WATER SYSTEM IS NEARING COMPLETION

Hedley's waterworks system is practically completed, and the business of turning on the water is only a few days off.

Below is given the rates decided upon by the City Council. They seem to be fair enough, and are lower than the rates in effect at McLean and Claude, towns nearest our size in this section operating water plants.

WATER RATES

The City Council has adopted the following rates and charges in connection with the water system now being installed:

Tapping the Mains.....$8 75
Meter Deposit..... 5 00
Minimum monthly rate 1 75
Meter rates will be as follows:
$1.75 for the first 2500 gallons consumed per month; 50c per 1000 gallons for the next 7500 gallons; 40c per 1000 gallons for the next 40,000 gallons, and 25c per 1000 gallons for all over 50,000 gallons per month.

The actual cost to the City for tapping the mains is $8 45 for material, without any allowance for labor, so there will be a small loss to the city on each tap. The meters will be furnished by the City.

We hope to have the system completed within ten days, provided our pump arrives in next few days, and all consumers should make application to G. C. Heath if they wish to connect.

The World's Fastest Cable

BRINGING THE CABLE ASHORE

"AGAMEMNON" AND "NIAGARA" WHICH LAID THE 1858 CABLE

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE recent announcement that the Western Union Telegraph company had completed laying a new cable across the Atlantic which will have the distinction of being "the world's fastest cable," in the sense that it can transmit legible signals at least five times as rapidly as any heretofore laid, recalls the whole romantic history of man's attempt to bridge great distances and speed up communication between the distant parts of the earth. It recalls particularly the name of Cyrus Field, the American paper merchant who, undaunted by several failures, persisted until success crowned his efforts and made his name immortal.

When the new cable was landed in New York last month, it was an event of great importance, but so accustomed have we become to events of world importance that there were none of the scenes of wild enthusiasm which swept the country upon Cyrus Field's successful completion of his task. In those days they were more given to public celebrations of great events by torchlight processions and appropriate oratory.

Up until that time rapid communication had been impossible. When the treaty which ended the Revolution was signed in 1783, the citizens of the new Republic did not know it until 80 days later. Conditions were much the same by the time of the War of 1812 and, as every school-boy knows, the battle of New Orleans was fought after the treaty of peace had been signed.

Although faster steamships had speeded up communication between the Old world and the New in the next four decades, there was still no instantaneous communication and men had laughed at Field as a dreamer and something of a crank when he first proposed to connect America with an undersea cable telegraphic messages could be sent.

But when the Agamemnon and the Niagara completed their job of laying the cable in August, 1858, and Field's faith in his justified, those who had derided him were the first to hail him.

With the coming of the first transatlantic cable came the prospect of business qupace. This prospect was at first viewed with considerable incredulity, but as the Queen Victoria and President Buchanan over the wires doubts gave way to rejoicing. The new line was in actual operation but it had come only after a series of constant toll and had necessitated thirty trips across the Atlantic.

NEW YORK'S CELEBRATION IN 1858

destruction. Similar demonstrations took place in other parts of the United States. From the Atlantic to the Valley of the Mississippi and to the Gulf of Mexico the firing of guns and the ringing of bells were heard in every city.

The new cable broke down after two months of operation and the courageous American paper merchant who had been the force behind the enterprise could raise no more funds in America. Most of the original capital lost in his first venture had, indeed, come from England, the majority of the 345 men who had subscribed one thousand pounds each to the enterprise being Englishmen. And with a Civil War impending and soon actually under way Field could look for no further financial aid on this side of the ocean.

He went again to England and succeeded, after long negotiations, in obtaining capital with which to build and lay a new cable. The Gutta-Percha company, which had then a practical monopoly of the necessary insulating material, was given the order to build the new cable, which was completed in 1865. The steamship Great Eastern, the largest craft ever built up to that time—

ship constructed for which he subscribed for nearly half. The Gutta-Percha company became the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance company. A new cable was made and enough additional to complete the cable of 1865. The Great Eastern was purchased and on July 13, 1866, steamed into Trinity bay, Newfoundland, trailing behind her a continuous line of cable stretching back to the Irish coast. The shore end was landed safely, the Great Eastern steamed eastward again, grappled for the lost end of the 1865 cable, recovered it, laced on a new section and on September 8 landed this also in Newfoundland.

It is interesting to note that in the new cable which spans the Atlantic from Bay Roberts, Newfoundland, to Penzance, England, history is repeating itself, for in 1912 the Western Union Telegraph company became the operating successor of the Anglo-American Telegraph company, leasing the five cables then owned by the original company, between Great Britain and the United States, and so great is the advance over all previous cable systems which the new cable inaugurates, its completion seems destined to mark the beginning of almost as much of a new era in international communications, as the laying of the 1866 cable did.

Though the deep sea section of the cable is only an inch in diameter, an examination of a cross-section of it, as illustrated above, shows it to be composed of a number of distinct parts consisting of different materials.

The innermost section of this slender line of communication which will link two continents is the copper conductor. It is a round wire not quite one-fifth of an inch in diameter. This carries the electric current through the cable. Around this wire are wrapped six flexible copper tapes which, in case the cable breaks, carry the current around the gap. The purpose of these copper tapes is to give flexibility to the conductor. An accident to the cable lying on the floor of the Atlantic which might break a solid conductor consisting of a single strand and put the line of communication out of business could hardly break all the strands of a taped conductor.

