CLASS SOCIAL

One of the most enjoyable social events of the season took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Johnson Friday evening, the 17th, when the T. E. L. Class of the First Baptist church entertained in honor of their husbands. The prevalent idea was

"Backward, turn backward, Oh time in your flight, Make me a child again, just for tonight."

The merriment started upon the arrival of the guests and continued throughout the evening.

A salad course and ice cream and cake were served to twenty five.

Mrs. Joe Kendall of San Antonio is here for a visit at the W. A. Kinslow home.

Dear Doctor:—I had Pellagra five years. I was nervous, had stomach trouble, rash on hands and arms, skin itched and turn brown, sore mouth, could not eat or sleep, lost weight and got awful weak. I tried many treatments. Took Hypospermin six months, got no relief. I took 3 of your treatments and was well of Pellagra. I wish I could influence every one who has this terrible disease to write you.

Here's the most remarkable book ever published for farmers. Says our authority. It is remarkable in the extreme practical nature of its contents, in the wide range of farm subjects covered, in the world of illustrations it contains, and in the extremely low price.

361 Discoveries
One discovery sometimes makes a fortune. Here are 361 of them, any one of which may be of many dollars value to you. These discoveries may be classified as follows:

128 for the farm shop	70 on greenhouses

15 on concrete work	129 on household help
21 on saw-lum	70 on miscellaneous farm work
12 on one side	18 on hunting, fishing, and trapping
25 on electrical work

—and every plan has been tested and found to be a money saver. Most of the articles are illustrated with photographs or drawings. The devices described are easy to make because of these pictures and clear descriptions.

Suppose you could live your life 417 times. How you could ferg ahead of other farmers in a way that would insure you libera and steady profits! This book enables you to do the next best thing — you may have the experience of 417 lives — experience of successful farmers as told by themselves — briefly, clearly, completely. Helped by Taking
E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

At the birth of my little daughter I was very badly run-down. I could not think of going to a hospital, but grew steadily worse, being compelled to stay in bed two or three days each week. A friend of my sister's told of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done her, and my sister bought me two bottles of it. I had not taken all of one bottle when I was up and able to do some work. I am truly a booster for Lydia E. ## NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Madden Shows Mr. Coolidge How Federal Taxes Can Be Cut in 1928.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
CONGRESSMAN MARTIN R. MADDEN of Chicago, chairman of the house appropriations committee, gathered a portfolio full of facts and figures and spent an evening with President Coolidge last week. The result may bring joy to the American taxpayer, for Mr. Madden laid before the President a plan whereby federal taxes in 1928 can be further reduced. This would suit Mr. Coolidge nicely and he has taken the proposition under consideration. Objection to it may come from Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

Mr. Madden called the attention of the President to an item of income on one of his sheets of figures, "payment of interest by foreign nations on war debts," amounting to $150,000,000 a year at this time. This interest payment, which is steadily augmenting, is being devoted by Secretary Mellon to the retirement of Liberty bonds. Mr. Mellon is doing this arbitrarily, without the express direction of statute. The law merely prescribes that the payments on principal of the war debts shall be devoted to retirement of our debt. The payments on principal now aggregate about $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. Madden pointed out that the $150,000,000 of war debt interest could be used under the law to pay current expenses of the government instead of to retire Liberty bonds. If so used the government would not need to raise that amount of revenue and could reduce taxes to that extent.

With the foreign interest payments and the increased revenue from income taxes being produced by expanding business it might be possible to decrease federal taxation in 1928 to the extent of $300,000,000 or $400,000,000.

Another cheerful caller at the White Pine camp was Representative Will R. Wood of Indiana, chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee. He told the President that the Republicans would maintain majorities in both the senate and the house, though they are likely to be reduced somewhat by loss of senate seats gained in Democratic states in the Harding landslide and of house seats similarly gained in the Coolidge landslide. In the next house he looks for a Republican majority of 25, compared with the present majority of 35, exclusive of the Republican insurgents. He classes about 50 districts now represented by Republicans as doubtful, and lists 25 Democratic districts which the Republicans have a chance of winning. Mr. Wood says the contest this year is between the Democratic party and prosperity, and adds: "You can't beat prosperity."

