condition is saved. The instrument board is stripped, headlights taken off, fenders unbolted or ripped off, and the engine stripped of its carburetor, distributor head, coil and similar parts. These usually go to the stockroom. Next the aluminum moldings in the interior and on the running-boards are pried off.

Burn Off Wood to Get the Metal

Only occasionally can the cushions be saved in their entirety, but there is often scrap value in the felt, hair, moss, leather and other material. When everything of value, scrap or salvage, has been cleared from the body, a few hammer blows knock off the body bolts and rivets, and the body is pushed off. In a specially-constructed fire-chamber the wood and other useless material is burned away. Then the sheet steel or aluminum is put through an alligator shear or otherwise cut into convenient size for sale.

Next the radiator comes off. While the lugs are being loosened and the tires made ready for removal, others of the crew cut the universal joints and loosen the spring shackles. A chain is wrapped around the motor, the subframe freed and the motor hoisted out. The motor is trucked to an elevator which lifts it to the motor room.

After the tires are removed, the springs unfastened from both front and rear axle and frame, the frame is ready either for the shear or the torch. Almost always these frames are in excellent physical condition, but for just this reason no one ever needs to replace one, and they are valueless except as scrap. Light frames are cut with the alligator shear, while the heavy ones get the torch. In either case, the scrap provides heavy melting steel.

The propeller shaft is left attached to the rear axle. If the springs are not to be stocked for resale, they are thrown in with the heavy melting steel.

All bolts, nuts, washers and similar small parts are saved. They are put up in twenty-pound cans to be sold for 98 cents. Spark plugs are collected and put on the counter at 5 cents each, and so on.

In the motor department the scrap parts are carefully assorted. Rubber hose connections are thrown into one pile. Aluminum crankcases are separated from the cast-iron cylinder blocks. The bronze or brass water pumps are sorted. The babbit metal in the bearings is removed for its somewhat higher scrap value.

Motor Blocks Must Be Smashed Flat

Inclusion of all low steel parts in scrap for eastern Pennsylvania furnaces has been of sufficient volume to compel melters to watch their purchases, and considerable attention is being given to the rising tide of automobile scrap. Most foundries object to receiving entire motor blocks, and frequent rejections occur. The situation is remedied by first smashing the heavy blocks into flat pieces.

If a million cars were scrapped last year, as one estimate puts it, about 900,000 tons of scrap, the bulk of it iron, was yielded.

Most of the passenger cars being scrapped now range between the 1918 to 1922 models, inclusive. It is rare that a car earlier than 1918 makes an appearance. Those from 1918 to 1920 are usually the higher priced ones, into which the makers naturally have built more life and durability than in cheaper cars. Many low-priced cars of 1922, and occasionally some as young as 1924, are junked.

It is true of almost every car, of not too ancient origin, that it has considerable potential service left in it, but the cost of rehabilitation is too high when new car prices are considered.

Our last two years of prosperity have been responsible, too, for the flood of cars into the stream flowing toward the wrecking yards. Almost everyone would rather possess a bright, mechanically perfect automobile than a used one if by any means he can afford it. And with the popularizing of the installment plan of purchase, almost everyone can at least bring into his possession, if only temporarily, this bright, new car by making a down payment on it of almost less actual cash than would be demanded for a used car. So he buys the new car, trusting that he will be able to continue to meet the payments, and consequently the used car he might have purchased gets the impetus which finally lands it, often prematurely, in the "auto graveyard."

posal of worn-out, wrecked and burned cars is an expanding problem.

Slightly more than 4,200,000 cars and trucks were manufactured in the United States in 1925. Stocks on dealers' hands at the beginning of 1926 were estimated to be smaller than those on hand in January, 1925. With exports not quite 303,000 and imports less than 1,000, the net gain in domestic supply was approximately 4,000,000. Yet registrations in all states last year exceeded those of 1924 by only 2,430,000.

This leaves 1,500,000 vehicles to be accounted for. Of course, a very large number of used cars is shipped out of the country, but by far the greater number is scrapped. One automotive trade journal estimates that fully 1,000,000 cars were scrapped last year, but this figure may be a little high.

In the country and smaller towns the junk man buys old autos much as he does broken farm implements. He demolishes them in his own yard, classifies the scrap and sells it to the city dealers.

The front of a city wrecking yard is usually a large salesroom for parts, truly a port of missing parts. Suppose sentiment or necessity compels you to drive an "orphan" car such as the Ace, Carnation, Glide, Nelson, American, Thomas Flyer, Stoddard-Dayton, Mitchell, Saxon, Elmore, Pathfinder, Lozier, Abbot-Detroit, E-M-F, Scripps-Booth, or Dolly Madison. With no factory or distribution organization making or selling parts, such cars live only in the units obtainable at the wrecking yard. From time to time the owner of such a vehicle appears on the scene for a gear, pinion or cylinder head that will enable his ancient model to wheeze jerkily through a few more painful miles.

Three Kinds of Cars Go to Junk Yard

Three classes of cars figure in the operation of these yards: the car that has been in a wreck and is deemed beyond repair; the car that has been through a fire, and the car that is obsolete, worn-out or plain junk.

