CHRISTMAS WITH THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME

One of the greatest joys of the Christmas season is the home coming of the young folks who have been away at school or at work, or who have found it expedient to move away from the old home town. It wouldn't be enjoyed by the "old folks" if the "children" should be unable to get home for Christmas.

Lots of them are here—too many for us to attempt to name them—and we are truly glad to see them.

Here's wishing every one of you—"old folks" and "children"—the happiest Christmas of your lives.

Our Christmas trade has been good, and we thank our customers for their patronage.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Hoover Asks Congress for $150,000,000 to Provide Work for Unemployed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONGRESS, in its short session, was asked by President Hoover on Tuesday to appropriate from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 for the acceleration of public works construction in order to provide employment for men out of work. It was asked also to make this emergency fund distributable upon recommendation of a cabinet committee approved by the President. With that amount available, the President said it would be possible to expend a total of $650,000,000 upon construction of all kinds in the next 12 months.

"Our immediate problem," said the message "is the increase of employment for the next six months, and new plans which do not produce such immediate results, or which extend commitments beyond this period, are not warranted."

The President also urged that an appropriation be made to the Department of Agriculture to be loaned to farmers for the purpose of buying seed and feed for animals. He said congress should complete legislation, already started, in respect to Muscle Shoals, bus regulation, relief of congestion in the courts, reorganization of the border patrol in prevention of smuggling, and law enforcement in the District of Columbia. He said there was need of revision of the immigration laws and that the deportation laws should be strengthened.

Surveying the finances of the country, Mr. Hoover more than intimated the income tax reduction could not be continued in 1930 incomes. The estimated treasury deficit for the present fiscal year is about $180,000,000, and he declared that "most rigid economy is necessary to avoid increase in taxes."

NEXT day President Hoover sent in his annual budget message, in which he warned congress not to undertake any expansion of governmental expenditures other than those required under the proposed unemployment and drought relief programs, and said he regretted he could not recommend a continuance of the income tax reduction. The budget he submitted provides for total expenditures of $4,054,519,200 for the fiscal year 1932, exclusive of postal expenditures paid from postal revenues, as compared with estimated expenditures of $4,014,941,900 in the fiscal year 1931 and actual expenditures of $3,994,182,487 in the fiscal year 1930. To the senate the President submitted the World Court protocols, as he had promised, together with a message urging American ratification. There were indications that the question would not reach final settlement this winter.

Nominations sent to the senate included the name of William N. Doak of Virginia to be secretary of labor in place of James J. Davis; George Otis Smith and Frank R. McNinch as members of the power commission, and a long list of recess nominations made during the summer.

Senator Nye, chairman of the campaign fund investigation committee, believed he had uncovered large unreported expenditures in behalf of the Davis-Brown ticket in Pennsylvania, so he asked the senate to defer the swearing in of Jim Davis as senator. This would continue to occupy the seat, and many senators don't like him, so they voted 58 to 27 to seat Davis. On Wednesday both Davis and Dwight W. Morrow took the oath, and the senate was then complete, with 53 Republicans, 42 Democrats and 1 Farmer-Laborite.

IN HIS message on the state of the Union the President said nothing about prohibition, but in the budget message he made it clear the administration intended to continue its policy of vigorous enforcement of the dry laws. He recommended an increase of more than three million dollars in the funds allotted to the prohibition and industrial alcohol bureaus.

This was highly pleasing to the dry members of congress, but it only stirred the wets to more energetic plans for attack on prohibition. These latter decided to try to knock out the bureau of prohibition increase, which Director Woodcock intends to use in employing about five hundred new enforcement agents. The wet leaders also resolved to make a fight on alcohol poisoning and for a vote on a beer modification bill. Senator Blingham and Representative Goss, both of Connecticut, already had introduced a 4 per cent beer and medicinal liquor bills.