Naturally, the Democrats do not agree with these statements and forecasts. In this campaign their major count against the Coolidge administration is subservience to Wall street and big business, and they charge the administration has lain down on enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust act. They will take what advantage they can from the primary campaign expenditure revelations, the dissatisfaction of the Middle West farmers, alleged governmental extravagance, and the prohibition issue, and they believe this advantage will be great.

A better organization of the farmers, so that they can speak and act with unanimity; development of co-operative marketing; a better handling of regional and seasonal surpluses, and measures to make the tariff effective for agriculture.

AFTER all these economic and political conferences, the President went by automobile to Plattsburg, where he reviewed the citizens' military training camp. It was a sixty-five-mile ride for the party. Sixteen hundred citizen-soldiers paraded before the Chief Executive, after which he was entertained at luncheon by Col. J. P. Hughes, commander of the camp, and started back to White Pine camp.

HOPE for an early settlement of the religious controversy in Mexico waned again. The episcopate found little encouragement in the attitude of President Calles, and voted in favor of carrying on the struggle on the lines already laid out. In this it has the support of the Vatican. The pope made a statement to the press reiterating the policy of the holy see, which, in effect, is that no agreement with the Mexican government is possible until the laws of Mexico, which are regarded at Rome as aiming at the destruction of the Catholic church, are revoked. The communication said the Vatican "has no confidence in President Calles' declarations and has no hope that President Calles will ever make a sincere, peaceful and just proposition to the church." Later the holy see announced that the news it had received indirectly from Mexico confirms "the complete falsity of the Mexican government reports anent the negotiations between Calles and the episcopacy."

Ambassador Sheffield had a long conference in Washington with Secretary of State Kellogg and soon afterward started for the Adirondacks to report to President Coolidge. The only official statement concerning the meeting with Mr. Kellogg was the positive declaration that Mr. Sheffield would not resign but would return to his post on expiration of his leave of absence, and the announcement by Mr. Kellogg that there would be no immediate change in the administration's Mexican policy. The State department was still waiting for the Mexican government's reply to the latest American note concerning the oil and land laws.

Myron T. Herrick, American ambassador to France, also conferred with Secretary Kellogg, and he accompanied Mr. Sheffield to White Pine camp.

CHINA'S continuous civil war, conducted by rivals for political power and recently marked by several bloody battles, is getting on the nerves of other nations; and when the existing government at Peking proposed to issue $25,000,000 in domestic bonds for "domestic purposes," which meant for war expenses, the United States sent a note of protest. It objects to these military expenditures while American obligations, entitled to automatic priority, remain in arrears. A list of the principal creditors was appended to the protest, including the Hukang railway, Continental and Commercial bank, Pacific Development, Riggs National, Munsey Trust, and a long list of American corporations supplying railway equipment, etc.

BERLIN correspondents report that the difficulties in the way of Germany's entry into the League of Nations and a final recognition of the peace pacts of Locarno are removed through a compromise; that Spain and Poland have indicated a willingness to accept semi-permanent seats in the league's council for three or perhaps five years. Berlin is now so certain of membership in the league and a permanent seat in the council that the government has selected its representatives on the different committees of the league.

date over the district. It was understood in Paris that France's reply would be an absolute refusal.

GREECE has changed dictators again. In a bloodless coup d'etat General Pangalos was overthrown by the Liberals and the power taken over, at least temporarily, by their leader, Gen. George Condylis. He promises general elections late in October or early in November. Pangalos and various members of his government were arrested and will be tried on charges of maladministration. For the time being Admiral Condouriotis is again acting as president of Greece, with General Condylis as premier.

ENGLAND'S miners and mine owners not yet having come to an agreement, the government issued a proclamation extending the state of emergency for another month. Meanwhile a good many of the miners have returned to work under separate arrangements with operators.