Wrapped around the 3,500 nautical miles of this copper conductor to span the Atlantic from New York to London will be a continuous strip of permalloy, the new magic metal which will give the cable its capacity of 2,500 letters per minute. Permalloy is an alloy of iron and nickel which under certain conditions has a magnetic permeability many times that of any other known substance. This wrapping prevents the leakage of current common to the older types of cables and will give the new copper strand its great speed and make it the world's fastest cable.

Next to the permalloy is the insulation consisting of three layers of gutta percha. This is the only substance yet discovered which combines the necessary insulating qualities with elasticity, simplicity of manipulation, and durability. It is obtained from a tree which grows in the Malay peninsula and Malaysia. The process of gathering it consists in tapping the gutta tree much as a sugar maple is tapped in North America and collecting the sap which exudes. The most familiar use of gutta percha is in the manufacture of the outer shells of golf balls.

Over the gutta percha insulation is placed a layer of jute yarn to act as a cushion for the armor which protects the cable from being broken by any accident which might occur on the bed of the ocean.

This armor consists of eighteen galvanized steel wires, each having a diameter of nine-hundredths of an inch. Before being applied to the cable each is wrapped over its entire length with a fabric to prevent its oxidation under water. Finally, the cable is wrapped with two servings of jute yarn saturated in coal tar, wound on spirally, which form the outer covering.

This copper strand connecting the Old world with the new will be the twentieth transatlantic cable and the ninth to be operated by the Western Union. Although it would seem that radio development had made deep-sea cables obsolete, the fact remains that cable companies continue to spend millions of dollars on new cable costs, for all that they have a full knowledge of radio's capacity and the lines of its probable future development. The importance of cables in world relations was demonstrated at the close of the World War when an international complication threatened over the island of Yap. Yap ordinarily would be as unimportant as its name suggests were it not for the fact that the question of a cable base was involved. So it is likely that the future will see the network of cable lines connecting all parts of the earth increase instead of decrease and whenever a new one, and especially one such as the "world's fastest cable" in which important new developments are concerned, is laid it will be news and big news.

How I Cured Myself of Rupture

After suffering thirteen years with double rupture, one very serious, and enduring the torture of trusses, injections, etc., that did not help, I cured myself by a simple method of my own discovery.

My family physician confirmed my cure, advising me to throw my truss away. I have worn no truss since, and am in perfect health today.

I want to help others who now suffer as I did, so if you will write me, I will tell you FREE about the method that cured my ruptures. Also give names of others who are happy after trying this wonderful method. Address

HEDLEY SCHOOL NEWS

HALLOWE'EN PARTY
Saturday evening, October 30, the Juniors entertained with a Hallowe'en party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Snider, in honor of the Seniors. The guests came in costume, and masked, to a house most effectively decorated in black and orange, with an abundance of ghosts, cats, bats and witches. Hallowe'en stunts, ghost stories, and fortune telling by a real witch in a dark cavern made the evening pass quickly. Pretty waitresses in dainty costume passed trays of tiny ghosts which proved to be bags of pop corn and "golf balls." Other refreshments of apples, ginger snaps and lemonade were served, and the guests departed about 11 o'clock. Those present were: Miss Nellie J. Luther of Claude, Mrs. Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. Snider, Miss Robyn, Grace Hickey, Delbert Kinsey, Blanche Culwell, Joyce Armstrong, Janet Adamson, Charles Everett, Oleta Mann, Jewell Everett, Hugh Sullivan, Rex Kendall, Marian Hicks, J. D. Carter, Myrtle Armstrong, Tula Adamson, Maggie Ruth Alexander, Sue McFarling, Don Alexander, Ruby Moffitt, Winfield Mosley, Hugh Moore, Myrtle Mai Scales, Annie Curtis, Evalyne Crouch, Edwin Flippen, Garvin Cathey, Verda Gilliam, Blaine Doherty, Ray Culwell and Homer Simmons.

GLEE CLUB

At the regular meeting of the Glee Club Thursday night, October 28, the club was honored by the presence of the following guests: Supt. Snider, Messrs. W. A. Pierce, D. C. Moore, J. T. Curtis, W. I. Rains, and Miss Fannie McWhorter. The Club sang "My Little House" and "Dear Hedley High School," and Miss McWhorter favored those present with a reading, "The Little Rebel."

All of Hedley is now rejoicing because we have finally secured an Expression teacher, Miss Fannie McWhorter of Oklahoma. She is a very charming and talented young lady and her popularity and success here seem already assured.

Friday morning, Oct. 29, after Mrs. Moffitt had led the school in several spirited songs, Mr. Snider conducted a business meeting of the entire school.

Tuesday morning, Nov. 2, Mrs. Moffitt led the school in singing "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton" and "Dear Hedley High School." Miss McWhorter then favored the audience with several readings which delighted the little tots as well as the older listeners.

The Board of Trustees has recently bought one hundred new song books, which add greatly to the charm of the chapel exercises.

Lois Goin and Nella Mai Farris, both Sophomores in high school, have returned to school after an absence of several days because of illness.

Barton Armstrong, who has recently had his tonsils removed, is recovering, but is still unable to be in school.

Pauline Lamberson, who has been absent for several weeks on account of the illness of her father, is attending school again.

Grace Hickey, a junior, also absent several days last week because of illness, is in regular attendance again this week.