How the larger and better equipped yards are operated may be glimpsed by following a car through the various departments of one of the car-wrecking establishments along South State street, Chicago's "junk auto row." When you first view this district from an elevated railway car, you are amazed by the magnitude of the industry and appalled by what first appears to be a terrific waste in labor and materials. "Why can't they fix up those cars and sell them whole?" you ask yourself. And this question remains unanswered until you make a visit to one of these plants and get a better understanding of what is going on and what it's all about.

In due time the car to be dismantled comes upon the wrecking floor, generally located out of doors. Here it is inspected by those in charge of the body, motor, rear end, radiator, and other departments, who make one of two decisions—save or scrap. As a rule any part that gives promise of profitable resale is saved, but occasionally there are already too many similar parts on hand in the stock room, and consequently good condition counts for nothing. Stockroom conditions, of course, are considered when the car is bought from the owner, and if parts from any certain car are in good demand the price is adjusted accordingly.

Very rarely is an entire body saved. The wrecking crew, consisting generally of five men, now comes on the scene. Such a crew can tear down four or five cars a day.

If the car is a closed model, all glass in good

The Toothbrush Cupboard

What kind of care do you take of the family toothbrushes. Do they hang on hooks or on a rack directly over the bathroom basin, where they are exposed to dust, flying soap-flocks, odors, and dampness generally? Of course, that will never do, Madam Housewife!

The dentists tell us that almost as many of our tooth troubles come from germ-laden toothbrushes as from food decay. A toothbrush that is never thoroughly dried, never subjected to a good disinfectant, never sunned and aired and made sweet and wholesome, is not the implement to put into our own and our children's mouths. A damp toothbrush to which a coating of toothpaste still clings, attracts all sorts of invisible forms of decomposition, and the brush which isn't thoroughly rinsed and dried is as unhealthful as a half-rinsed, half-damp garment or half-clean, half-dry bedding.

The best way to treat a toothbrush is to dip it, after using, into some good antiseptic solution. A glass containing one teaspoon of a powerful disinfectant mixed with ten teaspoons of water is an efficient germ-killer. Some dentists recommend denatured alcohol or medicated alcohol.

After dipping the brushes in this solution, put them in a wide-mouthed bottle, brush end out, and stand them in the sunshine until absolutely dry. It is said that the direct rays of the sun kill germs, whereas the rays which come through glass will not. If the sun is not shining, dry the brushes over the radiator.

When the brushes are ready for use again, hang them in a special little cupboard, kept scrupulously clean, where they will be free from the dust and floating soap-particles in the bathroom. Individual holders for the brushes are good provided the brushes are perfectly dry; but the circulation of some air is good for them. The main thing is to see that all food particles, bits of toothpaste or powder, and other germ-producing matter is entirely removed after every using, and that the brush is first disinfected and then dried.

Beautifying the Practical

Every so often I feel it my special mission in life to protest against the general ugliness of our common household appliances. Why on earth we should have a charming hearth-brush in the living room and a hideous yellow-handled red-labelled broom in the kitchen, I don't see. Why should the tea-cart in the dining room be lovely to look at and the ironing-board in the laundry be "as plain as an old maid's face," as the old saying was many years ago.

Recently I have been trying to educate some of the manufacturers of household tools, implements and furniture by writing to them and suggesting amusing decorative handles, gay coats of paint or enamel, and perhaps a bit of really good designing in the shape of the article itself. If they only knew it, women would buy their wares just twice as fast if they were beguiled by a deft blue dust-pan, an ironing-board with the legs painted sage green and buff, or a carpet sweeper of orange and black. A set of kitchen forks and dish mops with blue handles to match the blue-tiled linoleum would be irresistible to most housewives.

Well, they'll do it some day, and then we shall have beautiful refrigerators as well as beautiful highboys, attractive gas stoves as well as lovable open fireplaces. Meanwhile, we must do the best we can by beautifying our practical household conveniences ourselves. Get a few cans of bright enamels, carrying out the color plan of your kitchen and dining-room, possibly, and make your prosaic tools lovely to look at and fun to work with. Brighten up the ironing board standard, paint up the step-ladder doll up the broom and brush handles, decorate the carpet sweeper. Paint the plain kitchen table, decorate the plain kitchen chairs. Use blue and white and yellow brush to mix things in.

There is no place in the modern kitchen, gay with crisp curtains, pots of flowers on the sill, and rows of pretty plates on the wall, for the unadorned and ugly tools of common household service. If the makers will not beautify them, we must do it ourselves.

It was then that Baree found himself at the side of Mahegun. She was panting; her red tongue hung from her open jaws; but at his presence she brought her fangs together with a snap and slunk from him into the heart of the wind-run and disappointed pack. The wolves were in an ugly temper, but Baree did not sense the fact. Nepeese had trained him to take to water like an otter, and he did not understand why this narrow river should stop them as it had. He ran down to the water and stood belly deep in it, facing for an instant the horde of savage beasts above him, wondering why they did not follow. And he was black—black! He came among them again, and for the first time they noticed him.

The restless movements of the waters ceased now. A new and wondering interest held them rigid. Fangs closed sharply. A little in the open Baree saw Mahegun, with a big gray wolf standing near her. He went to her again, and this time she remained with flattened ears until he was sniffing her neck. And then, with a vicious snarl, she snapped at him. Her teeth sank deep in the soft flesh of his shoulder, and at the unexpectedness and pain of her attack, he let out a yelp. The next instant the big gray wolf was at him.