OUR death list contains the names of four noteworthy personages. Dr. Charles W. Elliot, president emeritus of Harvard university and for two generations a leader in education, passed away at the age of ninety-two at his summer home in Northeast Harbor, Maine. He became president of Harvard when but thirty-five years old and under him it developed into a great university. In his later years he wrote and spoke on public questions, with great effect.

Another man of letters, Stuart Pratt Sherman, literary editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, died of heart failure after a strenuous swim, at Manistee, Mich. He formerly was head professor of English at the University of Illinois and was considered one of the country's best literary critics.

Bert M. Fernald, United States senator from Maine since 1916, succumbed to heart disease and diabetes at his home in West Poland, Maine. In the senate he was a member of four important committees. He was a strong advocate of prohibition, and opposed child labor measures and American membership in the League of Nations and the world court. It is easy to predict that his successor will be another Republican.

Attracting vastly more public attention than any of these deaths was the demise of Rudolph Valentino, the screen actor, in New York following operations for appendicitis and gastric ulcers. It seemed as if the entire country mourned his passing, for aside from his histrionic ability he was personally popular. In the metropolis morbid mobs of scores of thousands fought the police for a chance to look on "Rudy's" remains.

ONE of the most important of recent developments in radio came with the successful testing of a new device for radiocasting weather maps and information to ships at sea. The tests were conducted by the inventor, C. Francis Jenkins, in the presence of Charles F. Marvin, chief of the weather bureau, Commander William Glassford, acting chief of naval communications, and Capt. S. C. Hooper, of the engineering division of the navy. The naval officers were enthusiastic over the device, declaring its discovery to be of inestimable value to navigators, and predicting that as soon as they can be produced in quantity, the comparatively simple contrivances will be quickly adopted by all radio equipped vessels.

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils. While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement out, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Chapter XIII

The trap-line of Pierre Eustach ran thirty miles straight west of Lac Bain. It was not as long a line as Pierrot's had been, but it was like a main artery running through the heart of a rich fur country. It had belonged to Pierre Eustach's father, and his grandfather, and his great-grandfather, and beyond that it reached, Pierre averred, back to the very pulse of the finest blood in France. The books at McTaggart's post went back only as far as the great-grandfather end of it, the older evidence of ownership being at Churchill. It was the finest game country between Reindeer lake and the Barren Lands. It was in December that Baree came to it.

Again he was traveling southward in a slow and wandering fashion, seeking food in the deep snows. The Kistewis Kestis, or Great Storm, had come earlier than usual this winter, and for a week after it scarcely a hoof or claw was moving. Every trapper from Hudson's bay to the country of the Athabasca knew that after the Big Storm the famished fur animals would be seeking food, and that traps and deadfalls properly set and baited stood the biggest chance of the year of being filled. Some of them set out over their trap-lines on the sixth day; some on the seventh, and others on the eighth. It was on the seventh day that Bush McTaggart started over Pierre Eustach's line, which was now his own for the season. It took him two days to uncover the traps, dig the snow from them, rebuild the fallen "trap-houses," rearrange the baits. On the third day he was back at Lac Bain.

It was on this day that Baree came to the cabin at the far end of McTaggart's line. McTaggart's trail was fresh in the snow about the cabin, and the instant Baree sniffed it every drop of blood in his body seemed to leap suddenly with a strange excitement. It took perhaps half a minute for the scent that filled his nostrils to associate itself with what had gone before, and at the end of that half-minute there rumbled in Baree's chest a deep and sullen growl. For many minutes after that he stood like a black rock in the snow, watching the cabin. Then slowly he began circling about it, drawing nearer and nearer, until at last he was sniffing at the threshold. No sound or smell of life came from inside, but he could smell the old smell of McTaggart. Then he faced the wilderness—the direction in which the trap-line ran back to Lac Bain. He was trembling. His muscles twitched. He whined. Pictures were assembling more and more vividly in his mind—the fight in the cabin, Nepeese, the wild chase through the snow to the chasm's edge—even the memory of that age-old struggle when McTaggart had caught him in the rabbit snare. In his whine there was a great yearning, almost expectation. Then it died slowly away. After all, the scent in the snow was of a thing that he had hated and wanted to kill, and not of anything that he had loved. For an instant nature had impressed on him the significance of associations—a brief space only, and then it was gone. The whine died away, but in its place came again that ominous growl.