C D C

The C. D. C. met in regular session Monday, Nov. 1. Several matters were attended to. Social and Program committees were appointed, being as follows: Janet Adamson, Myrtle Armstrong, Jewell Everett, Oleta Mann and Mildred Nipper. Pea green and pink were chosen as the Club colors. The flowers are sweet peas. Our motto is: Finis coronat opus.

HOW TO GET RID OF CATARRH

A Simple, Safe, Inexpensive Method that Clears Out the Head, Nose and Throat.

There is no disease more offensive or disagreeable, or no disease that will lead to as much serious trouble as catarrh. You can now get rid of it by a simple, safe, pleasant home remedy discovered by Dr. Blosser, a catarrh specialist.

Dr. Blosser's Remedy is composed of medicinal herbs, flowers and berries which you smoke in a small pipe or cigarette. The warm smoke-vapor is inhaled into the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs and carries the medicine where sprays, douches and salves cannot possibly reach. Its effect is soothing and healing and is entirely harmless. It contains no cubebs or tobacco, and may be used by children as well as adults.

If you suffer from any catarrhal trouble, such as nasal irritation, hay fever, frequent colds, get from any druggist a pocket-size package of Dr. Blosser's Cigarettes, and prove for yourself their pleasant, beneficial effects.

Marshall, Illinois.—"After my second child was born, I never saw a well day for five years. My father was telling his druggist about my condition, and the druggist insisted that father take a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have me try it, as it had helped his wife. I had given up, but to please father and mother, I commenced taking your medicine and in a week I had begun to feel better. When I passed through the Change of Life, I was taking the Vegetable Compound and I had no trouble of any kind."—Mrs. ANNA MCHENRY, 1005 E. Plum St., Marshall, Illinois.

Another Woman Helped

Philadelphia, Penna.—Mrs. Caroline Nagy, of 2717 Sears St., in a recent letter to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., says that after her child was born she was in a very weak condition. She could not seem to regain her health and went to her mother for advice. She told her to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it had helped her when in like condition, and it has helped her mother also. So Mrs. Nagy started taking it. She felt better after taking the first bottle,—after taking six bottles her weakness and other troubles disappeared, and she is never done praising the Compound.

In some families the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lightning Sought Woman in Shelter

Don't think hiding in the closet during a thunderstorm will keep you safe, remarks the Lewiston (Maine) Journal. Mrs. Joseph Benson, living on the Beachwood road, Bliddeford, was alone in the house when a thunder shower broke the other day. She hid herself in a closet of the house to escape the lightning. A bolt struck a tree in front of the house scattering pieces of the tree all over the dooryard. The bolt then entered the cellar, and the door of the closet where Mrs. Benson was hiding was blown open. The telephone in the house was torn from the wall and the bolt set fire to the house, burning a little spot of the flooring in the parlor before it was extinguished. Lightning also entered the barn and tore a door from the hinges. It was reported that the lightning also plowed furrows in the field near the home where the bolts grounded. Mrs. Benson was affected by the lightning, though no serious results are expected.

LYDIA OF THE PINES

By HONORÉ WILLISIE

WNU Service

(© by Frederick A. Stokes Co.)

The novels of Honoré Willisie offer a tremendous appeal to men and women alike. All women love her novels, while men also have come to know that whatever she writes will be of prime interest. She puts real men into her books—men who are not movie mannequins, Greek gods or paragons of virtue. And her heroines are the sort of girls that men rather fancy. One would look a long way through American fiction of the present day to find a more charming heroine than the Lydia of this story. Yet she is drawn without any of the excesses of sentimentality. Throughout "Lydia of the Pines" there runs a vein of mysticism that turns even the murmuring of the pines into meaningful whisperings, as though the vanishing trees and the dying Indians, companions in their days of strength and freedom, were now fulfilling together a fateful, tragic destiny. You will like this latest Honoré Willisie story if only for its optimism and romance, as reflected by the honest ambition and affectionate loyalty of its heroine, Lydia. From childhood she is beset with a seemingly hopeless tangle of difficult surroundings. How she biases her own way through it to a splendid womanhood is the substance of this story.

CHAPTER I

The Toy Balloon

There is a state in the north Mississippi valley unexcelled for its quiet beauty. To the casual traveler there may be a certain monotony in the unending miles of rolling green hills, stretching on and on into distant, pale skies. But the native of the state knows that the monotony is only seeming.

He knows that the green hills shelter in their gentle valleys many placid lakes. Some of them shallow and bordered with wild rice. Some are couched deep in the hollow of curving bluffs. Some are carefully secreted in virgin pine woods. From the train these pines are little suspected. Fire and the ax have long since destroyed any trace of their growth.

In summer the whole great state is a wonderland of color. Wide wheat lands of a delicate yellowish green sweep mile on mile till brought to pause by the black green of the woods.

An old state, as we measure things out of New England, settled by New Englanders during the first great emigration after the War of 1812. Its capital, Lake City, lays claim to almost a century of existence. Lying among the hills in the northern part of the state, it contains both the state capitol and the state university. Of its thirty thousand inhabitants, five thousand are students and another five thousand are state legislators and state employees.

A quiet town, Lake City, with an atmosphere that might well belong to New England—beauty, culture, leisure, are its hallmarks.

