CHAMBER COMMERCE IS ORGANIZED HERE

The citizens of Hedley, Lelia Lake, McKnight and adjacent communities met in the Woodman Hall in Hedley Monday night for the purpose of discussing the needs of these communities and to discuss the subject of organizing a Chamber of Commerce or some such organization here.

CITY COUNCIL GRANTS SEWER FRANCHISE

The City Council of Hedley has recently granted a franchise for the construction of a modern sanitary sewer system. The actual work will commence as soon as a sufficient number of citizens have shown their desire for such a convenience, by signing the paper which will be brought to them by the representative of the company.

The Hedley Sewer Company will install the system which will service the citizens of Hedley at a cheaper rate than the rates of other towns of this size.

NEW DOCTORS' OFFICES AT HEDLEY DRUG CO.

The Hedley Drug Company has equipped two rooms in the rear of their new store for the convenience of Drs. Coffey and Webb and their patients.

In beauty of arrangement and equipment they far surpass anything we have seen in this section, and compare favorably with the waiting rooms and operating rooms of city doctors. It was a real treat to visit and inspect them.

The drug store, doctors and patients are all to be congratulated on this needed improvement.

The "Not-Quite Puritans" Who Started Thanksgiving

THE "SABBATH" INSPECTION OF TAVERNS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AS THANKSGIVING time approaches and our minds turn back to the origin of that holiday—that is, if Twentieth century minds, accustomed to making it a day for consuming roast turkey, cranberry sauce, pumpkin pie, cider and other eatables and drinkables to a painful degree, football games and for innumerable other forms of celebration far removed from the original purpose of the day, can be easily turned back for a consideration of historic origins—it would be interesting for each of us to make a mental inventory and try to determine if we know much more about the people who gave us this holiday than we seem to know about observing it in the spirit in which it was conceived.

Thanksgiving, of course, brings up a mental picture (which is usually a reproduction of some painting—or cartoon—that we have seen) of a group of sober-faced men and women walking through the woods to a little log church. The outstanding features of the sober costume of the men are the tall-crowned hats, the big shoe buckles and the clumsy-looking guns, with their bell-shaped muzzles, over their shoulders; of the women—the white Dutch caps on their heads and the dark capes hanging from their shoulders. If it is the cartoonist, rather than the painter, who gives us our mental picture of the Puritan inventors of Thanksgiving day, we're pretty sure to see a man holding a turkey by the neck in one hand and his gun in the other, while an Indian arrow decorates the tall crown of his hat. Or the arrow (an Indian arrow is by now an almost indispensable symbol of Thanksgiving) may be flying through the window of a log cabin home and plunging into the turkey on the table, much to the consternation of the Puritan family, all ready to eat the "noble bird" when the unexpected garnish arrives. Or if we are asked to characterize the Puritans in a few words, those words are pretty likely to be "stern" or "noble" or "godly" or "pious" or "well—well—puritanical—you know what I mean."

But aside from the ideas, as given by these mental and word pictures, how much do we actually know about the Puritan fathers and mothers? Do they exist in our minds as "people" as "human beings" or as images recreated from myths? Were they all, and always, "pious" or "godly" or "stern," or did they have their lighter moments when they were "people" or "human beings," as we know such individuals today.

Let the author of a book, recently published in Boston, the home of the Puritans, by Little, Brown and company, answer that question. The name of the book is "The Not-Quite Puritans" which in itself is something of an answer. But test it be thought that it is the work of an iconoclast, intent upon shattering some work idols, an outsider who wishes only to poke irreverent fun at a people and tradition near and dear to most Americans, let it be said that the author of the book is Henry W. Lawrence, a native New Englander and a professor of history at Connecticut college, who has only to examine his family history to know whereof he speaks. For two of his ancestors among many others have "records" in that they were haled into court for deeds which were "not quite puritan." In the introduction to his book Professor Lawrence says:

Nothing new could possibly be asserted about the austerity of the Puritan, but there is still much to be said concerning his frivolity. During more than a century, tireless orators have stupored their reverent hearers with undiscriminating praise of the stern virtues that were the glory of early New England; and when the image breakers of our own irreligious times have risen to reply, they have usually seen and smitten only a figure of unhuman sternness, made awful by his worshippers. It is high time that justice be done to the humanity, the wit and the frailty of our formidable ancestors. For example, all we loyal New Englanders have known from our youth up of Cotton Mather's views on witchcraft and his discussion of the "nature, number, and operations of the devils"; but why have we not been as freely informed of how he narrowly escaped a breach-of-promise suit when courting his second wife? We shall not love them less, these forefathers of ours, if we see them gay as well as grave, and we may cease to think of them as largely the creatures of a moralized and provincial mythology.