Again caught unexpectedly, Baree went down with the wolf's fangs at his throat. But in him was the blood of Kazan, the flesh and bone and sinew of Kazan, and for the first time in his life he fought as Kazan fought on that terrible day at the top of the Sun rock. He was young, he had yet to learn the cleverness and the strategy of the veteran; but his jaws were like the iron clamps with which Pierrot set his bear traps, and in his heart was sudden and blinding rage, a desire to kill that rose above all sense of pain or fear.

That fight, if it had been fair, would have been a victory for Baree, even in his youth and inexperience. In fairness the pack should have waited; it was a law of the pack to wait—until one was done for. But Baree was black; he was a stranger, an interloper, a creature whom they noticed now in a moment when their blood was hot with the rage and disappointment of killers who had missed their prey. A second wolf sprang in, striking Baree treacherously from the flank; and while he was in the snow, his jaws crushing the foreleg of his first foe, the pack was on him en masse.

Such an attack on the young caribou bull would have meant death in less than a minute. Every fang would have found its hold. Baree, by the fortunate circumstance that he was under his first two assailants and protected by their bodies, was saved from being torn instantly into pieces. He knew that he was fighting for his life. Over him the horde of beasts rolled and twisted and snarled; he felt the burning pain of teeth sinking into his flesh; he was smothered; a hundred knives seemed cutting him into pieces; yet no sound—not a whimper or a cry—came from him now in the horror and hopelessness of it all.

It would have ended in another half-minute had the struggle not been at the very edge of the bank. Undermined by the erosion of the spring floods, a section of the bank suddenly gave way, and with it went Baree and the pack. In a flash Baree thought of the water and the escaping caribou. For a bare instant the cave-in had sent him free of the pack, and in that space he gave a single leap over the gray backs of his enemies into the deep water of the stream. Close behind him half a dozen jaws snapped shut on empty air. As it had saved the caribou, so this strip of water shimmering in the glow of the moon and stars had saved Baree.

The stream was not more than a hundred feet in width, but it cost Baree close to a losing struggle to get across it. Until he dragged himself out on the opposite shore, the extent of his injuries was not impressed upon him fully. One hind leg, for the time, was useless; his forward left shoulder was laid open to the bone; his head and body were torn and cut; and as he dragged himself slowly away from the stream, the trail he left in the snow was a red path of blood. It trickled from his panting jaws, between which his tongue was bleeding; it ran down his legs and flanks and belly, and it dripped from his ears, one of which was slit clean for two inches as though cut with a knife. His instincts were dazed, his perception of things clouded as if by a veil drawn close over his eyes. Half dead, he dragged himself on until by chance he came to a clump of dwarf spruce. Into this he struggled, and then he dropped exhausted.

All that night and until noon the next day Baree lay without moving. The fever burned in his blood; it flamed high and swift toward death; then it ebbed slowly, and life conquered. At noon he came forth. He was weak, and he wobbled on his legs. His hind leg still dragged, and he was racked with pain. But it was a splendid day. The sun was warm; the snow was thawing, the sky was like a great blue sea; and the floods of life coursed warmly through Baree's veins. But now, for all time, his desires were changed, and his great quest at an end.

A red ferocity grew in Baree's eyes as he snarled in the direction of last night's fight with the wolves. They were no longer his people. They were no longer of his blood. Never again could the hunt-call lure him or the voice of the pack rouse the old longing. In him there was a thing new-born, an undying hatred for the wolf, a hatred that was to grow in him until it became like a disease in his vitals, a thing ever present and insistent, demanding vengeance on their kind. Last night he had gone to them a comrade. Today he was an outcast. Cut and maimed, bearing with him scars for all time, he had learned his lesson of the wilderness. Tomorrow, and the next day, and for days after that without number, he would remember the lesson well.

Chapter X

At the cabin on the Gray Loon, on the fourth night of Baree's absence, Pierrot was smoking his pipe after a great supper of caribou tenderloin he had brought in from the trail, and Nepeese was listening to his tale of the remarkable shot he had made, when a sound at the door interrupted them. Nepeese opened it, and Baree came in. Three days and nights of hunger in which he could not hunt because of the leg that dragged had put on him the marks of starvation. Battle-scarred and covered with dried blood-clots that still clung tenaciously to his long hair, he was a sight that drew at last a long breath from Nepeese. A queer smile was growing in Pierrot's face as he leaned forward in his chair; and then slowly rising to his feet, and looking closer, he said to Nepeese:

"Ventre Saint Gris! Oul, he has been to the pack. Nepeese, and the pack turned on him. It was not a

Over Went Baree and Half the Pack, two-wolf fight—non! It was the pack. He is cut and torn in fifty places. And—mon Dieu, he is alive!"

In Pierrot's voice there was growing wonder and amazement. He was incredulous, and yet he could not disbelieve what his eyes told him. What had happened was nothing short of a miracle, and for a time he uttered not a word more but remained staring in silence while Nepeese woke from her astonishment to give Baree doctoring and food. After the pain and hunger and treachery of his adventure, it was a wonderful homecoming for Baree. He slept that night at the foot of the Willow's bed. The next morning it was the cool caress of his tongue on her hand that awakened her.