Fifteen years ago half a mile inland from the lake was an empty block that once had been a farm pasture. Three fine old oaks stood with tops together in the center of the block. The grass was still firm and green and thick in the ancient pasture except for narrow trails worn by children's feet. To the initiated each trail told its own story. There was a hollow square that formed the baseball diamond. There was a straight, short cut that led to the little cress-grown spring. There were the parallel lines for "Come-Come Pull Away," and there were numerous bald spots, the center of little radiating trails where, in the fall, each group of children had its complicated roasting oven in which potatoes and "weenies" were cooked.

On one August afternoon the pasture seemed deserted. It was circus day and the children of the surrounding blocks had all by one method or another won admission to the big tent on the hill east of the town.

Yet not quite all the children. For under one of the oak trees was a baby carriage in which a little girl of two lay fast asleep. And far above her, perched lightly but firmly in a swaying fork of the oak, was a long-legged girl of twelve. She sat where she could peer easily down on her small sleeping sister, yet high enough to be completely hidden from casual view. She was a thin youngster, with short curling hair of a dusty yellow. The curly hair did not hide the fine square head, a noble head for so small a girl, set well on the little square shoulders. Her eyes were blue and black lashed, her nose nondescript, her mouth large, her chin square and her little jaw line long and pronounced. She wore a soiled sailor suit of blue galatea. Caught in the crotch of two opposite branches was a doll almost as large as the sleeping child below. It was a queer, old-fashioned doll, with a huge china head that displayed brilliant black hair and eyes as blue as those of her little mistress. The doll wore a clumsily made sailor suit of blue calico, which evidently had been washed recently, but not ironed. It is necessary to meet the doll properly, for she was an intimate and important member of the little girl's family. Her name was Florence Dombey.

A battered red book lay in Florence Dombey's lap. It was called, "With Clive in India." It was written by G. A. Henty and told of the marvelous and hairbreadth adventures of an English lad in an Indian campaign.

Florence Dombey's attention, however, was not on the book. It was riveted, hectorically, on her mistress, who, with her tongue caught between her lips, was deftly whittling a cigar-box cover into doll furniture, of a scale so tiny that even had Florence Dombey had a doll of her own, it could not have hoped to use the furniture.

The little furniture maker suddenly closed the knife sharply. "Darn it! I've cut myself again," she said. She dropped the knife down the neck of her blouse and began to suck her finger. "Here, let me have Henty, Florence Dombey. Don't try to pig it all the time. You know I don't get hardly any time to read."

The furniture and the remains of the cigar-box cover followed the knife into her blouse and she opened the book. But before she had begun to read there was a sleepy little call from below.

"Yes, baby!" called the child. "Here's Lydia, up in the tree! Watch me, dearie! See me come down. Here comes Florence Dombey first."

With some difficulty the book followed the knife and the furniture into the blouse. Florence Dombey, being hastily inverted, showed a length of light marlin cord wrapped about her cotton legs.

"Here she comes, baby! Catch now for Lydia."

The baby below, a tiny plump replica of Lydia, sat up with a gurgle of delight and held up her arms as Florence Dombey, dangling unhappily, upside down, on the end of the marlin cord, was lowered carefully into the perambulator.

"And here I come. Watch me, baby!"

With a swing light and agile as a young monkey, Lydia let herself down, landing with a spring of which an acrobat might have boasted, beside the perambulator.

"There, sweetness!"—kissing the baby—"first we'll fix Florence Dombey, then we'll start for home."

"Florence, home wiv baby."

"Yes, it's getting near supper time," Lydia tucked the still hectorically staring doll in beside her small sister, turned the perambulator around and ran it along one of the little paths to the sidewalk.

At the crossing she met a small girl of her own age, who carried a toy balloon, and a popcorn ball.

"Hello, Lydia!" she cried. "It was a perfectly lovely circus!"

"Was it?" cried Lydia, with an indifferent voice that something in her blue eyes denied. "Well, I had to take care of little Patience!"

"Huh!" shrilled the little girl, "old Lizzie would have done that. I think your father's mean not to give you the money."

Lydia's red cheeks went still redder. "My father's got plenty of money," she began fiercely. Here the baby interrupted.

"Baby love pritty—Baby love—" she held out two beseeching dimpled hands toward the red balloon.

"Patience, you can't have it," cried Lydia. "It'll make your tummy ache. I'll buy you one when you're older."

The black-eyed child, holding the red balloon, suddenly kissed little Patience, who was the pet of all the children in the neighborhood, and put the string of her balloon into the dimpled hand. "I had the circus—you can have the balloon," she said.

Lydia jerked the string away and held it out to the owner.

"We're no charity charities, Margery," she said. "I'll get Patience a balloon."

"You're an awful liar and a cruel beast, Lydia!" cried Margery. She snatched the string and tied it about the baby's wrist. "You know you can't buy her one and you know she'll cry herself sick for one, now she's seen mine, and I guess I love her as much as you do."

Lydia looked from the cherub in the perambulator, crowing ecstatically over the red bubble that tugged at her wrist, to the defiant Margery.

"I'll let her have it, Margery," she said reluctantly. "I'll make you a doll's high chair."

"All right," said Margery, nonchalantly. "Face tag! So long!"

Lydia ran the perambulator along the board walk. The street was macadamized and bordered with thrifty maple trees. Back of the maple trees were frame houses, of cheap and stupid construction. Before one of these Lydia paused. It was a dingy brown house, of the type known as "story and a half."

Lydia opened the gate in the picket fence and tugged the perambulator through and up to the porch.