SENATOR TASKER L. ODDIE of Nevada has introduced a bill that will have considerable support in congress, even if it does not pass. It is designed to bar the entrance of products from Soviet Russia into the United States, especially lumber, pulp wood, wood pulp, matches, glue, coal, manganese ore, etc., which have allegedly been dumped into this country at prices below the cost of production here.

OVERPRODUCTION is the chief threat against American agriculture today, and if the farmers would avoid ruin they must all unite to curb it. So declared Secretary of Agriculture Hyde in his yearly report. He said:

"I want to emphasize the need for equitable, intelligent, systematic and collective action to bring supply into better relationship with demand."

Citing the particular overabundance of wheat, the agriculture secretary said producers of that grain could expect federal help only if they made a practical approach to the task of combining to adjust output to needs.

Lower farm incomes from the production of 1930 as compared with the previous year were predicted by the cabinet officer. He estimated the aggregate gross income from 1930 crops at about $9,650,000,000, or about 16 per cent less than in 1929. He attributed the current slump in agricultural prices to continued overproduction and "the worldwide business depression," resulting in lessened demand.

ESTIMATES put out by the American Federation of Labor set the number of American laboring men out of work in November at 4,800,000. President William Green predicted that at the present rate of increase the jobless would number 7,000,000 by February. Neither figure covered office workers or farm laborers out of employment.

It was announced in New York that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., had made a joint contribution of $1,000,000 to the local emergency employment committee's fund for the unemployed. This was a handsome gift, but not anywhere near so large, proportionately, as the contribution of any one of many thousands of citizens to the same cause.

"JIMMY," a little black Aberdeen Angus bred by J. F. McKenny of King City, Mo., was declared the grand champion steer at the International Live Stock show in Chicago. He was sold at auction, bringing only $2.50 a pound. Herman Treble, bringing a sample of hard red spring wheat which he grew at Wembley, Alberta, 1,200 miles north of Chicago, was crowned wheat champion; and Herbert C. Watson of Tipton, Ind., won the national corn championship. Purdue, the University of Illinois and Iowa State college took most of the blue ribbons for sheep and swine. Collynie Clipper Star, a Shorthorn bull owned by F. W. Hubbell of Des Moines which has been winning first prizes all his life, took the senior and grand champion ribbons in its class. Fourteen hundred boys and girls of the 4-H club were guests of the exposition and special awards were given 482 of them for their agricultural achievements. A team from Oklahoma A. and M. college won the trophy for the best live stock judging, outscoring twenty-two other college teams. The intercollegiate meat judging contest was won by a team of students from the University of Missouri. Individual honors in this event went to Miss Eva Buel of Nebraska university.

SCOTLAND'S coal miners all went on strike against the application of the "spread-over" hours arrangement, but the English miners voted 250,000 to 200,000 to reject a proposal for a general strike. The vote represented a triumph for Prime Minister MacDonald and members of the cabinet, who had sat with the delegates' conference for hours, urging all efforts for settlement of the difficulties with the mine operators, including, if necessary, indorsement of the spreadover.

GOVERNMENT agents in Portugal uncovered a big conspiracy to bring on a revolution, part of the plan being to blow up public buildings in Lisbon. The police arrested a number of alleged conspirators and found more than 600 bombs in the homes of some of them. The plotters already were distributing bombs to extremists in taxicabs and motor trucks. Politicians of the Republican-Democratic party and several army officers are involved.

OFFICIAL announcement was made in Rome of the arrest by the Ovr, the Fascist secret police, of about thirty men accused of conspiring against the Fascist regime, and the prisoners are said to have confessed their guilt. Some of the culprits are intellectuals and others are just Communists.

GERMANY has caused uneasiness throughout Europe by a protest to the League of Nations over the alleged terrorism against German minorities in Polish Silesia. The accusations made by Foreign Minister Curtius are serious and it is evident the German government intends to force an examination of the matter by the League's council during the meeting which opens January 19. The situation is made more grave by France's attitude, inasmuch as the Paris government is pledged to defend the integrity of Poland with the same determination as the Rhine, and military action between Germany and Poland ipso facto would draw French armed intervention against Germany.