New England in the Seventeenth century was probably no more wholesome than it is in the Twentieth. Then, as now, a few great and good men and women tried in vain to "sell" godliness to the multitude, but there were few buyers; though at that time everybody was compelled to attend the sale. Judging by the acts of the vast majority, rather than by the words of a very small number, these early New Englanders were spiritually akin to our present generation. Some few of them were saints; a few more were hypocrites; but most of them were neither. Their amount of true holiness was, per capita, about the same as ours, but it took a different form, and they talked about it more than we do. Their normal human exuberance was often so camouflaged in pious phrases that it was, and still is, mistaken for godliness. Probably they were as bewildered as we are about how life should be lived. Certainly they were often discouraged with their efforts to regulate it, and they had many private doubts as to whether the method of sitting on the lid was, after all, the best way to deal with human feelings.

thieves, and others who, like themselves, were dangerous to the community. Thus, the records of the Essex County Quarterly courts show that, during the session held at Ipswich in 1682, several such perilous females were dealt with:

—Warrant dated April 14, 1682, for the appearance of those presented by the grand jury on March 28 for folding their hair, frizzing and knotting and for wearing silk scarfs, Martha Rogers, Mary Brownex and Elizabeth Browne, the glazier's daughters, Abigail Metcalfe, Elizabeth Perkins, wife of Luke Perkins, Martha Whiting, John Webster's daughter who lives with Mr. John Rogers and Priscilla Carrell, Capt. Appleton's maid.

By 1713, disorderly night life in Boston seems to have been well started, to the extreme annoyance of the Rev. Cotton Mather, who comments on it thus in his diary:

"There are knots of riotous Young Men in the Town. On purpose to insult Piety, they will come under my Window in the Middle of the Night, and sing profane and filthy Songs. The last Night they did so, and fell upon People with Clubs, taken off my Wood Pile. 'Tis his time to call in the Help of the Government of the Place, for the punishing and suppressing of these Disorders."

Efforts of the early New England fathers to stop wickedness by means of strict laws met with indifferent success. They were more ready to admit this than some of their modern descendants have been.

Thus are the "not-quite Puritans" revealed in a book written by one of the descendants in which for once, at least, they are presented to Americans of today as "people" and "human beings." But in turning our thoughts back to them as the time for the holiday which they have given us approaches, we need not hold them in any less esteem or reverence because of these revelations about them. The concluding chapter of Professor Lawrence's book is an illuminating exposition of that fact. He says:

There is a belief, widely prevalent today, that history should be the cringing slave of public policy, rather than its trustworthy guide. According to this belief the facts which history presents should be determined, not by the historians, but by those who are supposed to understand better than they what the public welfare requires of the historic record. In particular, there are a great number of persons, groups and organizations, who are now insisting, even to the point of coercion, that no present-day explorer of our national or colonial history shall bring to light, and certainly to no widespread public notice, any facts which seem to discredit the traditional and popular view of our heroic and glorious past. The authenticity of the facts is rarely questioned. The propriety of presenting them to the public, or at least of giving them so much prominence, is often sharply challenged.

In anticipation of such a challenge to the facts presented in this little book, a further word beyond what has been said in the preface seems appropriate. First, as to the belief that Clio should be a slave rather than a guide, and that her utterances should be determined, not by her faithful disciples, but by the self-appointed guardians of public welfare, this willingness to substitute mythology for history, and to cling fondly to that which is known to be untrue, is shared by so many admirable people today that the historians of this country have issued a formal, public protest and warning against it. This warning is in the form of a set of resolutions adopted by the American Historical Association, the national society which includes in its membership practically all the leading writers and teachers of history in the United States.

Second, as to the damage, if any, done to the Puritan tradition by the facts presented in this book, or by the manner of their presentation, the author's own profound admiration for many of the leaders in early New England has not been lessened in the slightest degree because of the facts he has discovered and related about them. Rather, he has felt reassured to find that behind the myths of impossible, intolerable, unhuman goodly-doings there really were men and women of heroic character and achievement, so abundantly equipped with noble qualities and noble deeds that laudatory lying about them was at best superfluous.

Their fame shines all the brighter when the darkness which surrounded them is more adequately revealed. The policy of trying to conceal or to minimize their faults and limitations seems far more likely to produce, in the mind of the present-day schoolboy or citizen, a cautious but cynical skepticism than the desired patriotic reverence, and to deepen the suspicion of many that all national history is a set of half-truths, more conducive to jingoistic patriotism than to intellectual honesty.

However distressing "The Not-Quite Puritans" may be to those who insist on regarding the early New Englander as a flawless demigod and a halosacred, it may find a welcome with the followers of that eminent son of New England, Oliver Wendell Holmes, in his world-wide remark that "we must have a weak spot or two in a character before we can love it much."

Boosting and Boosters

"There ain't nothin' 'avin' in the woods what can make more fuss than a blue jay—ain't there ain't nothin' that anybody ever heard tell a blue jay was good for—'cept to trim wimmen's bonnets, maybe."—Preachin' Bill.

YES, of course, one should always put one's best foot foremost. At the same time, when one essays a good long step ahead, one should be reasonably sure that one's hind foot is not stuck fast in the mud.

But speaking of boosters: There are several varieties of the genius hors-sacrus.

One of the most common is the kind that perches on the corral fence and flaps its wings and crows from sunup till sundown. Nobody knows exactly what all the commotion is about; nobody cares, except that it is annoying. We suspect that somebody has laid an egg or something, but we are dead sure that the bird making all the noise didn't. Perhaps some neighboring rooster may have remarked that their corral is larger than ours. Indeed, the noisy one, himself, doesn't appear to know exactly the reason for his excitement. He seems to have started his mouth to talking and then gone away and left it.

The most detestable of the boosting breed are the professionals. They are enthusiasm prostitutes selling themselves to every stranger who is unwise enough to fall for their charms.