"There, baby mine, shall Lydia take you in for your supper?"

"Supper," cooed little Patience, lifting her arms.

Lydia lifted her to the porch with surprising ease. The little two-year-old should have been no light weight for the little mother of twelve. She stood on the porch watching Lydia arrange Florence Dombey in her place in the perambulator. The red balloon tugging at her wrist, her soiled little white dress blowing in the summer breeze, she finally grew impatient of Lydia's attentions to Florence Dombey.

"Baby eat now," she cried with a stamp of her small foot.

Lydia laughed. She ran up the steps, took the baby's hand and led her through the entry into a square little room, evidently the parlor of the home. It was dusty and disorderly.

Lydia disgorged the contents of her blouse upon the desk, then followed little Patience into the next room. This was larger than the first and was evidently the dining room and sitting room.

A short, stout old woman was setting the table. She had iron gray hair. Her face was a broad wreath of wrinkles, surrounding bespectacled black eyes and a thin mouth that never quite concealed a very white and handsome set of false teeth.

"See! Lizzie! See!" cried little Patience, patting up to the old woman with the tugging balloon.

"Ain't that grand!" said Lizzie. "Where'd you git the money, Lydia? Baby's milk's in the tin cup on the kitchen table. Your father's home. You'd better fix the steak. He complains so about it when I do it."

Lydia left the baby clinging to Lizzie's skirts and went on into the kitchen. Her father was washing his hands at the sink.

"Hello, dad!" she said. The child had a peculiar thread of richness in her voice when she spoke to little Patience, and it was apparent again as she greeted the man at the sink. He turned toward her.

"Well, young woman, it's about time you got home," he said. "Baby all right?"

Lydia nodded and turned toward the litter of dishes and paper parcels on the kitchen table. Amos Dudley at this time was about forty years old—a thin man of medium weight, his brown hair already gray at the temples. Lydia evidently got from him the blue of her eyes and the white of her teeth. He began to peel off a pair of brown overalls.

"I've reached the land of corn and wine with all its riches surely mine. I've reached that beautiful shining shore, My heaven, my home, forevermore."

The coolness of the August wind touched Amos' face. "Oh! Patience, Patience—" he murmured.

Great Value Even in Moments of Leisure

Farm women have recognized that well-earned and well-used leisure is the oil which makes the necessary duties of life be performed happily. Carl Sandburg has said: "Life is a combination of biscuits and hyacinths," and the farm woman is learning to realize the value of the hyacinths as she has long since realized the value of the biscuits, a writer in the Country Gentleman asserts. She is changing her objective from shining pots and pans to shining joyous faces, and she and her family alike are profiting by the change in accent.

Not all farm women are realizing the value of leisure, and but few farm women as yet have leisure in needed measure; nor are all who have won it using it effectively. But a good beginning has been made and the future is full of hope.

These times of leisure are literally

Disappointed

A Yankee from New England was lounging on a park bench in London when a great excitement arose. People rushed toward the street, falling over each other in their haste to get there. "What's it all about?" asked the Yankee, starting to get up. "Mon, mon," cried a little man, "the king is coming!" "Thunderation!" said the Yankee, settling back on the bench. "I thought it was a fire."—Country Gentleman.

"What's for supper?" he asked. "Round steak," said Lydia. "For heaven's sake, don't, let Liz touch it."

"I won't," said the child, piling up dishes deftly.

"I'm going to give baby her cupful of milk, and then I'll fix it in my patent way."

Amos nodded. "You're a natural cook, like your mother." He paused, one leg of his overalls off, disclosing his shiny black trousers. Lydia carried the cupful of milk toward the dining room. From where he sat he could see her kneel before little Patience, and hold the cup, while the baby drank thirstily. Little notes of the sunset light danced on the two curly golden heads. He looked from the children toward the dusty kitchen table.

"What a h—l of a mess Liz does keep going," he muttered. "Patience would break her heart, if she knew. Oh! Patience, Patience!"

Lydia came back with the empty cup. "Now for the steak," she exclaimed. "Gosh, what a fire!"

She attacked the greasy stove with enthusiasm and in a short time a savory smell of steak filled the house. Amos went into the dining room and sat in a rocking chair with little Patience and the balloon in his lap.

"Where'd she get the balloon?" asked Amos as Lydia brought in the platter of meat.

"Margery gave it to her," answered the child. "Supper's ready."

"Got it at the circus, I suppose. I wish I could 'a' let you go, Lydia, but at a dollar and a half a day, I swan I—"

"I didn't want to go," returned Lydia, setting the baby in her high chair. "I'm getting too big for circuses."

"Too big for a circus!" Her father looked at her with understanding eyes. "I guess heaven is paved with lies like yours, Lydia. John Levine will be over-tonight. Get some of the mess dug out of the parlor, will you, Lizzie?"

"Sure," said Lizzie, good-naturedly. Lydia sat opposite her father and poured tea. The ancient maid of all work sat beside Patience and dispensed the currant sauce and the cake.

The baby was half asleep before the meal was ended. "She didn't finish her nap this afternoon," said Lydia. "I'll take her up to bed now and finish my cake afterward."

The little sisters slept together in a slant-ceilinged bedroom. Here again was dust and disorder, the floor covered with clothing and toys, the bed unmade, the old-fashioned mahogany bureau piled high with books, brushes, and soiled tea-cups that had held the baby's milk.

