even my restaurant was a hospital room. But no matter what vicissitudes I have experienced, no matter what I have lost in this long struggle, nothing can deprive me of the memories I treasure.

I find a parallel in the story of the old colored man who had saved all year for his annual visit to the circus. At length the day rolled around and he set out for town in a shiny, bulging frock coat and a beaver hat that showed the ravages of many years. With him he took his whole fortune and thrilled with thoughts of the show, the gallons of pink lemonade and the yards of hot dogs the money would buy.

When he reached his little settlement the envious gathered around him to inquire about the wonders of which they had heard so much. He was unable to tell them anything except that a white gentleman had been so kind as to let him try to guess under which shell a pea had its abode and that, no matter what he guessed, the pea was always elsewhere. And he hadn't seen the show, nor tasted the lemonade nor enjoyed the much-craved frankfurters.

"They done cheated you, uncle," spoke up one of the younger sophisticates, who had been "taken" the same way the year before. "Nor, sah," said the old man, "Ah won some money at fust and dey didn't mind dat a bit. Ah was pow'ful lucky for a time; den mah luck tu'n an' dat white man won. I never did see a man so lucky befo'."

"Lucky nothin'." Dey done took yob money," persisted the man of the world. "An' dey didn't leave 'nough to see de show, nor buy nothin' to eat an' drink. Dey jus' done took ev'ry thing away fum you."

Howe About—

By ED HOWE

(Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)
All my life I have been hearing how much men get a week.

I begin to marvel at fifty dollars, and seventy-five seems enormous.

I hear of a New York man who gets three thousand dollars a week, and so well worth it that his employer worries for fear he will quit; or die, which would be worse. Thousand-dollar-a-week men are common in New York, I am told. I was talking with such a man the other day, in my home, when a neighbor came in who is rather proud because of getting sixty-five dollars every Saturday night.

"Joe," I said to him, "shake hands with a man who draws down a thousand dollars a week."

But prices are higher in New York. I took the high-priced man to a restaurant in our town for lunch. Three of us ordered all we wanted, and we wanted a good deal. The food was really excellent. The girl waiting on us was pretty, young, modest, and neatly dressed. The New York man said she could be "fixed up," and make a hit in the Follies' chorus.

There was music, and pretty good music. The fixtures were fine, and everything clean and nice.

The check was a dollar and forty-five cents.

I showed it to the New York man: I think it interested him more than anything else he encountered in our town. The day the New York man was at my house, some one had sent me flowers, because of my birthday. The flowers were arranged in excellent taste; they were fine and fresh, and as abundant as the design called for.

The man took so much interest in the flowers that, to satisfy him, I inquired around, and found out what they cost: it is easily done in the country.

The New York man was astounded: the price was so low that he had a picture taken to show his friends in New York what could be done in the country for a little money.

We are very comfortable in the country, and none of us get a thousand dollars a week, or anywhere near it.