With this day they resumed the comradeship interrupted by Baree's temporary desertion. The attachment was greater than ever on Baree's part. It was he who had run away from the Willow, who had deserted her at the call of the pack, and it seemed at times as though he sensed the depths of his perfidy and was striving to make amends. There was indubitably a very great change in him. He hung to Nepeese like a shadow. Instead of sleeping at night in the spruce shelter Pierrot made for him, he made himself a little hollow in the earth close to the cabin door. Pierrot thought that he understood, and Nepeese thought that she understood still.

Deodorizing Cigar Box Completely Is Difficult

If the cigar box is made from Spanish cedar, as the good ones are supposed to be made, it would be rather difficult to deodorize it completely, since the odor is due to a resin in the wood which is fairly well distributed throughout the wood structure. If the box is made from some other wood which does not have much natural odor, but which may have taken up some odor from the tobacco, it might be that a thorough airing or perhaps washing with gasoline would remove the odor. The odor of Spanish cedar is due to a volatile oil in the resin, and this oil can be removed at least from the surface of the wood by steaming. Since, however, a very little steaming might warp the box or discolor it, or soften the glue, this method is not practical. Probably long-continued ex-posure to the air and sunlight is the most practical method.

Thought in Lower Animals
Just as the monkey or orang-utan behave and think precisely as men do, so we find many animals, birds and insects thinking, and it is this capacity to benefit by the teachings of experience, the cultivation of memories and the power to reason clearly, quickly and logically that enables them to find ways and means for securing themselves in comfort during the colder days of winter.

They do this in innumerable ways, and many species appear to exhibit greater intelligence and foresight than man in preparing for the winter season.

Pierrot's trap-line swung into the north and west, covering in all a matter of fifty miles, with an average of two traps, one deadfall, and a poison-bait to each mile. Halfway over this line Pierrot had built a small log cabin, and at the end of it another, so that a day's work meant twenty-five miles. This was easy for Pierrot, and not hard on Nepeese after the first few days.

All through October and November they made the trips regularly, making the round every six days, which gave one day of rest at the cabin on the Gray Loon and another day in the cabin at the end of the trail. They were splendid months. Fur was thick, and it was steadily cold without bad storm. Nepeese not only carried a small pack on her shoulders in order that Pierrot's load might be lighter, but she trained Baree to bear tiny shoulder-panniers which she manufactured. In these panniers Baree carried the bait.

In at least a third of the total number of traps set there was always what Pierrot called trash—rabbits, owls, whisky-jacks, jays and squirrels. These, with the skin or feathers stripped off, made up the bulk of the bait for the traps ahead.

One afternoon early in December, as they were returning to the Gray Loon, Pierrot stopped suddenly a dozen paces ahead of Nepeese and stared at the snow. A strange snowshoe trail had joined their own and was heading toward the cabin. For half a minute Pierrot was silent and scarcely moved a muscle as he stared. The trail came straight out of the north—and off there was Lac Bain. Also they were the marks of large snowshoes, and the stride indicated was that of a tall man. Before Pierrot had spoken, Nepeese had guessed what they meant.

"M'sieu the Factor from Lac Bain" she said.

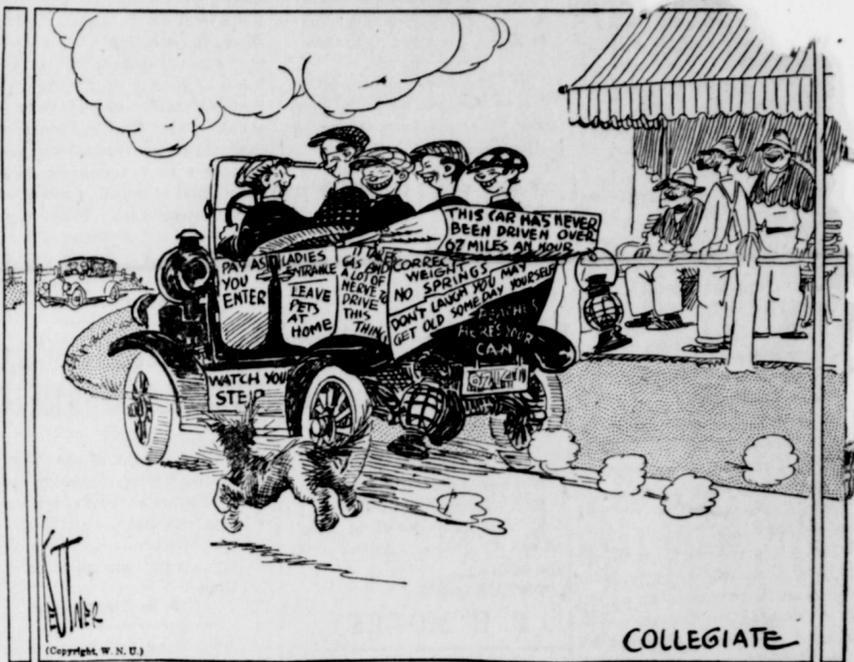

Baree was sniffing suspiciously at the strange trail. They heard the low growl in his throat, and Pierrot's shoulders stiffened.