There was still light enough to see by. Lydia stood Patience on the bed and got her into her nightdress after gently persuading the baby to let her fasten the balloon to the foot of the bed. Then she carried her to the little rocker by the window and with a look that was the very essence of motherhood began to rock the two-year-old to sleep. Presently there floated down to Amos, smoking his pipe on the front step, Lydia's childish, throaty contralto:

"I've reached the land of corn and wine with all its riches surely mine. I've reached that beautiful shining shore, My heaven, my home, forevermore."

The coolness of the August wind touched Amos' face. "Oh! Patience, Patience—" he murmured.

"My loan from Marshall comes due in January," said Amos. "My lord, I've got to do something."

"He's a skin, Marshall is. Why does he live on this street except to save money?"

Lydia looked up from "Tom Sawyer." There were two little lines of worry between her eyes and the little sick sense in the pit of her stomach that always came when she heard money matters discussed. Her earliest recollection was of her mother frantically striving to devise some method of meeting their latest loan.

"I'd like to get enough ahead to buy a little farm. All my folks were farmers back in New Hampshire and I was a fool ever to have quit it. It looked like a mechanic could eat a farmer up, though, when I was a young fellow. Now a little farm looks good enough to me. But on a dollar-and-a-half-a-day, I swan—"

Amos sighed. "Land's high around here," said Levine. "I understand Marshall sold Eagle farm for a hundred dollars an acre. Takes a sharp farmer to make interest on a hundred an acre. Lord—when you think of the land on the reservation twenty miles from here, just yelling for men to farm it and nothing but a bunch of dirty Indians to take advantage of it."

"Look here, John," said Amos with sudden energy. "It's time that bunch of Indians moved on and gave white men a chance. I wouldn't say a word if they farmed the land, but such a lazy, lousy outfit!"

Exclude the Indians, indeed! But wouldn't that prove a far more difficult task than he might suppose?

Friendship's Progress

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it rush to it, it may soon run itself out of breath.—Fuller.

Lydia sat for a moment or two with the sleeping baby in her arms, looking down on her with a curious gentle intentness. Then she rose carefully, and as carefully deposited little Patience on the bed. This done, she untied the balloon and carried it out with her to the little landing. There was a window here into which the August moon was beginning to shine. Lydia sat down with the balloon and felt it carefully.

"Aren't balloons the most wonderful things, almost as wonderful as bubbles," she murmured. "I love the smell of them. Think what they can do, how they can float, better than birds! How you want to squeeze them but you don't oast! I'd rather have gone to the circus than to heaven."

In a moment she heard steps and greetings and her father leading his friend into the house. Then she slipped down the stairs and into the night. A dozen times she ran up and down the yard, the balloon like a fettered bird tugging at her wrist.

"I love it as much as little Patience does," she murmured. "Oh, I wish it was mine."

Finally, she ran out of the gate and up the street to the one fine house of which the street boasted. She stole up to the door and fastened the string of the balloon to the door bell, gave the bell a jerk and fled.

"Well, I haven't anything pleasant at all to look forward to now," she thought. "The circus parade is over and I've returned the balloon. Gee, yes, there is too! I didn't eat my cake yet!"

She turned up the lamp in the kitchen and foraged in the cake box, bringing out the cake Lizzie had saved for her. With this in her hand she entered the dining room. An extraordinary long, thin man was stretched out in one armchair, Amos in the other.

"You ought to sit in the parlor, dad," said Lydia, reproachfully. "It's too stuffy," said Amos. "Oh, hello, young Lydia!" said the tall man. "Come here and let me look at you."

Levine drew the child to his knee. She looked with a clear affectionate gaze on his thin smooth-shaven face, and into his tired black eyes.

"Why do you always say 'young' Lydia?" asked the child. "That's what I want to know, too," agreed Amos.

"Because, by heck! she's so young to be such an old lady." He smoothed the short curly hair with a gesture that was indescribably gentle. "I tell you what, young Lydia, if you were ten years older and I were ten years younger—"

Lydia leaned against his knee and took a large bite of cake. "You'd take me traveling, wouldn't you, Mr. Levine?" she said, comfortably.

"You bet I would, and you should have your heart's desire, whatever that might be. If any one deserves it, you do, young Lydia."

Amos nodded and Lydia looked at them both with a sort of puzzled content as she munched her cake.

"I brought a newly illustrated copy of 'Tom Sawyer' for you to see, Lydia," said Levine. "Keep it as long as you want to. It's over on the couch there."

Lydia threw herself headlong on the book and the two men returned to the conversation she had interrupted.

"My loan from Marshall comes due in January," said Amos. "My lord, I've got to do something."

"He's a skin, Marshall is. Why does he live on this street except to save money?"

Lydia looked up from "Tom Sawyer." There were two little lines of worry between her eyes and the little sick sense in the pit of her stomach that always came when she heard money matters discussed. W. M. S. STUDIES MOSLEM RESPONSE TO NEW AGE

The Islamic world is divided into many religious sects and various schools of thought, much as is our Western religious world. One of their writers says: "We talk of unity, but we have the barrenness of death and division at home. We must attempt to bring together in loving brotherhood these sects, divided as they now are by envy, malice, hatred and all uncharitableness." The more prominent of these divisions can be listed as: (a) Orthodox Moslems; (b) Indian Liberalists; (c) Ahmadiya Controversialists; (d) Turkish Liberalists and Critics. Among the many statements studied as to what leaders of these groups think of the present situation in the Moslem world, we find seven types of thought or opinion, as follows:

1. Those strictly orthodox in faith and practice, who are hostile to everything modern, foreign, or Western.

2. Those who admit that progress is desirable, but who maintain their confidence in the Koran and interpret it to agree with modern ideals.