Slowly he followed the trail and a quarter of a mile from the cabin struck the first trap on the line. Hunger had caved in his sides until he was like a starved wolf. In the first trap-house McTaggart had placed as bait the hind-quarter of a snowshoe rabbit. Baree reached it cautiously. He had learned many things on Pierrot's line; he had learned what the snap of a trap meant; he had felt the cruel pain of steel jaws; he knew better than the shrewdest fox what a deadfall would do when the trigger was sprung—and Nepeese himself had taught him that he was never to touch poison-bait. So he closed his teeth gently in the rabbit flesh and drew it forth as cleverly as McTaggart himself could have done. He visited five traps before dark, and ate the five baits without springing a pan. Then he went on into a warm balsam swamp and found himself a bed for the night.

The next day saw the beginning of the struggle that was to follow between the wits of man and beast. To Baree the encroachment of Bush McTaggart's trap-line was not war; it was existence. It was to furnish him food, as Pierrot's line had furnished him food for many weeks. But he sensed the fact that in this instance he was law-breaker and had an enemy to outwit. Had it been good hunting weather he might have gone on, for the unseen hand that was guiding his wanderings was drawing him slowly but surely back to the old beaver pond and the Gray Loon. As it was, with the snow deep and soft under him—so deep that in places he plunged into it over his ears—McTaggart's trap-line was like a trail of manna made for his special use. He followed in the factor's snowshoe tracks, and in the third trap killed a rabbit. Starved for many days, he was filled with a wolfish hunger, and before the day was over he robbed the bait from a full dozen of McTaggart's traps. Three times he struck poison-baits—venison or caribou fat in the heart of which was a dose of strychnine, and each time his keen nostrils detected the danger.

The second day, being less hungry and more keenly alive to the hated smell of his enemy, Baree ate less but was more destructive. McTaggart was not as skillful as Pierre Eustach in keeping the scent of his hands from the traps and "houses," and every now and then the smell of him was strong in Baree's nose. This wrought in Baree a swift and definite antagonism, a steadily increasing hatred where a few days before hatred was almost forgotten. The dog did not add two and two together to make four; he did not go back step by step to prove to himself that the man to whom this trap-line belonged was the cause of all his griefs and troubles—but he did find himself possessed of a deep and yearning hatred. McTaggart was the one creature except the wolves that he had ever hated; it was McTaggart who had hurt him, McTaggart who had hurt Pierrot, McTaggart who had made him lose his beloved Nepeese—and McTaggart was here on this trap-line! If he had been wandering before, without object or destiny, he was given a mission now. It was to keep to the traps. To feed himself. And to vent his hatred and his vengeance as he lived.

The second night Baree lay with a full stomach in a thicket of banksian pine; the third day he was traveling westward over the trap-line again.

Early on this morning Bush McTaggart started out to gather his catch, and where he crossed the stream six miles from Lac Bain he first saw Baree's tracks. He stopped to examine them with sudden and unusual interest, falling at last on his knees, whipping off the glove from his right hand, and picking up a single hair.

"The black wolf!" He uttered the word in an odd, hard voice, and involuntarily his eyes turned straight in the direction of the Gray Loon. After that, even more carefully than before, he examined one of the clearly impressed tracks in the snow. When he rose to his feet there was in his face the look of one who had made an unpleasant discovery.

"A black wolf!" he repeated, and shrugged his shoulders. "Bah! Lerue is a fool. It is a dog." And then, after a moment, he muttered in a voice scarcely louder than a whisper, "oor dog."