"Yes, the M'sieu," he said. The Willow's heart beat more swiftly as they went on. She was not afraid of McTaggart, not physically afraid; and yet something rose up in her breast and choked her at thought of his presence on the Gray Loon. Why was he there? It was not necessary for Pierrot to answer the question, even had she given voice to it. She knew. The Factor from Lac Bain had no business there—except to see her. The blood burned red in her cheeks as she thought again of that minute on the edge of the chasm when he had almost crushed her in his arms. Would he try that again?

First Baptist Church Notes

The revival at the First Baptist church is growing in attendance, in power and in cooperation. Several in regular attendance say the pastor is preaching far above anything he has ever yet done here. One good man says the pastor has just been playing off till this meeting. We do have now some messages laid on our heart to preach in this meeting that we feel this community should hear. The Blankenships have grown and ripened into real greatness in evangelistic singing. This town is blessed in their coming here. It gives us a chance to have accomplished workers as any city in the United States. Everybody we come.

J. H. McCauley, Pastor.

REVIVAL MEETING FOR MCKNIGHT, BRAY AND RING

The former is requested to announce that a revival meeting will be held in the large arbor, 3 miles north of McKnight, beginning on the fourth Sunday in this month, August 22nd. This meeting will be held for the people of McKnight, Bray and Ring communities, the arbor being located about an equal distance from these three places.

Rev. H. B. Ellis of Clarendon will do the preaching. He held a meeting there last year which was so successful that the people urged him to come back and hold another this year. It is planned to continue the meeting two weeks, and everybody has a cordial invitation to attend.

Rev. Mr. Knoby is the pastor out there.

GARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of expressing our gratitude to each one who so willingly lended a helping hand in the bitter hours of sorrow caused by the death of our darling husband and father. Especially do we appreciate the Masonic Order for the part taken in the funeral ceremony and, too, for what it has meant to our precious loved one. O we appreciate so much each kind word and every lovely flower. May God's richest blessings rest upon each of you, and may your lives be as pure and sweet as that of the flowers, so that you will continue to brighten the way daily for those about you. Then at last you shall so gladly welcome the words used by the Savior: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord"

The text Sunday morning will be, "The word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness." I want to notice some things about John's message. It preceded or was connected with a great awakening.

Some definite announcements will be made at the morning service in regard to the revival meeting which is to begin on Sunday, the 29th

On account of the revival now in progress at the Baptist church there will be no service at the Methodist church Sunday night.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Poincare Is Called On to Save France—Doings of the Iowa Republicans.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
DRIVEN on the rocks by political and financial schemes, France seems to be in a parlous condition, and the people are growing so exasperated that a revolution of sorts and a dictatorship are not beyond the bounds of possibility. Herriot, the radical Socialist leader, having upset the Briand-Caillaux ministry by a coup that aroused deep resentment, was called on to form a new cabinet. This he did, with small hope of finding sufficient support in the angry chamber of deputies. De Monzie took the finance portfolio and drafted a plan of action. Then Herriot, going to the chamber through a hostile, jeering throng of Parisians, told the deputies the treasury was empty. "The country must save itself," he said. "The money must be stabilized, but it is not admissible that it be done by foreign help alone." De Monzie asked authorization to sell the balance of the Morgan loan of $2,000,000 to pay the current expenses of the government. This the chamber granted. Briand had been greeted with such thunderous applause that Herriot knew he was doomed, so to have it over with quickly he called for a vote of confidence. By a vote of 290 to 237 the deputies upset his ministry and sent him to what is probably political oblivion.

At midnight President Doumergues called from his bed the veteran Poincare, and told him 250 deputies had signed a petition for a strong national union cabinet, and that he was the logical man to head it. Poincare agreed to do his best, and began negotiations with the chiefs of all the important political groups except the Socialists and Communists. It was expected he would himself be finance minister in addition to premier, that Briand would be foreign minister, Leygues minister of marine, Painleve war minister, and that perhaps Leon Blum, Socialist leader, would be offered a portfolio. What the financial plans of the Poincare cabinet may be cannot be predicted at this time. Possibly it will persuade the French nation that it must tax itself heavily enough to get out of its difficulties—a course of action the French have never accepted though it was found necessary by every other nation that was confronted by serious after-the-war financial problems. The franc declined during the two days the Herriot government lasted almost to the two-cent point, but reacted somewhat when that cabinet was thrown out. The people of France are frightened and exasperated. In Paris there have been numerous attacks on foreigners, especially American tourists, for the ordinary Frenchman persists in blaming America for his country's predicament. The "smart aleck" behavior of some American trippers does a lot to aggravate the situation.

UNCLE SAM was the object of violent attacks during a debate in the British parliament over the French debt settlement. Lloyd George declared Britain's agreement to pay the United States was the mistake which plunged all of Europe "into the midst of its troubles."

"If all the war debts had been wiped out, it would have been a merciful act to the world," he continued. "If Great Britain had refused to make any agreement with America and this arrangement had not entered into all the following maneuvers for debt settlements, all the entanglements throughout Europe today would have been avoided."
 Philip Snowden and others joined in assailing the government's debt agreements, which were defended by Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill, Mr. Runciman, Liberal, said of America's part in international finance: "The chancellor of the exchequer would be well advised if he faced the whole situation on a much larger international basis. The American people have a sentimental interest in the movement for disarmament. If the British government takes a strong line of military disarmament in Europe and makes it successful, the American people will soon know that what they have remitted on the debt will not be spent on armaments. I will be one of the last persons to go down on my knees to the United States and ask for revision. But payment to America might not be to her advantage, and in time the desire for revision might not all be on this side of the Atlantic."