One of these creatures lands in a community just before noon—in time to get himself invited to the Rotary, Kiwanis, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday club luncheon; and before the chamber of commerce banquet that evening he has sold the town to itself. In its delirium the town expresses its gratitude to the booster by delivering itself without reservation into his hands.

When the dust has settled the professional is well on his way to fresh fields. The citizens sober up to find themselves exactly where they were

The most detestable of the boosting breed are the professionals.

They are enthusiasm prostitutes selling themselves to every stranger who is unwise enough to fall for their charms.

The slogan of the booster: "Put up your hammer and get a horn," aptly epitomizes the down-to-date philosophy of boosting.

It seems never to have occurred to these vociferating pests that the hammer is mainly a tool for building and that horns are mostly toys with which thoughtless and irresponsible children make a distracting racket.

Suppose we think a few things and see if we do not find that all glittering talk is not golden; and that, in fact, golden talk very seldom glitters.

Talk is disgustingly cheap when there is nothing to back it. I have never heard that a barnyard full of cackles ever raised the price of eggs.

Most of us who go broke get that way by spending not wisely but too well.

before, minus the expense of their boosting debut.

Very different is the good citizen who honestly believes that his hometown has peculiar advantages, who sincerely loves his neighbors because he thinks they are the finest people in the world, and who, out of a full heart, wants others to share the community blessings which he so enjoys.

Such a booster is a delight and a sinner pure asset to any community—providing—oh yes, providing, our boosting friend does not permit every butcher and baker and candlestick maker to use him and his unselfish enthusiasm to boost their individual and wholly selfish interests.

Many a wily old town spider sits back out of sight and unostentatiously urges these community interest heroes on, while it never occurs to the loyal boosters that all they are doing is to boost silly flies into the spider's carefully spread net.

The slogan of the booster: "Put up your hammer and get a horn," aptly epitomizes the down-to-date philosophy of boosting. It seems never to have occurred to these vociferating pests that the hammer is mainly a tool for building and that horns are mostly toys with which thoughtless and irresponsible children make a distracting racket.

Suppose we think a few things and see if we do not find that all glittering talk is not golden; and that, in fact, golden talk very seldom glitters.

Oratory often goes "blah" for the simple reason that it is "blah." Talk is disgustingly cheap when there is nothing to back it. I have never heard that a barnyard full of cackles ever raised the price of eggs.

Between you and me, many a high-chested rooster who can crow right lustily at a chamber of commerce banquet, contributes next to nothing toward the community omelette.

And the only argument ever advanced for all this extravagant and ridiculous community boosting is that there is money in it for everybody.

I agree that there may be money in it for some. But I contend if the money spent annually by the average boosting community for that type of boosting which convinces only credulous fools, were spent in substantial and genuine community improvements, the harvest would be abundant for all.

True, the harvest might not be in actual dollars that could be deposited in a bank. But there are community interests you know, which, while not directly bankable, are beyond price.

No, I am not so impractical as to ignore the universal need of bankable dollars. Bankable dollars are a great comfort—I wish I could make myself more comfortable!

The Teacher says, "The love of money is the root of all evil." It is just as true that a desire for money may be rooted in a sincere purpose to accomplish a great good.

But those mistaken saints who hold that we ought not to think of money, need not worry. We don't think about it, and therein lies two-thirds of our financial troubles. If we could only be persuaded to really think about money, money would not worry us much.

Money is of value not because it is money, but because it stands for all that is dearest and best in life. That it stands also for all that is debasing and damning makes no difference.

And so the great question of the age is not what you are, but what is your income? The great problem of life is not why are we here, but how can we manage to stay here? The great fear of our existence is not fear of death, but fear of notice from the bank that we have overdrawn. The fight to pay our bills, and the dread of the deadly deficit—these are the nightmares that keep us awake.

The red-link tragedy is a very real tragedy—a tragedy in which most of us at one time or another have been forced to play a part. But chin music alone will never draw a large flock of dollars to your box office.

Too often we study our financial problems from the one standpoint of how to get money. At this date it appears that the shortest way out of our difficulties is to learn how to spend the money we do get. If a restaurant keeper were to invest all his capital in flowers to decorate his tables, his bill of fare would not attract a hungry crowd with cash to spend.

Most of us who go broke get that way by spending not wisely but too well.

Certainly, I know the old saying: "Doing business without advertising is like winking at your girl in the dark. You may know what you are doing but no one else will."

But advertising is not simply making any old thing sound attractive. Those leaders who rank high in business intelligence discovered long ago that the advertising which is 80 per cent lie is less than 10 per cent effective.

The salesman who is long on gab and short on truth loses more business than he gains. The selling talk that is based on a policy of hit-and-run rarely scores a second time on the same customer. The hook that is baited with guff lands only minnows. The fish are only attracted by more substantial bait. No hunter ever yet bagged big game with a blow-gun.

Once, when I was a boy, I worked in a store. And the boss explained to me that any fool could sell a customer something the customer wanted, but that it took a salesman to sell a person something the person did not want.

I am older now. And my years of painfully acquired experience, together with a habit of observation, have taught me that the one who sells a person that which the person does not want is the real fool.

In my young man days I had a friend who had a curious complex. He would rather acquire a silver dollar for which he gave nothing, than to gain a five dollar bill for which he had rendered five dollars' worth of service. He seemed to feel that to give nothing for something was a mark of superior intelligence. He was never so happy and proud as when he had just, as he said, "gyped" somebody.