All that day Bush McTaggart followed a trail where Baree had left traces of his presence. Trap after trap he found robbed. And from the first disturbing excitement of his discovery of Baree's presence his humor changed slowly to one of rage, and his rage increased as the day dragged out. He was not unacquainted with four-footed robbers of the trap-line, but usually a wolf or a fox or a dog who had grown adept in thievery troubled only a few traps. But in this case Baree was traveling straight from trap to trap, and his footprints in the snow showed that he stopped at each. There was, to McTaggart, almost a human devilishness to his work. He evaded the poisons. Not once did he stretch his head or paw within the danger zone of a deadfall. For apparently no reason whatever he had destroyed a splendid mink, whose glossy fur lay scattered in worthless bits over the snow. Toward the end of the day McTaggart came to a deadfall in which a lynx had died. Baree had torn the silvery flank of the animal until the skin was of less than half value. McTaggart cursed aloud, and his breath came hot.

The third day McTaggart did not return to Lac Bain, but began a cautious hunt for Baree. An inch or two of fresh snow had fallen, and as if to take even greater measure of vengeance from his man-enemy Baree had left his footprints freely within a radius of a hundred yards of the cabin. It was half an hour before McTaggart could pick out the straight trail, and he followed this for two hours into a thick banksian swamp. Baree kept with the wind. Now and then he caught the scent of his pursuer; a dozen times he waited until the other was so close he could hear the snap of brush, or the metallic click of twigs against his rifle barrel. And then, with a sudden inspiration that brought the curses afresh to McTaggart's lips, he swung in a wide circle and out straight back for the trap-line. When the Factor reached the line, along toward noon, Baree had already begun his work. He had killed and eaten a rabbit; he had robbed three traps in the distance of a mile, and he was headed again straight over the trap-line for Post Lac Bain.

It was the fifth day that Bush McTaggart returned to his post. He was in an ugly mood. Only Valence of the four Frenchmen was there, and it was Valence who heard his story, and afterward heard him cursing Marie. She came into the store a little later, big-eyed and frightened, one of her cheeks flaming red where McTaggart had struck her.

Chapter XIV

By the middle of January the war between Baree and Bush McTaggart had become more than an incident—more than a passing adventure to the best, and more than an irritating happening to the man. It was, for the time, the elemental raison d'être of their lives. Baree hung to the trap-line. He haunted it like a devastating specter, and each time that he sniffed afresh the scent of the Factor from Lac Bain he was impressed still more strongly with the instinct that he was avenging himself upon a deadly enemy. Again and again he outwitted McTaggart; he continued to strip his traps of their bait; the humor grew in him more strongly to destroy the fur he came across; his greatest pleasure came to be—not in eating, but in destroying. The fires of his hatred burned fiercer as the weeks passed, until at last he would snap and tear with his long fangs at the snow where McTaggart's feet had passed. And all of the time, away back of his madness, there was a vision of Nepeese that continued to grow more and more clearly in his brain. That first great loneliness—the loneliness of the long days and longer nights of his waiting and seeking on the Gray Loon, oppressed him again as it had oppressed him in the early days of her loss. On starry or moonlit nights he sent forth his wailing cries for her again, and Bush McTaggart, listening to them in the middle of the night, felt strange shivers run up his spine.

Varied Ideas About Money and Its Uses

Probably more has been said and written about money than any other subject under the sun. Fielding, who spoke with the authority of a magistrate, once commented that "money is the fruit of evil as often as the root of it." Doctor Johnson said, "Money, in whatever hands, will confer power." In "The Way of All Flesh," Samuel Butler wrote that "money is like a reputation for ability—more easily made than kept." His modern disciple, G. Bernard Shaw, goes farther and says, "Any fool can save money; it takes a wise man to spend it." Bacon wrote, "Money is like manure; of little use unless it be spread." A quotation from Horace reads, "Money amassed either serves or rules us."

John Stuart Mill, in his monumental work, "The Principles of Political Economy," points out that furs, cowrie shells and even cubes of compressed tea have been used in various places as money. He goes on to say that "money is a commodity and its value is determined, like other commodities, temporarily by demand and supply, permanently and on the average by cost of production."

No article about money would be complete without quoting an American mind always to couple money with work—they rarely refer to the one without the other. Thus John D. Rockefeller: "I determined that, in addition to working for money, I would make money work for me."—John D. London's Weekly.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS HOUSE PAINT SWP

How SWP cuts painting cost

The only way to buy paint economically is to forget gallon price and figure costs by area covered and years of life.