Learning that the German Fascists were organizing a frontier force to resist "Polish aggression," the police raided the castle of a baron near the Polish border, arrested 350 Fascists all fully armed and in uniform and seized three truck loads of arms and munitions. On neighboring estates were found large caches of rifles, ammunition, barbed wire and other materials of war.

PREMIER TARDIEU of France, who had resisted the attacks of his opponents for months, finally was defeated Thursday when the senate passed a vote of non-confidence, 147 to 139. Of course Tardieu and his cabinet resigned, and the result was described as the most serious governmental crisis in many years. One of the chief factors in the downfall of Tardieu was the fact that several members of his cabinet were involved in a huge financial scandal, the failure of Alfred Oustric. He also was accused of trying to make himself a dictator.

MISSING for several days and given up for lost after she started a flight from Havana to Miami, Mrs. J. M. Keith-Miller of Australia turned up safe and sound on one of the Andros Islands of the Bahama group. She had been driven far out of her course by a gale and made a forced landing on the islet when her gas gave out. A fishing boat took her to Nassau. She planned to return for her plane and fly to Miami.

ONE definite decision has been made by the Indian round table conference in London. It is that Burma is to be separated from India and set up as a dominion of the British empire at the earliest possible date. Burma has a population of about 13,250,000. Its capital is Rangoon.

Felix' Opinion at Home

Historic Christmas Days

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

The Greatest Hero

The soldier named by Gen. John J. Pershing as the greatest individual hero of the World war earned a Congressional Medal and a bucketful of other decorations without suffering a scratch—but when he started to march into Germany after the fighting was ended, he broke his leg!

Lieut. Samuel Woodfill, Sixtieth Infantry, was the soldier. His special feat of glory was the annihilation of something like 19, (or was it 22?) of the enemy. Also, the destruction of a series of machine gun nests in that busy sector of the Argonne north of Nantillois.

Old Sam Woodfill's company helped relieve the Eightieth division, early one foggy morning in October and, without any artillery assistance whatever, launched an attack.

Anyway, old Sam Woodfill seemed to realize the entire job was up to him. So, whether the total was 19 or 22, it is definitely known he got the last three of his kill with a pick-ax when he jumped into their emplacement and found that his pistol would only snap futilely, which wasn't surprising, since he'd emptied all his clips long ago.

They made Woodfill a captain, over in the Sixtieth. He was in charge of a company when the post-Armistice march toward Germany began. "Not a scratch on him," Woodfill's a lucky guy," the doughboys said.

The first time the regiment pitched camp, Woodfill, who came into the army an enlisted man and went out the same way, challenged one of his soldiers to a wrestling bout. And just as we told you in the beginning, the hero who won a Congressional Medal without so much as a scratch, promptly fractured a leg.

The First American Killed

The first American citizen killed in the World war lost his life on February 27, 1915, more than two years before this country formally entered the conflict. He was Edward Mandell Stone, a native of Chicago, who was twenty-seven years old at the time of his death.

Stone's sacrifice is remembered. Each year his death is the inspiration for two separate ceremonies. The date of his passing, February 27, has been designated as the time when the Association of American Volunteers With the French Army, 1914-1917, each year reanimates the Eternal Flame on the tomb of France's Unknown Soldier at the Arc de Triomphe.

On Memorial day every year the American Legion directs a rite at the grave of Stone in the cemetery of Romilly-sur-Seine. One of the interesting features of this latter ceremony is that the French woman who, as volunteer nurse, wrote the last letter for Stone and was beside him when he died, is a participant. She is now schoolmistress of the school in La Villeneuve-au-Chatelet.

Stone lived in Paris and was in the American diplomatic service when the World war began. He enlisted in the French Foreign Legion, August 24, 1914, with the first group of American citizens.