 Lord Rothermere's newspapers, which include the London Daily Mail, have been abusing the United States in vitriolic editorials, and the British government officials are worried and embarrassed by his assaults.

AS BETWEEN the Coolidge forces and the disgruntled farmers, the battle in the Iowa Republican state convention was virtually a draw. The regulars succeeded in having adopted a platform that indorses the national administration, but before the vote was taken the delegates walked with the farm organizations allied out, hooting at what they called steam roller methods.

On the other hand the farmers seemed to have gained possession of the state party machine for the central committee selected in district caucuses is favorable to Smith W. Brookhart who was read out of the party two years ago and is seeking to regain the senate seat from which he was ousted. Brookhart sat on the platform beside A. B. Cummins, whom he had defeated for the nomination in the primaries, and there was a semblance of a reunion of factions, but in his address Brookhart announced that when he returned to Washington he would again tell "the truth concerning conditions in Iowa." Dan W. Turner, permanent chairman, in his address gave the Coolidge administration some hard raps and warmly praised Frank O. Lowden.

The platform declared faith in the national Republican party, praised its economy and tax reduction and war debt programs, but the farm relief advocates forced the insertion of this demand:

"That the Republican policy of economic equality of agriculture with other industries shall be carried into effect by the enactment of legislation which will permit the establishment of an American price level for agricultural products above the world price level just as the protective tariff accomplishes that result for manufactured products."

A resolution to the same effect had just been adopted by the corn belt committee and the committee of twenty-two, representing eleven corn belt states, which met also in Des Moines. Plans were laid for renewing the fight for passage of a bill by congress that will make possible the handling of farm products under a protective system where the tariff can be made effective on farm products. A combination of Southern, Western and Middle West states is contemplated.

The corn belt committee received a report of its cost finding committee, which fixed the actual cost of production of a bushel of corn in Iowa, with an allowance for a fair profit, at $1.42. The report also set forth that in Illinois the expense of producing corn with a fair profit of 5 per cent included, is $1.43; in Nebraska, $1.40; Minnesota, $1.41, and in North Dakota and Wisconsin, $1.42.

SENATOR FESS of Ohio spent a night at White Pine camp as the guest of President Coolidge and then expressed the opinion that the administration would continue to oppose price fixing and other agricultural measures it considers unsound. The senator declared his belief that there would be no formidable reaction in the West against the protective tariff and that President Coolidge had lost none of his popularity. He attributed farm unrest to post-war deflation losses. The Republicans will control the next congress, he averred, although he admitted the party would have to depend upon insurgent votes if it lost Arizona, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri and Nevada.

SENATOR BORAH, addressing the Protestant Ministers' association in Augusta, Ga., had many harsh things to say about those who seek modification of the Volstead act and about referendums on the prohibition question such as that to be held in New York state. He asserted an attempt was being made to undermine and destroy the constitution through nullification, and he likened the wets to the Bolsheviks of Russia. Senator Edwards of New Jersey came back with a red hot statement in which he said:

"To proclaim his unsound principles of constitutional government and to shoot his arrows of bigoted poison, Mr. Borah chose territory which harbors a people who have openly and flagrantly nullified two amendments to the Constitution for the past fifty years."

"For Senator Borah to place honest and sincere advocates of repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and modification of the Volstead act in the same category with Russian Bolsheviks, black shirt fascists and Polish demagogic dictators is a dastardly slur on scores of minds just as genuinely American, just as unaffected with dishonest motive or intention and just as free of disguise and false pretense as his own."

THE senate slush fund committee has begun its inquiry into the expenditures of the Illinois senatorial primary campaign. Senator Reed of Missouri, the chairman, announced the investigation would be as thorough as that into the expenses of the candidates in the Pennsylvania primaries. It was understood Col. Frank L. Smith, who defeated Senator McKinley for the nomination, was to be one of the first witnesses. Mr. McKinley is in Washington and probably will be unable to go to Chicago for the inquiry.

Senator Reed isn't through with the Anti-Saloon league by any means. He has warned it to be prepared to make a complete statement of official expenditures in the present campaign, and demands that the names of the contributors to the league's funds be made public.

"It is a manifest absurdity to say that in any community of the United States of any size any man would suffer injury if it were known he had contributed to teaching the high moral precepts of sobriety, obedience to law, and loyalty to the government," said Senator Reed. "They know very well that their organization is engaged in political work throughout the year."

POLAND desires friendly relations with all other nations, and as evidence of her peaceable disposition Dictator Pilsudski, who is war minister, intends to dispense with military attaches at most of the Polish legations. Such is the announcement of Foreign Minister Zelewski to parliament. "Poland does not want a single foot of foreign soil, but on the other hand she will not give up a foot of her soil," he said, amid cheers.

AS ITS first move in the enforcement of the laws concerning the churches, the Mexican government cited thirty-six Roman Catholic priests to answer charges of contempt of the law and refusal to register. As the church authorities at a recent general meeting decided to refrain from registering, the fight will determine whether the government is strong enough to inspect the churches and religious societies.