SWP covers one-third more area than paints which are cheaper per gallon. It lasts twice as long without repainting, so requires half the material and costs half the labor price (for painting and repainting).

So price per gallon means nothing. Area covered, weather resistance, and years of life are the real things that determine price economy. On that basis SWP is the cheapest per-gallon outside paint you could buy.

SWP has been the leading prepared house paint for half a century. You will find a complete line of it at our store. Let us figure with you on your house-painting.

On Being "Different"

A car full of boisterous young people was honking its way through the crowded streets when one of the girls called the attention of the others to a strange-looking man walking their way on the sidewalk. He was of indefinite age and very shabby; but what made him conspicuous was his hair, hanging, gray and gnarled, below his shoulders.

"Wonder what's the idea," said the driver of the car; "anybody can borrow a scissor!"

"Why," laughed a merry-maker from the rear seat, "he probably wants to be 'different!'"

Doubtless the least probable cause of this man's eccentric appearance was a deliberate desire to be "different." Far more likely, was indifference to his appearance to which hardship and stress had numbed his consciousness.

But the thought is inescapable that many people do make themselves unhappy and ridiculous in an effort to be "different," to stand out apart from the rest of us.

A few weeks ago a play was produced with the title "Different," in which a young girl was so obsessed with the thought that her fiance, whom she dearly loved, was "different" and better than other men that the discovery of a trifling peccadillo in his past which made him, in her eyes, no longer "different," impelled her to banish him from her sight forever. Both spent the succeeding years in hopeless longing for each other. Two hearts were broken and two lives wrecked on the altar of being "different."

A genius was known to have said that he would cheerfully give all his fame in exchange for a happy childhood which he had never known because he was "different" from other boys.

And yet there are people who want to be "different," and, lacking unusual qualities to distinguish them from ordinary humans, they affect poses and postures and eccentricities of dress or manner which make them only ridiculous. I know a woman who when small hats and short skirts are being worn, deliberately affects long skirts and floppy hats because she imagines that this difference from the "common style" makes her exclusive, ultra-refined, "different," whereas it merely makes her appear dowdy and ridiculous.

The first tenet of refinement is to be inconspicuous; and if to be "different" from others implies being superior, more refined, then particularly would it not be achieved by advertising or attempting to evidence it by eccentricity. True distinction inevitably makes itself felt; but to be merely "different" for its own sake is a very shallow ambition.

His Outstanding Characteristic

The wife of Sir Henry Bartle Frere, the distinguished English statesman once had to meet him at a railway station. She took with her a servant who had never seen his master.

"You must go and look for Sir Bartle," said Lady Frere.

"But how shall I know him?" asked the servant.

"Oh," said Lady Frere, "look for a tall gentleman helping somebody."

It is told that the servant found Sir Bartle assisting an old lady out of the railway carriage and so recognized him by the description.

Some one else might have helped the old lady, but they didn't. Even in an age of so-called super-civilization it was possible to distinguish a man by this one characteristic.

About how many of us can it be said that a stranger might recognize us by the fact that if there was anyone in need of help—and there usually is—we would be found helping? On a trolley car would we be known because we gave our seat to a tired-looking old lady? In the rush of modern strenuousness could we be distinguished because, more strenuous than our fellows, we have time to lend a helping hand.

Too often we are like the young fellow who was introduced by a charming maiden to her mother. He responded to the introduction, then said: "It seems to me that your face is very familiar, Mrs.—"

"Well!" the good lady replied, "it ought to be. I stood right in front of you when you were seated on the uptown car for one full hour."

Here is a secret. Ever notice the contented look in the eyes of some elderly person who has never been too busy to help others? Whether those receiving the help appear grateful or not, there is a peculiar pleasure to being helpful, and the people who miss out on this joy miss out on one of the best parts of life.

Windows Placed High

The best light comes from the upper part of the room, not the lower and is needed on a level with the eyes rather than below. This fact makes it possible for an architect to plan his window spaces six or eight inches higher than usual, about two and a half feet from the floor. This extra space in turn gives the housewife an opportunity to make use of the space beneath the window for bookcases, desks, etc.