3. Those who would bring the Koran up to date ethically, but who find spiritual points of view in Moslem religious literature.

4. Those who are ready to discard many elements in the Koran but who hold fast to a modernized Islam and attack Christianity very bitterly.

5. Those who discriminate between the permanent and temporary teachings of Islam, but who are appreciative of Christian thought and ideals.

6. Those who are essentially Christian in belief, but fear to make an open confession.

7. Those who have lost faith in the Koran, but stand by Islam as a social and political system and are opposed to Christianity as a foreign religion.

The questions discussed in class were: "Why do Moslems oppose Christianity?" and "If you were a Moslem, how would you feel toward your own religion and toward Christianity?" It is certainly an interesting exercise to try putting yourself in the place of a non-Christian, and looking your religion and his up and down to find what attitude he takes. Try it, after you have learned enough about his to be fair in your estimate. Before you begin, be sure you know enough about your own to be fair to it, also.

Much has been said about the difference in weights on cotton put up in Round Bale as compared with the usual square bale method

The point is: Square Bale bagging weighs 20 pounds, whereas Round Bale bagging weighs 5 pounds, which makes 15 pounds more weight to add to Square Bale,--commonly called tare difference.

The following table explains this difference in figures:

Difference in weight on Bagging	Square Bale Price	Money Difference	Difference reduced to Points	To equalize, Round Bale Price Should Be

Jazz Age Is Thrifty

Bankers at Portland, Ore., have come to the conclusion that, regardless of the jazz age and the tendency to installment buying of luxuries now considered necessities, there is a steady gain in thrift habits. Bank deposits for the first six months of the year gained $9,000,000, of which more than two-thirds, or $6,000,000, was a gain in savings.

Scientists say that we retain the brain cells of our youth. That explains a whole lot.

THROUGH A WOMAN'S EYES

By JEAN NEWTON

The Tyranny of Things

In his "Story of Mankind" Hendrick Van Loon says of the Greeks:

"The story of Greek life is a story of simplicity. 'Things,' chairs and tables and books and houses and carriages, are apt to take up a great deal of their owner's time. In the end they invariably make him their slave and his hours are spent looking after their wants, keeping them polished and brushed and painted. The Greeks, before everything else, wanted to be 'free,' both in mind and in body. That they might maintain their liberty and be truly free in spirit they reduced their daily needs to the lowest possible point."

And this reminds me of the time when I was a little girl, when a very rich lady who lived in a very large house with a great many servants remarked to my mother that she was going away to rest from her household duties. That appealed to my baby sense of humor. Six servants—and she needed a rest from household duties!

My mother tried to explain what I have long since discovered—that the larger her house and the greater the number of her servants, the bigger is a woman's job.

And so it is with most of the "things" we call luxuries. They tyrannize over us. Like the woman who must remain indoors on a beautiful day because the crystal closet must be washed or the hangings cleaned, most of us are in some measure under the tyranny of things.

Silver has to be constantly polished. Furniture must be dusted and kept shining. Jewels must be locked in strong boxes of which people are constantly losing the keys! Indeed, the tramp takes the lonely road with less care and a lighter heart than the woman who rides in a limousine bedecked with jewels on account of which she is in fear of her life.

It has been said that "Heavy lies the head that wears a crown," but not heavier than the man's whose bolted doors must guard valuables that invite thieves.

A woman whom I suspect of Greek ancestry made the remark the other day that with the glorious out-of-doors and so many wonderful and interesting things in life to enjoy, it is a crime that we must give so much time to simply "keeping the wheels going round"—the dressmaker and the hairdresser and the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, house, home and other routine.

The Greeks in their simplicity had the right idea.

The Art of Living

"I seem to be alright," a perfectly sane woman is known to have remarked, "when everything runs smoothly. But the moment anything happens to upset my routine my nerves get the better of me and I am completely floored."

I wonder whether she realized the significance of her confession!

"As long as things run smoothly"—anybody can get along. Then there is no need for initiative or competence or courage. The most helpless infant can get along and be "alright."

"As long as things run smoothly"—anybody can stay good natured. Then there is no need for poise or sacrifice or self-control. An enraged bull rushing downhill is harmless if no one gets in his path.

The test of us humans is how we handle the situations that do not run smoothly—how we act in the face of disappointment, or hardship, or injustice.

Do we have poise, judgment, control? Do we retain our perspective and our own sense of justice?

Or are we "floored"—defeated before we begin? Do we run amuck, and, like the wild bull, make whoever happens to come in our path suffer for it?

When things go smoothly we are not "going along"—we are being carried along on one of the pleasant tributaries of the river of life.

But when the currents cross and we find ourselves in unfriendly waters, which, if we let them, would rush us to the deadly rapids, that is the time when we must keep our heads and strike out and swim—that is the time that tests our caliber.

And one thing we must all learn is that there is not one of life's tributaries, no matter how pleasant, that will carry us benignantly all the way to the sea. Just as there is no land road that is without snags, smooth all the way, so the kindest currents must sometimes cross and put us on our mettle.

We have all got to take the rough with the smooth and to know how to take the rough smoothly is the whole art of living.