Less than six months later—on February 15, 1915, while serving as a private in Battalion B, Second Regiment of the Foreign Legion, he was wounded so severely he died 12 days later.

Stone was in the trenches near Craonne in the Aisne when wounded. He "went west" in the military hospital at Romilly-sur-Seine. The first American citizen to die received, posthumously, both the Croix de Guerre and Medaille Militaire.

The Cited Captives

As a tonic for morale which sometimes needed stiffening the German "all highest" adopted a policy of praise for certain Austrian divisions on the Western Front.

Among papers seized by Americans from an Austrian regimental p. c. near the end of the war was a German corps order which highly praised the First Austrian division. The document mentioned especially the hero and wonderful work against the Yankees by the Fifth Austrian regiment of infantry.

A short time later, the order was sent to the front to be read to troops of the Fifth Austrian infantry. And on this occasion even the youngest Austrian private of the rear ranks roared with laughter—for the document was read to them by an American captain as they loafed in an American prison pen. The entire Fifth regiment, including 500 men and officers, had been captured by the Yanks.

Several days later a message was dropped from an American airplane for the German high command. It contained the reassuring information that members of the Fifth Austrian infantry would continue their good work—mainly in building roads and in other construction to which prisoners of war were commonly assigned.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AS THE time draws nearer for the observance in 1932 of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, it is worthy of comment that the man, who is to be honored in a nation-wide celebration only a little more than a year hence, was the central figure in two of the most historic Christmas days in all American history.

One of them was in 1776 and the story of it is so familiar to all Americans that it needs retelling here only in the barest outline—how on Christmas eve Washington took supper at General Greene's headquarters and there perfected his plans for crossing the Delaware river the next day and attacking the British outpost at Trenton, N. J., held by a force of approximately 1,000 Hessians under the command of Colonel Rall, because he believed that these Germans, busy with their Christmas feasting and merrymaking, would fall easy victims to a surprise attack.

The crossing of the river began at six o'clock Christmas evening. Washington planned to have his entire army on the Jersey shore by midnight and begin the march to Trenton by one o'clock so that he could attack the Hessians just before dawn. But the ice-filled river threatened to upset all his plans and some of his officers were for calling off the expedition entirely. Washington, however, resolved to carry it through and although the crossing took no less than ten hours, it was finally accomplished and four o'clock in the morning found his army drawn up on the New Jersey side ready for the seven-mile march to Trenton.

So away they went, with sleet and snow beating upon their backs, and leaving bloody footprints in the snow as they marched. Two other divisions of Washington's army, which were to cooperate in the attack, had failed to cross the river and his force consisted of between 2,300 and 2,400 men. True, Rall had only about 1,000 Hessians at Trenton, but if his patrols discovered Washington's advance he could fight a defensive engagement until aid came.

Fortunately for the cause of American liberty, however, a patrol sent out early in the morning by one of Rall's subordinates (the commander himself was sleeping off his Christmas celebration) did not go far enough and the Americans were at the outskirts of Trenton before they were discovered. Despite the surprise, the Hessians rallied and put up a stubborn defense for a short time, but it was hopeless. Rall was mortally wounded and died the following night. Twenty-two of the Hessians were killed outright, 28 so badly wounded that they were left in Trenton and 56 others carried along with the victorious Americans as they retired across the river with their 808 prisoners. Washington's loss was four wounded and not a man killed! His spectacular victory was a tonic to the discouraged patriots. Among "Christmas gifts," the achievement at Trenton must be rated among the most splendid of all time.