Well, I have watched that man's progress through all the best years of his life and I never knew the time when he was not dependent, in one way or another, upon friends or relatives. He is practically a beggar today, existing on charity. No one will trust him for a meal. He is forced to sponge even his cigarettes. All of which would be torture to a self-respecting person; but, of course, self-respect long ago ceased to count for anything in this miserable failure.

And this man was the most convincing booster I ever heard. To him boosting was a fine art. He could, would, and did boost anything for anybody, at any time.

Of course it was often best for him to be somewhere else when the sticks of his skyrocketers began to come down! All his life, you see, this man has tried to do business on the plan of talking people into giving something for nothing. In the end he has for all his efforts—nothing.

Some say that a knock is a boost. Perhaps—but I am still of the opinion that if we could knock some of these reckless, unprincipled, shameless nineteen twenty-eight variety of boosters dead, we would all do a better business.

MRS. KATE SULLIVAN TAKES HER OWN LIFE

Mrs. Kate Sullivan, wife of T. H. Sullivan, living 13 miles north east of Hedley, died Saturday night of a self-inflicted pistol wound. Justice of the Peace Frank Kendall held an inquest, the verdict being suicide while suffering from temporary insanity. She is survived by her husband, one daughter and five sons.

Mrs. Sullivan was found dead in the kitchen after the family in an adjoining bedroom, having reported for the night, heard the report of a pistol. A 38 calibre revolver was found beside the body, a bullet from which had penetrated her heart.

Mrs. Sullivan spent the day in Hedley making purchases for a Thanksgiving dinner to which all members of the Sullivan family were to have been invited. She seemed in her usual good spirits at that time.

Funeral services were held at the First Christian church in Hedley, Tuesday afternoon, and the remains were interred in Rowe cemetery. We sympathize deeply with the bereaved family in this time of sorrow.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

"Growing pains" of youth continue right on through life; you always have pains of some kind.

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855 1/2 Wolf St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

A Doctor Talks About Cascara

It is unfortunate that many people judge the thoroughness of a laxative by its violence. The salts that rush through the system may not even penetrate the film of poisonous matter that has coated the colon. A long list of drugs will "loosen the bowels" but what is the best way to CLEANSE them?

The world's best laxative is one that Mother Nature makes in her own laboratory. It is the bark of a tree, called CASCARA. The Indians used to chew this bark—and reach old age without a sick day. It is the best thing there is today, for any system; best for the blood. The most beneficial in its action on the bowels, of anything yet disclosed. For many reasons:

Mother Tells How Milk Emulsion Saved Her Son's Life

"In November, 1918, I wrote you in reference to my son's condition at that time. He had just gotten over the flu and double pneumonia and it looked as if he would never be a well boy again. His lungs were very weak and he had an awful cough. We thought he was going into consumption. He had pneumonia four times. This had taken all of his vitality and left his lungs in a very bad shape.

"I saw Milk Emulsion advertised in the Birmingham News, got a large bottle and gave it to my son. It did him so much good that I kept on giving him Milk Emulsion until he had taken 125 bottles and now I am very proud to tell you that my boy is a well, strong young man, 15 years old, and in excellent health. I give Milk Emulsion the credit and praise for having saved his life.

The Settling of the Sage

CHAPTER I.

A rider jogged northward along the road on a big pinto horse, a red buckskin, packed, tralling a half-length behind. A ranch road branched off to the left and the man pulled up his horse to view a sign that stood at the forks.

"Squatter, don't let the sun go down on you," he read. "That's the third one of those reminders, Calico," he told the horse. "The wording a little different but the sentiment all the same."

Fifty yards off the trail the charred and blackened fragments of a wagon showed in sharp contrast to the bleached white bones of two horses.

"They downed his team and torched his worldly goods," the rider said. "All his hopes gone up in smoke."

He turned in his saddle and looked off across the unending expanse of sage. "Coldriver"—probably so named from the fact that the three wells in the town constituted the only source of water within an hour's ride—lay thirty miles to the south, a cluster of some forty buildings nestling on a wind-swept flat. Seventy miles beyond it, and with but two more such centers of civilization between, the railroad stretched across the rolling desolation.

The man took one more look at the evidence left behind to prove that the sign was no empty threat before heading the pinto-horse along the left hand fork. He noted that the range-cows along his route were poor and lean, their hip bones showing lumpily through sagging skin, giving them the appearance of milkers rather than beef stock. The preceding summer had been hot and dry, browning the range six weeks before its time, and the stock had gone into the winter in poor shape. Heavy snowfalls had completed the havoc and 10 per cent of the range stock had been winter-killed. Those that had pulled through were slow in putting on weight and recovering their strength.

A big red steer stood broadside to him, the Three Bar brand looming on its side, and the man once more pulled up his horse and lost himself in retrospection as he gazed at the brand.

"The old Three Bar, Calico," he remarked to the horse. "The old home brand. It's been many a moon since last I laid an eye on a Three Bar cow."

The man was gazing directly at the steer but he no longer saw it. Instead he was picturing the old-time scenes that the sight of the brand recalled. Step by step he envisioned the long trail of the Three Bar cows from Dodge City to the Platte, from the Platte to the rolling sage-clad hills round old Fort Laramie and from Laramie to the present range.