Making Progress

Marion was a flirtatious young woman, and had been engaged many times, but at the age of thirty she was still unmarried. Two of her feminine friends were discussing her case. "It looks as if Marion is not making a very good running in the matrimonial race," one said. "Oh, I don't know about that," the other remarked. "I passed by her house last night, and looking in her living-room window I noticed that she is on her twelfth lap."

AROUND THE HOME

By MARGARET BRUCE

The Decorative Fanlight

The modern colonial home which boasts a fanlight gives its owners a double opportunity for producing a charming effect—an effect from without and one from within. I do not mean the fanlight over the entrance door, though this is beautiful, of course. What delights me most is the single fanlight, or the two half-fanlights, in the hip of the roof. These quaint windows give the final touch of charm to a house of inviting lines and low, homelike spread, and when they are attractively treated from the interior—where they are usually found in a dormer-roofed bedroom or attic—they are a feature of no small decorative value.

In the home of some friends of mine, these half-fanlights are located on either side of a wide red brick chimney, rising against the broad white clapboards of the dwelling. From the outside, the odd little windows suggest an attic full of old spinning wheels, brass-nailed chests, and similar antiques. From within, they form the chief feature of a series of built-in book-shelves and writing table that provide an ideal retreat for the mistress of the house.

What an attractive nook this is, with its brick chimney fitted with a mantel shelf slightly higher than the bookcases on either side, its vermilion-lacquered table and chair, the sage-green curtains at the book shelves, and the fine net curtains drawn tightly over the little fanlights! Such small windows as this must not be so draped that the light is shut out, as every ray is needed, and for this purpose the cream or white net is used. The net is fastened tight to the window frame, as the fans open outward.

In an attic room like this, the walls are better left roughly plastered than covered with paper. The marks of the plasterer's implement, left imprinted in large sweeps, makes an interesting surface and gives the effect of a pattern.

In this case, the whole end of the room is treated as a decorative unit, a treatment which gives the room much more charm than if the bookcases, table, shelf, windows and chair were scattered about here and there. The windows and chimney permit a balanced effect that is most effective.

An Interior Awning

Endless are the attractive window drapings nowadays, when our homes are lighted by windows of many different sizes and shapes, from small diamond-paned casements to tall arched library sashes. Endless, too, are the styles and colorings of curtain fabrics, and if each of us is willing to depart from the conventional treatment which makes homes look as if they had been furnished from a copy book, it ought not to be hard to have our windows display charming and amusing originality.

Recently, when visiting a beautiful country club house which had been decorated by a committee of resourceful, up-to-date women members, I saw a series of windows worked out in the most interesting way. They were very high windows occurring at intervals around three sides of a great living room with a high ceiling. During the summer these windows were shaded by awnings outside, which hid the upper part of each sash and lowered the apparent height of each window. In the winter, however, these awnings were taken down and the result was that the windows looked a bit too lofty, with their straight side hangings.

When the question came up of a valance for windows arched like these, one woman on the committee had a bright idea. Instead of a flat valance across the top of the window she conceived the plan of a small interior awnings of bright-colored chintz to match the cushions in the great wicker chairs which stood about. A wooden framework was built out over each window, curving out from the wall-line about 12 or 14 inches. This framework was covered with the chintz, which hung down slightly below the wooden support and was scalloped around the edge.

Below this improvised awning straight folds of drapery silk in a harmonizing color fell to the floor. The effect was that of a summery outdoor garden facade, rather than an ordinary interior room. Of course, such treatment could be used only on a window with an arched top, to get the true effect of a gay curved awning.

DR. W. R. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 88

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. R. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

Next Sunday afternoon is the time for the monthly business meeting of our church. There will be some important matters up for consideration. Every good Baptist church member should attend and have part in the conference meetings of his church. Our church government is a pure New Testament democracy. All members are equal in voice and vote. If you are a member, you are one of us. The text for the morning hour is John 17:12-18. "Was Judas a Christian or a Son of Perdition? Did Jesus pray for Judas and give him a share in the Commission?" Also read Acts 1:15-25. The subject for the evening sermon will be "Boldness in the Ministry;" text Acts 4:29. We shall have some things to say about religious liberty in Fort Worth and some larger Catholic cities.
Everybody invited cordially and ministers especially. We have a nice crowd and a comfortable well as a friendly greeting and a hot hearted gospel message.

AT THE METHODIST CHURCH

Next Sunday is our last Sunday for this Conference year.
Annual Conference will meet on Wednesday of next week.

We will have all the services as usual, except there will be no preaching at the evening hour.
We will have our last church conference for the year at that hour.

At the morning preaching hour
I plan to use as text, "That He by the grace of God should taste death for every man." My theme will be The Atonement. Special music suitable to the occasion.

Let all the teachers and officers of the Sunday School remember that next Sunday is the time for our Workers Council and that some important matters come before us.

The evening hour will be more of interest to members of the Methodist church than to others, though any are welcome.

Let's make the Sunday School attendance what it should be next Sunday. Roby ran clear ahead of us in the collection last Sunday, and are too far for us to ever be able to catch up in one Sunday. But we can still have a good attendance. Why not hold all we have gained and then go still forward with that.

Announcement will be made Sunday morning as to how we stand on the Conference collections, and on the salary too. By close work on the part of all we will be able to pay up in full, we believe.

J. W. Hawkins, Pastor.