But if Christmas day of 1776 was a bright one for Washington and his fellow countrymen, the Christmas day of 1777 was correspondingly dark. The British had taken Philadelphia, the Continental army was but a shadow of a fighting force, a plot to remove Washington from command had been narrowly averted, congress was demoralized and the patriot cause was at a low ebb. Both for its defensive value and as a potential threat against Philadelphia, Washington had decided to move his army to Valley Forge from Whitmarsh where it was stationed at the beginning of December, 1777. So he took up the 19-mile march and again there were footprints in the snow stained with red. Arriving at Valley Forge on December 19, his army of ragged, half-starved Continentals went into the winter camp which has made the name Valley Forge forever famous as a symbol of suffering and deathless devotion to a cause. On Christmas day Washington in his orderly book noted that the army was huddled for the winter in some 1,300 cabins.

But lest that statement bring up a picture of an army snugly housed in comfortable barracks, let it be recorded that the huts were little more than piles of logs thrown up hastily around holes dug in the ground, the spaces between the logs plastered with mud. The roofs were slabs but they were leaky and water poured in on the heads of their inhabitants as well as seeped through the walls, unless they had had foresight or strength enough to dig drain ditches around the outside.

Add to such a situation the misery of hunger and sickness and you have a picture of the horror that was Valley Forge. For the commissary of the Continental army, neglected by a vacillating and bickering congress, had fallen down on its job entirely. On December 23 the commander in chief wrote to the president of congress that out of about 11,000 men "we have by return this day made, no less than 2,989 men now in camp unfit for duty because they are barefoot and otherwise naked." He also reported that on this same day the army had "not a single hoof of any kind to slaughter and not more than twenty-five barrels of flour." Few men had more than one shirt, "many only the moiety of one and some none at all." Owing to the lack of blankets numbers had to sit up all night by fire.

Under such conditions it is only too easy to imagine what a cheerless Christmas day it was that Washington and his men spent in 1777 at Valley Forge.

The Hatry financial crash in London, a nine-figure crash, led President Grace of the Bethlehem Shipping corporation to say in an interview:

"Hatry was a fine young chap—for that matter he's still young—and he did splendidly, working like a slave, for ten or twelve years. Then—good-by."

"Hatry's case shows us why the highroad to success has so few travelers. Nearly everybody gets lost trying to find short cuts."

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet auto invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiancé. Mrs. Krassin expressed fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya. The commissar brutally insults Musia. Mrs. Krassin's thoughts are all of Ilya. Musia feels herself defenseless and wonders if she is to be a victim of the "nationalization of women." To Vladimir, Musia criticizes her brother Ilya's acceptance of the situation.

"What a sacrifice!" said Vladimir, touching her lightly with his hand. "As well wish this lovely vase a kettle!"

"Don't!" she cried in protest at the light tone—after that dreadful night of hers, of which poor Vladimir knew nothing. "Oh, when will this Bolshevik pollution be wiped out! I wish I were a man! How long will it last! When shall we be fighting here?"

He opened his mouth to answer, and then paused; paused as he thought that it was not wise to discuss their prospects of success in the near future with anyone who was not entitled to know all—not even with this dear girl. But his sweet and tender impulse toward her had not quite passed away, her attitude intrigued him, it was so new, and he felt a natural and very powerful impulse to talk with someone—especially with her—of what had been of late so uppermost in his mind. For a moment he felt that he might venture something.

"Their end and our triumph is very near," he said in a low voice. "Of that I feel sure."

"But," said she as if to elicit more, "our side is so badly organized—our plans are so new. We always thought they would break down of themselves—this awful tyranny, you know."

"Yes," said he non-committally. "I know."

"What makes you think that success is this time?"

She paused, her eyes fixed on his. Suddenly the feeling came over him that he was peering with the letter if not the spirit of the faith pledged to the conspiracy, through that oldest of temptations, a woman's charms. No, it was no time for such stuff as this!

"I am afraid," said he, "that I cannot satisfy your mind on that question."

She felt as if he had intended to say, "your curiosity." She felt rebuked—unjustly rebuked—for was she not as much a Russian noble as he? And had she not suffered more than he? Was she not in a danger to which he was immune? But of course, he knew nothing of that.