His mind pictured two boys, of some where round eighteen years of age settling forth from the little home town of Kansas City, nestling at the confluence of the Missouri and the Kaw a year later Cal Warren was whack tag bulls on the Santa Fe trail while the other, William Jarris, was holding the reins over four plunging horses as he toiled a lumbering Concord stage over the trail from Omaha to the little camp called Denver.

It was five years before their trails crossed again. Cal Warren was the first of the two to wed, and he had established a post along the trail, a rambling structure of 'dobe, poles and sod, and there conducted the business of "Two for One," calling impossible and unknown in any other than that day and place.

The long bull trains were in sight from horizon to horizon every hour of the day. The grind of the gravel wore down the hoofs of the unshod oxen and when footsore they could not go on. One sound bull for two with tender feet was Warren's rule of trade. These crippled ones were soon made sound in the puddle pen, a sod corral flooded with sufficient water to puddle the yellow clay into a six-inch layer of stiff, healing mud, then thrown out on the open range to fatten and grow strong. But transitions were swift and sweeping. Steel rails were crowding close behind the prairie schooners and the ox-hows. Bull trains grew fewer every year and eventually Cal Warren made his last trade of two for one.

Bill Harris had come back to view the railroad of which he had heard so much and he remained to witness and to be a part of the wild days of Abilene, Hays and Dodge, as each attained the apex of its glory as the railroad's end and the consequent destination of the Texas trail herds. The sight of these droves of thousands implanted a desire to run cows himself and when he was wed in Dodge he broached this project to his boy hood pal.

It was the sincere wish of each to gain the other as a partner in all future enterprise, but this was not to be. Warren had seen the bottom drop out of the bull trade and he would not relinquish the suspicion that any business dealing in four-footed stock was hazardous in the extreme and he insisted that the solution of all their financial problems rested upon owning land, not cows. Harris could not be induced to farm the soil while steers were selling round eight dollars a head.

Warren squatted on a quarter of land. Harris bought a few head of she-stock and grazed his cows north and west across the Kansas line into the edge of the great unknown that was styled Nebraska and Northwest district. At first his range was limitless, but in a few short years he could stand on the roof of his sod hut and see the white points of light which were squatters' wagons dotting the range to the far horizon in any direction he chose to look. The first of these to invade his range had been Cal Warren, moving on before the swarm of settlers flocking into the locality of his first choice. In such alarming numbers that he feared an unhealthy congestion of humanity in the near future. The debate of farming versus cows was resumed between the two, but each held doggedly to his own particular views and the longed-for partnership was again postponed.

Harris moved once more—and then again—and it was something over two decades after his departure from Dodge with the Three Bar cows that he made one final shift, faring on in search of that land where nesters were unknown. He made a dry march that cost him a fourth of his cows, skirted the Colorado desert and made his stand under the first rim of the hills. Those others who came to share this range were men whose views were identical with his own, whose watch word was: "Our cows shall run free on a thousand hills." They sought for a spot where the range was untouched by the plow and the water holes unfenced. They had moved, then moved, again, driven on before the invasion of the settlers. These men banded together and swore that here conditions should be reversed, that it was the squatter who should move, and on this principle they grimly rested.

Cal Warren had been the vanguard of each new rush of settlers that had pushed Bill Harris on to another range, and the cowboy had come to see the hand of fate in this persistence. When the Warren family found him again and halted their white-topped wagon before his door, Bill Harris gave it up.

"I've come to see about getting that partnership fixed up, Bill," Warren greeted. "You know—the one we talked over in Dodge a while ago, about our going in together when either of us changed his mind. Well, I've changed mine. I've come to see that running cows is a good game. Bill, so let's fix it up. I've changed my mind."

"That was twenty years ago, Cal," Harris said. "But it still holds good—only I've changed my mind, too. You was dead right from the first. Squatters will come to roost on every foot of ground and there'll come a day when I'll have to turn squatter myself—so I might as well start now. The way to get used to crowds, Cal, is to go where the crowds are at. I'm headed back for Kansas and you better come along. We'll get that partnership fixed up."

A single child had come to bless each union in the parents' late middle age. The Harris heir, a boy of eight, had been named Calvin in honor of his father's friend, Cal Warren had as nearly returned the compliment as circumstances would permit, and his three-year-old daughter bore the name of Williamette Ann for both father and mother of the boy who was his namesake, and Warren styled her Billie for short.

Each man was as stubbornly set in his new views as he had been in the old. The Harrises came into possession of the Warren's prairie schooner and drove off to the east. The Warrens took over the Three Bar ranch and the little Williamette Ann slept in the tiny bunk built for the son of the Harris household.

For a space of minutes the old pictures occupied the mind of the man on the pinto horse. Distant strings of prairie schooners and ox-hows faded from his mind's eye and he was once more conscious of the red steer with the Three Bar brand that had stirred up the train of reflections. He turned for another glimpse of the distant sign as he headed the pinto-horse along the road.

"All that was quite a spell back, Calico," he said. "Old Bill Harris planted the first one of those signs, and it served a good purpose then. It's a sign that stands for lack of progress today. Times change, and it's been eighteen years or so since old Bill Harris left."