AROUND THE HOME

By MARGARET BRUCE

Your Conscientious Child

There had been a little unpleasantness at breakfast. Polly, a winsome little person of thirteen-going-on-fourteen, just waking up to problems of right-and-wrong, policy, diplomacy, and with a conscience which was working overtime, burst out with a story of some foolish blunder she had made the day before at school. She had rectified it, it seemed, very promptly; but she had made it and she frankly told of it. Her impatient father had reproved her sharply, and Polly's eyes had filled with tears.

"I didn't have to tell it," said Polly later, as she curled up on the window seat beside her mother. "I could have kept it from daddy—but I never have kept anything from you two, and I hate to hide things—I hate to!"

"But it was all over, wasn't it? You had straightened it out and made it right? It really didn't do any good to go all over it again, did it? And it didn't make very pleasant table talk, you know."

"No-o-o," admitted Polly. "But you want me to be frank, don't you? You don't want me to conceal the foolish things I do, do you?"

The mother hesitated. Here was Polly's first contact with a situation calling for tact, for a greasing of the wheels of life, so that they might run more smoothly and pleasantly. Yet she dreaded to put a brake on that open-mindedness and frankness.

"Well, dear, if they are things that really matter, tell us, of course. But we could all spend much of our time rehearsing the silly mistakes of ourselves and others—and where does it get us? Isn't it better to learn our lessons quietly and not make the same blunder twice, than to bore others by going into details of things that are over and cannot be helped? You can always tell me every little thing, of course, and I hope you will, but don't make table talk of exasperating episodes that make every one uncomfortable. We all make mistakes, and unless they need to be rectified it is better to drop them and not discuss them. That isn't hiding or concealing them—it is merely keeping the atmosphere of the home cheerful and avoiding unpleasantness."

Your Husband's Friends

Probably one of the hardest tasks that confronts the newly married woman is that of adapting herself to her husband's friends. It does not always follow—in fact, it rarely follows—that because one has fallen in love with a man, one must also fall into friendship with his old schoolmates, his college pals, his golfing companions and his business associates. Half the time these gentlemen either bore her stiff or offend her taste and her sense of refinement. They may be good fellows to him, but they are sad failures as far as she is concerned.

Yet it is a very unwise woman who throws cold water on her husband's friendships and makes his old chums feel awkward and unwelcome in her house. Perhaps—who can tell?—he feels the very same way about his wife's girl friends. He may wonder how in the world she can endure such plain, uninteresting, silly chatters, even while she is marveling at his fondness for the loud, gauche backslappers who haunt her pretty new home. Each forgets that such friendships are the result of propinquity, of past good times together, of early acquaintance loyally kept up. The bride sees her friends in the light of their first confidences, their parties and dances. The bridegroom views his one-time pals through a haze of college pranks, hunting expeditions, and noonday luncheons.

Well, it's up to the young matron to bridge this chasm and try to make her husband's friends feel welcome, whether she enjoys them or not. He has a right to his associations, and one can only admire him for being loyal to his old companions. To try to find the interesting points of each one, to enter into their jovial reminiscences and listen sympathetically—this marks the tactful hostess and the thoughtful wife. Sometimes it is desperately hard to put up with raucous laughter, footless jokes (funny to them but not to her), and offensive table manners. But if she expects him to be courteous and agreeable to her friends, she must do the same for him, and receive his friends with cordiality and graciousness. Perhaps she will find that they are pure gold, even if in the rough.

Decapitation Adds to Insects' Lives

At a recent session of the Academy of Sciences Professor Bouvier read a paper written by R. P. Cammet, noted entomologist and for many years a missionary in Madagascar. The purport of the paper was to effect that the lives of butterflies could be prolonged by cutting their heads off in such a way as to avoid a morrhage—an operation which, it would appear, can be performed by an expert.

Cambonet declares that he has tried the experiment successfully with fifty butterflies and that his patients if that is the word—not only reared "all their faculties and were able to reproduce their species, but the average span of their lives in every case was prolonged by from one to two weeks."