The tender passage was over—for this day at least—and who knew of future days? A moment ago he had looked at her in a way that made her blush. It was "he old conflict between the lady's chamber and the tented field."

She told him with a few discordant notes on the piano that he had hurt her; and when he sought to revert to their old vein of badinage, she did not reply.

"Let me play you this Grieg étude," said she. "Listen to the duet in it— isn't it queer? Do you like it?"

This she said with her back to him, her fingers on the keys. At the end of the piece she sat with her hands by her side, and for a long time Vladimir said nothing.

"It is very beautiful," said he, bowing over her hand as he parted from her. "I shall see you again soon. Adieu!"

The acid of the revolution was bringing romances like theirs everywhere into nothingness, dissolution. When conspiracy came in at the window, love walked out at the door.

CHAPTER VII

In Rama Was There a Voice Heard

Vladimir left the House of Krassin as he came in—by the back door, and went to the little wicket gate on the rear street. He was in a worn uniform, that of a common soldier.

The time had come to bring his dawdling to an end, to take his plunge; to assume his supreme duty; to yield to the exigent necessity of the hour—resistance to the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

the tall trees, he he could no into the temptation of a conspiracy with Musia; a no longer feel when with that one moment he was by her o. his neglect of hi Musia, and the next that a hated him for taking the b which might bring Ilya into

He had decided to go w ding either of them good-by eral reas ns. He knew it they would understand, and that he would not be expected to mention his plans to them; he would be spared any fare-well to Musia—a farewell for which he longed, but one which he feared would be too much for his self-control. And then in slipping away thus, he should avoid any display of the contrast between his course and Ilya's, either before Musia, who was his partisan, or her mother who stood with Ilya.

And then it was the dark of the moon, for which he had been waiting. He would travel by night and hide by day, disguised in his soldier's uniform.

It Was as if a Trap Had Been Set for Him.

His was the temperament of the happy warrior; he knew that Musia would understand and approve—and his heart rose as he opened the little wicket into the back street.

He stood with his hand on the hamp of the gate and looked back again, at the big house, lichened and scaly with age, with all its treasures of tapestries, books, sculpture, rugs, antiques, musical instruments, and its great store of provisions. He felt a twinge of guilt at leaving Musia undefended in it. He thought even of the old judge, who knew nothing of the revolution, but whom it must reach at last—unless the forces which Vladimir was about to join could bring rescue in time. Vladimir was the last of the men to depart; for he never included Ilya in his list of men. But what could he alone do, even if he stayed? There was no other course—he must take the plunge, and trust to fortune that he might return to Musia in time.

He opened the gate and stepped out. He stepped out into the midst of a detail of Bolshevik soldiers! It was as if a trap had been set for him.

The spring of the door had swung it to behind him, and the spring lock held it fast. He was locked out—with his back to the wall. The hand which went to the holster was clinched to his side; but he turned the muzzle up and shot from the hip. One dark form staggered and toppled over. There was a short sharp fight with fist and foot, in which numbers prevailed; and Vladimir was hustled off, disarmed and bleeding, toward the krepost by the soldiers.

"Tovarisch," said the man in command to one of his soldiers, "go to the front and tell the commander that we have got one of them—and that he got one of us!"

To an "Amiable Child"

There is a monument near Grant's tomb in New York, the inscription on which reads: "Erected to the memory of an amiable child, St. Clair Pollock, died July 15, 1797, in the fifth year of his age. Man that is born of woman is of few years, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. He fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." The child was the nephew of George Pollock, a New York merchant who at one time owned Claremont. In this conveyance of the property in 1800 he stated: "There is a small inclosure near your boundary fence within which lies the remains of a favorite child, covered by a marble monument. You will convey a peculiar and interesting favor upon me by allowing me to convey . . . keeping it, however, always enclosed and sacred. There is a white marble funeral urn prepared to place on the monument which will not lessen its beauty."