The road traversed the bench, angled down a side hill to a valley somewhat more than a mile across. Calico pricked up his ears sharply toward the Three Bar buildings that stood at the upper end of it.

Curious eyes peered from the bunk house as he neared it, for the pinto-horse and the buckskin were not with out fame even if the man himself were a stranger to them all. For the better part of a year the two high-colored horses had been seen on the range—south to the railroad, west to the Idaho line. The man had kept to himself and when seen by approaching riders he had always been angling on a course that would miss their own. Those who had, out of curiosity, deliberately ridden out to intercept him reported that he seemed a decent sort of citizen, willing to converse on any known topics except those concerning him self.

He dropped from the saddle before the bunk house and as he stood in the door he noted half a dozen men lounging on the benches. This indulgence apprised him of the fact that they were extra men signed on for the summer season and that their pay had not yet started, for the cowhand, when on the pay roll, works sixteen hours daily and when he rests or frolics it is, except in rare instances, on his own time and at his own expense.

A tall, lean individual, who sat cross-legged on a bunk, engaged in mending a spur strap, was the first to answer his inquiry for the foreman.

"Billie Warren is the big he-cow of the Three Bar," he informed. "You'll likely find the boss at the blacksmith shop." The lanky one grinned as the stranger turned back through the litter of log outbuildings, guided by the hissing squeak of bellows and the clang of a sledge on hot iron. Several men pressed close to the windows in anticipation of viewing the new comer's surprise at greeting, the Three Bar boss. But the man did not seem surprised when a young girl emerged from the open door of the 'shop as he neared it.

She was clad in a gray flannel skirt and black angora chaps. The heavy brown hair was concealed beneath the broad hat that was pulled low over her eyes after the fashion of those who live much in the open. The man removed his hat and stood before her.

"Miss Warren?" he inquired. The girl nodded and waited for him to state his purpose.

"What are the chances of my riding for the Three Bar?" he asked.

"We're full handed," said the girl. "I'm sorry."

"You'll be breaking out the remuda right soon now," she suggested. "I'm real handy round a breaking corral." "They're all handy at that," she said. Then she noted the two horses before the bunk house and frowned. Her eyes searched the stranger's face and found no fault with it; she liked his level gaze. But she wondered what manner of aunt this was who had so aimlessly wandered alone for a year and avoided all other men.

"Since you've finally decided to work, how does it happen that you choose the Three Bar?" she asked, then flushed under his eyes as she remembered that so many men had wished to ride for her brand more than for another, their reasons in each case the same.

Chairman Didn't Quite Get Idea of Lecture

Being a Scot, and therefore a sentimentalist, I have always had an appreciative eye for good-looking women.

As a consequence of many wanderings I thought I could give a lecture about the ladies of many lands. I gathered a lot of pretty photographs—ladies walking in Hyde park, dusky maidens dancing in the South Sea Islands, and that kind of thing—and wrote a cheery lecture. "Sovereign Woman: Being the Impression of a Man in Thirty-eight Countries." It went well.

I delivered it in a Surrey residential town. My chairman, who had entertained me ardently at dinner, said the customary things a chairman is expected to say—information culled from "Who's Who"—and concluded by remarking, "Now I will call upon our lecturer to give you his experiences with 38 women in different countries!" The audience roared. I blushed. The chairman inquired in a loud whisper, "Have I said anything wrong?"—Sir John Foster Fraser in London Graphic.

SMART EVENING ENSEMBLES; BACK OF COAT IS IMPORTANT

THERE was a time when it took considerable courage to wear red. Of course that was in those dull days when the fashionable world did not feel the keen urge for color which it does in this age of modernistic trends. Today it takes courage not to wear red, for red is an outstanding choice of the mode. Various tones of this color are now generally adopted for millinery, for frocks, for coats, for thought that, if they take care of the back view, the front view will take care of itself. Rather good logic this, for what with the lavishness of deeply revered collars of fur and other luxurious furring, there's no doubt as to the charm of the coat viewed from the front. To make it an all-around proposition is the problem which is causing designers to work imagination to the straining point. However, it has be-sweaters and for all sorts of accessories from handbags to shoes.

Especially is red playing a radiant role in the evening mode. Most every formal occasion is glorified with costumes of exquisite transparent red velvet, or perhaps of chiffon in a rich Castilian red, or that which is all rich—wine-colored malines. An evening ensemble which stresses the enchantment of red is shown in this picture.

By the way, to be ultra-smart one's dinner and opera costumes must carry out the ensemble idea, not so much in the spirit of matching fabrics as to employing identical color for both wrap and gown. The dress shown here is designed with a draped-to-one-side scalloped neckline. The coat is of red velvet, the same tone as the dress, but lined with a deeper shade. The new round collar and cuffs of blue fox add to the effectiveness of the ensemble.

Red for evening is especially interesting in lace dinner frocks. Topped with a red-toned velvet coat the ensemble is most beguiling.

The dance gown of deep wine malines is another of fashion's favorites this season. No matter how immediate an incentive to give fabric manipulation an impetus to achieve through unusual seamings and tuckings most gratifying results.

Many of the modish tweed and other novelty woollens coats boast tucks down the back as you see in the garments to the left in the picture. In this instance the same sort of tucking is repeated on the deep cavalier cuffs and the huge patch pockets.