Decapitation as a means of prolonging life! What do the many clients of Monsieur Deibler (the guillotine) think of this?—From Le Petit Parisien, translated for the Kansas City Star.

Life Span Not Increased

The expectation of life at birth has increased greatly in the past few years (in London, for instance, from forty-one years to fifty-three years), but the expectation of life of the elderly has not increased in proportion. In other words, more people live to an old age now than used to, but they do not live to any older age. The upper limit of man's life span has not been raised appreciably, indicating that perhaps despite all that science can do, the human body will simply wear out within the usual time.

WHY DENY YOURSELF THE BEST IN MOTOR CAR BODIES

The finest of the new cars in all price classes have now been announced—Cadillac, Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

All offer vastly greater values than ever before in motor car history.

All register amazing advantages in performance and ease and economy of operation.

But the greatest factor of their new glory is described in a single phrase—Body by Fisher.

Here is their supreme beauty—setting absolutely new standards in charm of design and interior fitting.

Here are unequalled factors of safety which add so much to your comfort and confidence.

Here are exclusive conveniences and niceties which do, indeed, make the car with Body by Fisher superior in its class.

No matter what mechanical developments may allure you, it is the body of your car with which you live most intimately—that is why the General Motors units, makers of the best of the new cars in all price classes, point so proudly to the emblem—Body by Fisher.

With the finest of the market to choose from there is no reason why you should deny yourself the greater safety, beauty and comfort which only a Body by Fisher can give.

TO COTTON FARMERS

Much has been said about the difference in weights on cotton put up in Round Bale as compared with the usual square bale method

The point is: Square Bale bagging weighs 20 pounds, whereas Round Bale bagging weighs 5 pounds, which makes 15 pounds more weight to add to Square Bale,—commonly called tare difference.

The following table explains this difference in figures:

Difference in weight on Bagging	Square Bale Price	Money Difference	Difference reduced to Points	To equalize, Round Bale Price Should Be
15 Lbs.	10c	$1.50	30	10.30
15 Lbs.	10½c	$1.58	31½	10.82
15 Lbs.	11c	$1.65	33	11.33
15 Lbs.	11½c	$1.73	34½	11.85
15 Lbs.	12c	$1.80	36	12.36
15 Lbs.	12½c	$1.88	37½	12.88
15 Lbs.	13c	$1.95	39	13.39
15 Lbs.	13½c	$2.03	40½	13.91
15 Lbs.	14c	$2.10	42	14.42
15 Lbs.	14½c	$2.18	43½	14.94
15 Lbs.	15c	$2.25	45	15.45
15 Lbs.	15½c	$2.33	46½	15.97
15 Lbs.	16c	$2.40	48	16.48
15 Lbs.	17c	$2.55	51	17.51

We have the Square Bale press, as well as the Round Bale, and earnestly wish you to have your choice of the method which seems to you most advisable.

Our desire is to gin your cotton and let you name the method. Service as well as to please is our motto.

Miss Irene Beaty left Sunday night for Denton, where she will resume her studies in G. I. A.

First Baptist Church Notes
 We were happy to have a number of out of town people with us in our worship last Sunday morning and evening. Also, to have a number of new students enrolled in our Sunday School. The special song by Bro. Earthman and wife was especially good and was appreciated as their music always is by our congregation. We never have a dull, dry service, tedious and tiresome, but always lively and spiritual. One good churchman recently said, "Our pastor, Bro Mack, is the most loved and the most hated, the most cussed and most discussed man in our town, but he always has something to say worth hearing and a text of Scripture that makes the Bible a new book filled full of interest for anybody."
 Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Vowing and Paying." Read Psalms 76:11 and Eccl 5:4:13. This sermon will be of much personal interest to every one who cares for the Lord's work. For the evening service the subject will be: "Do those who have departed from this world know one another?" "Shall we know our loved ones over there?" Text I Cor. 13:12; Luke 16:17:31. We extend a hearty welcome to everybody, and a special invitation to anyone who does not believe in the immortality of the human soul. The argument will cover thirty minutes straight to the subject and in dead earnest. We never fail to have a crowd.