Every Catholic society in every city, town and village, it is said, has pledged its members to obey the orders of the central committee and the Catholic authorities. At Catholic headquarters in Mexico City it was asserted that notwithstanding the restrictions of the law, the church would not suppress religious orders. The Catholics have started a boycott against the government, refraining from buying articles from which the government receives its greatest revenue, this including lottery tickets. Also, Catholic women are giving up all social functions.

DEATHS of the week include those of Felix Djerjinsky, the merciless and ruthless head of the soviet Russian cheka or secret police; Martin L. Lueck, Democratic nominee for governor of Wisconsin, and Henry T. Douglas, last surviving general of the Confederacy.

Constipation!
How to Keep Bowels Regular

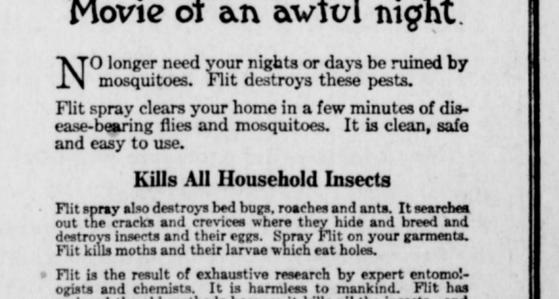

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only

IT IS doubtful if the genius of the French for designing clothes shines more brightly in one particular than in others, but it often seems that the things they make for matrons lead all their other achievements in chic. This field of endeavor gives them the widest latitude in choice of materials and in intricate work. In millinery these things, with spirited shapes, play into the hands of the designers and they evolve dignified and beautiful head-wear for women of importance. Even in the simpler types of hats they compel shapes and materials to express the poise of middle life.

Paris contributes three hats out of the four pictured here for matrons, and New York is represented by one. America is not far behind the French type are often finished with bindings and given important trimming touches. A pretty procession of fall coats for children and the younger girls is ready to pass in review to answer the demand that precedes the re-opening of school. Many of the models for juniors are provided with short detachable capes that button on in several ingenious ways so that the garment will serve, minus its cape, for late summer, and with it, for the cool days of autumn. Styles are simple, emphasizing the straight line, but smart details of finish and of fabric manipulation put the stamp of a new season on these simple coats. Solid-color fabrics and two-toned checks and plaids are used singly or in combinations in the models for in designing superb millinery and this is easily proved by leaving those interested to guess which hats are French and which American in any mixed collection.

It will not take a minute to place the hat at the top of the group as an import. It is a turban made of ribbon ingeniously draped to form irregular upstanding folds at the front, where they are supported by a handsome metallic ornament. This chic tailored affair might be worn almost anywhere—it has so much style. At the left a fine pliable straw shape is veiled by lace gathered into a rosette at the side and finished with an enameled ornament. Another tailored hat at the right challenges comparison with its dressier sister. It is a straw shape with plaited and folded ribbon for trimming finished by jeweled ornaments. The last hat pictured shows juniors. The plaids and checks are featured and are shown in beautiful color combinations—as gray and coral or gray and purple. Inlays and facings of plain cloth are used on these plaids and checks with fine effect. In the solid-color fabrics certain red shades are liked (claret red among them), and they look particularly well with small fur collars or other touches of civet cat fur. Other furs used on coats for juniors are opossum, raccoon, skunk and Japanese fox, but the employment of fabric decorations is of newer interest.

As usual on straightline coats pockets are important and, with the fabric belt, are the designers' main dependence for decorative features. Pockets appear in the patch, flap and buttoned types and buttons are chosen in colors that blend with the fabric. Buckles as well as large buttons are among the

PRETTY COAT FOR YOUNG GIRL

Just how much dignity a sailor shape can assume when it is collared by rich velvet ribbon and adorned by a chou in black and one in white velvet at the right side.

It takes the poise and assurance of middle life to carry off certain shapes and types in millinery. The new, high, square-crowned hats, that are so chic, are distinctly for the matron. For her very rich materials and intricate work are appropriate. Even the simpler felt hats of the "vagabond" details that make the new coats interesting, used as fastenings for the fabric belts and as decorations on strap trimmings.

Coats for little kindergarteners are another story as simple and brief as a Mother Goose rhyme and like it, bearing much repetition. A good example is shown here made of navy twill with an applique leaf trimming on the revers and sleeves.

There is really very little difference in the cut of coats for little tots and those for larger children, but the older little girls have a greater variety in choice of styles in pockets and neck treatments. For them the scarf collar and a variety of pockets are available. Turnover collars are popular on all children's coats. Very simple coats for the littlest girls are made double breasted and fastened with two large buttons, most of them have turnover collars and some of them have raglan sleeves. For girls in their early teens solid color and plaid coatings are about equally popular.

WHITE NO ONE FOR FACE NOW RUDDY

Says Mrs. Wolcott—All the Terrible Aches, Pains and Sour Bile Sickness Gone.

Like many other folks thereabouts, Mrs. Wolcott was a picture of misery. She says: "I was ghastly white as cotton, all thinned out, bilious all the time, terrible headaches, bones creaked as if they would snap apart, ached all over, could hardly walk or lift an arm; had been taking calomel steadily, and it made me so deathly sick I was completely discouraged. Then one day my cousin who lives near the state line, came on a visit and she had a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. My! what a change. It gave me new courage. We sent to town for two bottles, and since then my face is filled out, with a ruddy glow. Gained over twenty pounds and am the picture of health. Whenever I feel bilious or constipated I take a dose of Dodson's Liver Tone and it works just fine."