Inserts of a contrasting material also achieve interesting patternings. This method was effectively employed in the styling of the black broadcloth coat to the right. Strips of heavy black satin are so inserted as to form a modernistic design. In just as many instances a reverse of the cloth is used in place of a different fabric. This coat also typifies a new trend—that of trimming black broadcloth with sumptuous light fur.

Returning to the subject of back views, not only coats make this out-standing but frocks as well. The desired effects are sometimes attained by capelets and half-capelets, or scarf ends are frequently brought to the back and tied. When collars are high progreivly bouffant and generously tiered the skirt may be, the bodice is usually very simple and extremely decollete. To climax its charm, the red malines frock takes into itself a sleeveless or sleeved tulle or maline cocktail jacket as fashion so terms it. This charming little fantasy is apt to be very much bespangled with sequins in accurately matched coloring—which goes to show what alluring themes have entered the midwinter evening picture.

In creating cloth coats fashionists now seem to be inspired with the

WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES

In the morning services Sunday we had a number of visitors. They are welcome at all times.

Although the attendance in the B. Y. P. U. was not as great as we like, it was an improvement. Definite plans have been made toward increased interest and attendance.

The Ladies' Auxiliary was hostess at a "fish pond" entertainment Monday afternoon. The tasteful manner in which the basement was decorated transformed it into a cozy living room. The members and visitors were entertained with a short program. Then came the fun of fishing for a gift! Surprises and thrills that equal those of childhood! As soon as the excitement lulled, refreshments of sandwiches, pickles, cranberry jelly, pie and coffee were served.

The new Ford has a very simple and effective
lubrication system

THE lubrication system for the engine of the new Ford is as simple in principle as water running down-hill.

A gear pump in the bottom of the oil pan raises the oil to the valve chamber reservoir. From here it flows on to the main crankshaft bearings and the front camshaft bearing. Overflow oil drops into the oil pan tray and runs into troughs through which the connecting rods pass.

As the ends of these rods strike the oil they scoop up a supply for the connecting rod bearing. At the same time they set up a fine spray that lubricates the pistons and other moving parts.

From the tray the oil runs into the bottom of the pan, and is again drawn up through a fine mesh screen and pumped to the valve chamber.

This system is so effective that the five-quart contents of the oil pan pass through the pump twice in every mile when you are traveling at only 30 miles an hour. Yet there is only one movable part—the oil pump.

As a matter of fact, the lubrication system for the new Ford is so simple in design and so carefully made that it requires practically no service attention.

There is just one thing for you to do, but it is a very important thing... watch the oil! Change the oil every 500 miles and be sure the indicator rod never registers below low (L).

If the oil level is allowed to fall below low, the supply becomes insufficient to oil all parts as they should be oiled.

To insure best performance it is also advisable to have the chassis of your car lubricated every 500 miles. This has been made easy in the new Ford through the use of the high pressure grease gun system.

Proper oiling and greasing mean so much to the life of your car that they should not be neglected or carelessly done.

See your Ford dealer regularly. He is especially well fitted to lubricate the new Ford and he will do a good, thorough job at a fair price.

But words are things, A small drop of ink, Falling like dew upon a thought, Produces that which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think. —Byron.

COLD MEATS

There are numberless tasty dishes that may be prepared with a small amount of nicely cooked and seasoned meat. Ham lends itself to a variety of good things. Its flavor is so well liked. Meat balls of chopped veal, which is rather tasteless of itself, with the addition of a little chopped ham, made into balls, wrapped in a strip of bacon and baked, makes a most delicious meat dish.

Mutton on Toast—Underdone mutton, cut into neat slices or rounds and reheated in butter with salt and Worcestershire sauce—a tablespoonful will be ample. Place a piece of the mutton on hot, well buttered toast and serve hot. The mutton and sauce may be placed on the toast and baked in the oven.

Barbecued Lamb—Cut cold roast lamb into thin slices and reheat in a sauce made by melting two tablespoonfuls of butter; add three-fourths of a tablespoonful of vinegar, one-fourth cupful of currant jelly, one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard and salt and cayenne to taste.

Creamed Chicken With Mushrooms.—Cut up bits of leftover chicken. Sauté in butter a handful of mushrooms, add both to a rich white sauce. Let stand over hot water until ready to serve on well buttered rounds of toast.

Mock Terrapin—Take one and one-half cupfuls of chicken or chicken and veal of equal amount add to one cupful of white sauce with two hard cooked eggs finely chopped, and salt and cayenne and cook two minutes add a spoonful of currant jelly and serve hot.

Salmi of Duck—Reheat cold roast duck in the following sauce:
Spanish Sauce.—Melt one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add one tablespoonful of finely chopped onion, a stalk of celery, two slices of carrot, and two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped lean uncooked ham. Cook until the butter is brown, then add one-fourth cupful of flour and when well browned, two cupfuls of stock, a bit of bay leaf sprig of parsley, blade of mace, two cloves, one-half teaspoonful of salt bit of pepper; cook five minutes. Strain, add the duck, a few mushrooms and stoned olives cut into bits, with a tablespoonful of melted currant jelly.

Variety in Diet.
For the housemother who has many mouths to feed and a very limited purchasing capacity, there is some excuse for sameness in diet. These are the ones who should have a good knowledge of all food properties and be able with little money to furnish food that is nourishing and wholesome.