Discouraged

Martha Anne, a first grade pupil, came home from school a little tired and vexed. Things had not gone to suit her, for this is what she told her mother:

"Well, if I had my life to live over, I certainly wouldn't go to school."

MILITARY

ENTIAL FOR HEN FLOCK

Violet Rays Foes of Rickets and Other Ills.

Violet rays in direct sunshine aid in the assimilation of calcium and are foes of rickets and other ills to which flesh is heir.

While this a familiar story to many poultry keepers it is not generally known that not all sunlight has equal value—that, in fact, winter sunshine in northern latitudes has few or no violet rays, the factor that cures or prevents the rickets.

Discussing the practice of some poultry men of shooting their flocks at this time of year into bright sunshine, Frederick B. Huff, poultry specialist of the agricultural extension service of the University of Minnesota, says:

"This may be of value to stock kept for breeding but does not give the birds much if any more of the anti-rickets factor than they were getting inside the hen house. Experiments have shown that in latitudes even farther south than Minnesota the amount of ultra violet rays of the most valuable wave length is too small in winter to be of much importance. After the first of March the value of the sunlight increases rapidly and by April and May it has a rickets banishing potency about eight times as great as in January.

"The merits of various glass substitutes have been widely advertised the last few years. While it is quite true that many of these will transmit, when new, more ultra violet rays than window glass, the fact remains that even the best of them cannot transmit such rays when there are none to transmit. Neither will the breeding flock get its full requirement of the valuable factor if turned outdoors on the brightest days in February.

"But an ample supply of this factor is a prime essential if good hatches are to be obtained in the early spring. The only safe plan is to feed a good brand of cod liver oil at the rate of 2 per cent in the mash. By April 1, at which time the sun is again giving full value for the money, feeding of the oil may be safely discontinued."

Best Results Obtained in Hatching Chickens

Best results are usually obtained when the birds for the pullet flock are hatched as near the same date as possible. But how can this be brought about when incubators of small capacity are used, or the hatching and brooding are done by broody hens? Poultrymen of University Farm, St. Paul, Minn., say that a practical method is to fill the small incubators with eggs from the breeding pens and as the hens become broody transfer the fertile eggs found at the first candling from the incubators to the hens and allow them to finish the hatch. The incubators can then be filled again after being disinfected. The hens will complete the incubation in about the same time and a large number of chicks will thus be practically the same age. This work must be done very carefully or there will be losses. A machine of 100-egg capacity, with broody hens to hatch, will bring off chicks from 400 fertile eggs within a period of 21 days, say poultry specialists.

Best Calcium Sources for the Poultry Flock

In a recent test conducted by the poultry husbandry department of Iowa State college, Ames, it was found that best results were secured when the limestone used as a grit for the poultry flock was very hard, practically pure calcium carbonate and low in magnesium. Softer limestone did not give such results as did the hard limestone.

Oyster shell, clam shell and limestone were fed in the experiment and it was found that the amount of the grit material consumed was directly proportional to the number of eggs laid by the hens on test. The experiment indicated that the calcium requirements of the hens were fully met by limestone, as well as by the other materials.

Way to Keep Eggs

The best way to keep eggs for hatching is to pack them small end down in an egg case and turn them every day if kept more than a week. A simple way to do this is to finish filling the case with fillers, put the top on and turn the case on one side. The next day put it back upright and the following day turn it on the other side. Some people keep eggs on their sides in a box. If this plan is followed they should be turned every day.

Test Incubator

Run the incubator a few days before putting the eggs into it. This will permit perfect regulation and reduce the hazards that accompany the regulation of the machine when the eggs are incubating. Do not become alarmed when the temperature drops just after the eggs are put in. The cool eggs absorb heat and lower the temperature of the incubator. If you turn the lamp high at this time in all likelihood you will cook the eggs before you get it regulated again.

Knew Enough to Make Careful "Test" of Wire

News had been received by the inspector of the seaside tramway system that an overhead wire had fallen in a crowded street.