This wonderful liver tone is sold by all druggists and is absolutely guaranteed to start your liver without making you sick. Get a bottle today, and when you feel sick, bilious, sluggish, constipated, with dull headache, Dodson's Liver Tone will put you to rights every time. Try it today.

Billions in Railroads

It is estimated that by the end of 1926 the total investment in railroads of the United States will reach $24,000,000,000, the largest sum put into any one industry in the world. In 1926 the improvement bill for the railroads will be $750,000,000 on conservative estimate. Railroad men are predicting the heaviest fall traffic this year in history and are preparing for it.

Freight Train Phone Latest in Railroad

By means of a telephone connecting the caboose and the cab of a freight train with 73 cars, the engineer and conductor of an eastern line held conversation recently, saving the need for hand signals and speeding the progress of the train.

As they were pulling out of the yards, the conductor notified the engine men that a car repair man was riding in the caboose and would get off at the east end of the yard and close the switch when the train was in the main track.

This saved stowing up, and later the engineer notified the conductor that, if conditions were satisfactory with regard to the train, he would not stop for water at the next station. Permission to proceed was given, sparing another delay. The wires were strung over the tops of the cars.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

DONNELLY JUNTY

Having heard it is being rumored that I did not pay my 1925 poll tax, and for that reason am disqualified to hold office if elected, I desire to say that this is in error. I PAID MY 1925 POLL TAX, but not in time to vote. However it was only an oversight and in so doing I've cheated the County or State out of nothing. As to my qualifications for holding office, if elected, I here with submit a ruling of the Attorney General's office, under date of August 12, 1926 which is full and complete answer to any such contention. The ruling reads: "You are advised in reply to your inquiry that the Constitution or Statutes of this State do not require the payment of poll tax as a qualification for holding office except in one or two instances. It is necessary for a member of the Legislature to be a qualified voter, and this of course means that among other things he must have paid his poll tax. But this is not true as to all officers, and the case of a legislator is the exception rather than the rule. . . . The well established rule is that unless there is some provision of law making this requirement, it is not necessary to have paid a poll tax in order to hold office."

Neither the Constitution nor Statutes of Texas require a County Clerk to be a qualified voter. Therefore the foregoing opinion proves me clearly eligible.

The original copy of this ruling is on file and may be verified by any one at any time.

I am continuing my campaign for the office of County Clerk on my own merits and solicit your vote and favor on this basis.

Respectfully,
Chas M Lowry.

MEMPHIS BOOSTERS WERE HERE TODAY

Just as we are ready to go to press a crowd of Memphis citizens—fully a hundred of them, headed by their fine band—arrived in town, boosting the Hall County District Fair to be held at Memphis Sept. 14, 15, 16, 17.

A big crowd of our people had gathered to greet them. The band music was much enjoyed. Claude Wells and Ben Shepherd of the Democrat and Earl Johnson of the Herald were among those present.

The Memphis people know how to put things over in a big way, and this Fair will be bigger and better than ever.

Hedley people appreciate this visit. Call again, folks.

COOPER-ALLEN

A beautiful wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Cooper in our town last Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. The contracting parties were their daughter, Miss Marguerite Cooper, and Mr. T. E. Allen of Childress, and the ceremony was performed by Pastor J. H. McCauley of the First Baptist church. The ring ceremony was used impressively and congratulations were offered by the relatives and close friends present in a most hearty and earnest manner.

The bride is one of Hedley's most attractive and accomplished young ladies. The groom is one of the leading young business men of Childress, being now in charge of the Dodge Bros. Automobile Sales Service in that city.

The bride wore a lovely gown of ashes of roses georgette crepe which was heavily embroidered in various colors, and slippers and hose of rose beige, and carried a fascinating bouquet of roses and ferns. Her traveling suit was of rose tweed with hat to correspond.

The happy young couple left immediately for a honeymoon of three weeks in Colorado and other points in the West. Upon their return they will be at home to their multitude of friends in their home at Childress.

The Informer joins the numerous friends of these fine young people in wishing for them a long and happy wedded life.

REVIVAL MEETING

So far as we know now, it falls to the lot of the Methodist church to hold the last revival meeting for this year. There is, indeed, some disadvantage in coming last, and there is some advantage in it too. Anyway there is still work to be done—there will be work to be done and likely some soul still unsaved in the community even after all has been done that can be done. We have the very responsible task of conducting the last meeting this season. We hope that the meeting now in progress may close out with great victory for the Lord and His work; and then we shall be glad to use the power set in motion by the Holy Spirit in carrying forward the work.

We have secured as preaching help Rev. E. L. Yeats, who is pastor at Roby, Texas. I have known Bro Yeats for several years and have worked with him in meetings before. He is a very fine man, and a good preacher. He has his own peculiar way of saying things, but you will remember it when he gets it said. And you will want to hear what he is going to say next time too. And he has a real gospel message for each service.

Further notice will appear in next week's paper.

The house will be open only on Friday nights and Saturdays until the revival meetings are over, we are told.

Mr. Cowan will be in charge here, Mr. Farley staying with their theatre at Estelline.