If we may pardon an overworked mother for her lack of interest, what justification has the woman of means and leisure in slighting so important a subject? It is sad but too true that thousands of undernourished, listless and unhappy children come from homes of means. Homes where the mother is too indifferent to take the trouble to find out why her child is not right physically or up to grade in school.

With our school nurse and supervision there is still hope that this lack of realizing the importance of keeping up a child's weight to normal, giving it the right kind of food, seeing that it has proper sleep and fresh air at all times, will in a few generations be overcome.

It is unwise as well as unnecessary to serve many varieties of foods in one meal. Often two, well prepared, will satisfy and be much better digested than three or four which even in small quantities often disagree in the digestive tract.

Cornish Pasty—This is such a good dish for a large family, is so appetizing as well as nourishing that mothers of large families should serve it often. A pound of round steak with plenty of suet—one-fourth pound will be sufficient. Cut it into half-inch pieces and after lining a large pie plate with a rich biscuit dough, add the meat and season with salt and pepper, then add a layer of finely shredded onions, a layer of parboiled turnip, then a layer of sliced potatoes, adding plenty of seasonings. Cover with the biscuit dough, make a vent, add a tablespoonful of water and bake for two hours. Cover with a cloth and steam ten minutes before serving.

A small amount of meat taken from that part of the animal which is most exercised, will with plenty of vegetables season a large dish of food. Meat from the chuck, the leg, the neck, when cut, rolled in seasoned flour, browned in fat, then simmered in a small amount of water, adding more occasionally, with plenty of such vegetables as carrot, turnip, cabbage, onions and potato—two of a kind is plenty; this will serve a satisfying meal to young and old.

Letters "Relayed" in Early Colonial Days

In the English colonies in America before 1839 such postal facilities as existed were supplied by private enterprise. In 1839 the General court of Massachusetts took the first step toward the establishment of a government postal system. In Virginia each planter was required to convey the dispatches, as they arrived, to the next plantation, and so on. In 1672 the government of New York established a monthly mail to Boston, and this practice was followed in other colonies. Benjamin Franklin was identified with the early interests of the colonial post office. In 1737 he was appointed postmaster of Philadelphia. In 1753 the delivery of letters by penny post was begun. In 1775 the colonies combined to establish their own post office and to pay the necessary officials. The Continental congress appointed a committee to devise a postal system, which went into effect July 26, 1775. Benjamin Franklin was unanimously appointed postmaster general.

Cutting Critique.

Robert Saint-Hubert, professor of painting at the Fontainebleau school, was shown over a very blatant new apartment house the other day by its owner, a New York builder. "Yes," the man said, at the end of the visit of inspection, "I guess there ain't an apartment house like this in the world. Twenty-four stories, 7 elevators, 3,000 rooms, 800 bathrooms, and best of all—here he paused impressively—"best of all, sir, the place is fireproof, absolutely fireproof, throughout."

"Oh, what a pity!" said Mr. Saint-Hubert.

Jazz Has a Place.
Nothing has done so much good for music in its way, says an authority on music in the Woman's Home Companion, as good jazz because it has stirred up a rhythmic vitality and removed a cloying sentimentality which threatened to enshroud music at the end of the last century.

THANKSGIVING

This is Thanksgiving week. What have we found for which to be thankful?

"For skies of blue above the grey,
 For strength to live from day to day,
 Lord, we thank Thee.

"For a bird that sang at early morn,
 For a smile that changed a glance of scorn,
 Father, we thank thee.

"For the little good that we may do
 To help some lonely fellow through
 And cause him, too, to thank Thee.

"That we can worship at Thy feet,
 In love that makes our lives complete,
 For this we thank Thee.

"For a garden in which Christ wept until He cried in anguish, 'Lord, Thy will'
 We thank Thee.

"For Life triumphant o'er the grave,
 To know that He alone can save—
 We ever, Lord, must thank Thee.

OPPOSES LEAVING LITTLE TOWNS OFF HIGHWAY

From Dallas News:

That was a highly commendable act on the part of the State Highway Commission, in my opinion, changing back the location of Highway No. 6 through Red Oak and Sterrett, in Ellis county, to connect at Lancaster, in Dallas county, and shows sane action generally follows where the people rise up in protest.

I have been over the Red Oak-Sterrett route, and know the road can be built there in one-third less time and at less than half the cost. By using the rock base and asphalt surfacing, the cost should be only about one-fourth of the $200,000 at first appropriated; and Ellis county is to pay one-third.

Then Red Oak-Sterrett, being a 7 per cent designated road, approved by both State and Federal road boards, had the first call.
 Some roads have to be finished first, and then new ones can be taken up rapidly. Too much spreading out gets us nowhere, or, rather, no roads.

As for changing the roads thru Mesquite to miss the town 14 miles, am not sufficiently posted to discuss, yet I am positively opposed, as a general proposition, to changing routes to the extent of leaving off present towns.

Large cities do not make so much difference, but it is financial ruin for many in the smaller towns, and as has been aptly said:
 Roads should not be built for benefit of the tourists alone. The citizens were here first, have their all invested in many instances, and should be given due consideration. This may be old fashioned, but I am just that.

Waco is more than a mile away for all tourists coming from the north, and it makes little difference, yet if you leave off a small town, like Lorena, for instance, you practically harm the business interests of the entire town as much as if you took the railroad away from them.