The inspector betook himself to the spot.

When he arrived he found a crowd of people handling the wire in a most careless manner.

Going up to the nearest man he shouted:

"You had no right to touch that wire. If the current had been on, you would have been killed outright by the shock!"

The other looked at the inspector with a knowing air.

"Ah," said he, "I was mighty careful! I felt it carefully before I took hold of it!"—London Answers.

Too Much Is Pleaty

A judge gave an Oregon grocer who beat up a government inspector a chance to defend himself. The grocer said:

"I am guilty. I lost my head. All the morning I held my temper while government agents inspected my scales, tasted my butter, smelled my meat, graded my kerosene. In addition, your honor, I had just answered three federal questionnaires. Then this bird comes along and wants to take moving pictures of my cheese. It was more than I could stand—I patted him in the eye."

The case was taken under advisement.—Acheson Globe.

Costly Statue

The ivory and gold statue of Athena made by Phidias for the Parthenon at Athens was embellished with nearly $1,000,000 worth of gold.

That Big Difference

The real problem for most young married people is not how to "keep up" in life, but what to "keep up."—Woman's Home Companion.

Cuba Taking Part in Move to Save Forests

The international spread of the doctrine of forest preservation is arrestingly evidenced by the news that Cuba has just begun the creation of its first national park for the propagation and protection of native trees. The preserve is to contain more than 64,812 acres of tropical land, a news account has it. The province of Oriente, at the southern tip of the island, is to provide the reservation. The land is crossed there by three large rivers, the Mayari, the Levisa and the Caenleo, and the intermediary area is checkerboarded with brooks and small streams, wherein fish will be stocked. Moreover, and rather surprisingly, it is stated that the district also possesses extremely mountainous regions, so that Cuban sponsors hope for their national park a beauty rivaling that of the national parks in the western and southeastern regions of the United States.

The idea of a tropical nation establishing a national park, or needing the agency of preservation, is distinctly novel. Perhaps the need is less dire than in cooler lands, and the inspiration may be toward beauty rather than utility. This does not diminish the excellence of the plan, but only serves to emphasize the happy relationship in forestry projects between utility and beauty. Most of the forestry work in the United States at present stresses the former objective, because it is for the present paramount. But where preserves have been defined the grandeur of the trees has made their ornamentation a factor more conspicuous than their value.—Atlanta Journal.

Lesson for the Careless

On leaving a Kansas City store, a salesman found this notice attached to his windshield: "Thanks for the grips. Don't like to steal, but am out of work and must feed the kiddies. An Honest Thief." Feeling very melancholy about the whole affair, the salesman was about to make a routine report to the police when the proprietor of the store let him in on the joke and confessed to taking the grips himself. "That will teach you to close the windows of your car when you leave it," the proprietor said in a reproving manner. And it has done so.

Tan Painfully Acquired

Gail Potter, a parachute jumper, discovered a new method of getting a tan. He sailed away in a smoke balloon at Kansas City, intending to descend by parachute. At an altitude of 2,000 feet he pulled the knife cord. Nothing happened. He jerked again, then discovered the cord was twisted around the balloon ropes and there was nothing he could do but wait and come down with the balloon. The smoke cooled and seeped out of the balloon as the bag drifted. The balloon settled down after 30 minutes.

"English Spoken," of Course

The tourist of a few years ago in Paris from England or the United States, desiring to make some purchases, would be likely to be influenced in his visits to the stores by the signs seen at regular intervals "English Spoken," but these legends have gradually disappeared for the reason that every large store and hotel and many of the smaller ones have some one around who can converse with English people. In fact, one of the few signs of this character to be seen at present, reads: "English Spoken, of Course."

Individuality in Birds

Individuality is that thing which causes the bluebirds, wrens and martins to expect houses with built-in features while the sparrows multiply prodigiously in caves' troughs and drain pipes.—Fort Worth Record-Telegram.
