GRUVER MAN KILLED IN TRUCK ACCIDENT

Another life was claimed on White Hill curve, three miles east of Hedley, last Thursday about 5 p. m. when a Phillips 66 truck overturned, fatally crushing John Thomas Harmon and badly cutting and bruising the driver, M. P. Atkinson. Both men lived at Gruver.

Mr. Atkinson was driving from Gruver to Chillieth on company business, we understand, and Mr. Harmon was riding with him as far as Goodlett, where he was to visit his parents.

L. A. Stroud, Justice of the Peace, went out to the scene of the accident, viewed the remains and held an inquest. The body was turned over to the Moreman & Buntin mortuary and prepared for burial. A Quanahearse arrived about 10 p. m. and took the remains to that city, where funeral and burial services were held Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Atkinson was brought to Hedley and treated by Dr. F. V. Walker. His injuries were painful but he was able to go home the following day.

J. C. Ritchey, Phillips 66 agent at Gruver, and three or four others arrived here during the night or early Friday morning, as did several relatives of the deceased.

Mr. Harmon was about 38 years of age, and is survived by his widow and two children, Mrs. Harmon being operator of the telephone exchange at Gruver.

AGED HEDLEY VISITOR DIES EN ROUTE HOME

Mr. H. F. Byrd, aged citizen of Wellington, where he made his home the past twenty years, was found dead Sunday morning sitting against one of the store buildings at Quail. He had been visiting his granddaughter, Mrs. John Koeninger, in Hedley, and left here Saturday afternoon with some people who live on the Wilson ranch, between McKnight and Quail. It is supposed that he walked from the Wilson ranch to Quail, where he was stricken by a heart attack.

The remains were taken to Wellington, where funeral and burial services were conducted Monday afternoon.

Mr. Byrd was known to many Hedley people, having visited here a number of times. He lived in Wise county before moving to Wellington. His wife died a few years ago, and it is said that he has since divided the time between his home and visits with relatives at various points.

His survivors in this section are a daughter, near Wellington, a son-in-law, W. A. Armstrong of Clarendon, Mrs. Koeninger, his granddaughter, and two grandsons, Albert and Bryan Armstrong of Clarendon.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A CURE FOR OBSTINACY

JOHNNY CHUCK was stiff and sore. It was the day after the great fight. Johnny sat on his doorstep and he was in anything but a happy state of mind. In the first place, each separate wound made by the teeth of Reddy Fox had a separate and distinct ache. No one who aches all over can be in a very happy state of mind. Then, too, Johnny was nervous. He kept turning his head every two or three minutes to make sure that all was safe behind him. That stone wall which had seemed such a splendid protection when he built his house in the corner of it now seemed a constant danger. Johnny imagined he heard enemies creeping up on the other side of it. He expected to see the head of Reddy Fox or Mrs. Reddy bob up over the top of that wall any minute. No one as nervous as that can be in a very happy frame of mind. Also Johnny was beginning to be quite honest with himself and to admit that he wished he never had thought of leaving his fine home in the far corner of the Old Orchard. He wished he was back there. He knew now that it was the very best place in all the Great World. At least, it was the very best place for him. But he was still too obstinate to make up his mind to go back there. If there had been no one there he wouldn't have minded. But Polly Chuck was there and Johnny just couldn't make up his mind to go back and confess that he had been wrong in the first place. Of course, no one feeling that way could be in a very happy frame of mind. But what made him most unhappy of all was the fact that he was hungry and all the time growing hungrier.

Suspenders Go Feminine

Adjustable slide fasteners on the shoulder straps shorten the frock for active sports and lengthen it for capris or general wear. An elbow-length separate cape of the shade of the jumper completes the ensemble for street wear.

He didn't go far enough away from his doorstep to get his breakfast, and he hadn't had much to eat the day before, nothing at all after the great fight. With longing eyes he looked over to the distant clover patch. After his experience of the day before he didn't dare go so far from his house. If he had been feeling all right he wouldn't have dared to. Stiff and sore as he was it was out of the question. He couldn't run and he couldn't fight.

He tried to eat some of the grass near his doorstep. It was thick with dust and so gritty and unpleasant to the taste that he managed to swallow only a little of it. So the morning passed and afternoon came. With every passing minute Johnny grew hungrier. The hungrier he grew the more he thought of the delicious sweet clover which grew so close to his old home in the far corner, and the more he thought of this the more he thought about going home.

Late in the afternoon Sammy returned to see how Johnny was getting on. An idea came to Johnny. He would ask Sammy Jay to keep watch while he hurried over to that patch of clover and get a bite or two. Sammy agreed at once. But Sammy is just brimming over with mischief, as you know. Johnny was only half way to the patch of clover when Sammy screamed. Back scrambled Johnny Chuck as fast as he could. When he found it was just a joke he scolded as only he can scold. This tickled Sammy Jay and he flew away laughing. You see, Sammy didn't know how very, very hungry Johnny Chuck was. By the time jolly, round, red Mr. Sun went to bed behind the Purple Hills, hunger and fear had quite cured Johnny Chuck of obstinacy. He would start for home the first thing in the morning.

APPETIZING DISHES

IN THE spring and early summer green foods—fresh vegetables and fruit—are more appealing than more complicated foods. There are some roughage foods that are needed all the year round and an occasional use of bran in food, or taken in water as a drink, will keep the elimination good. For the children the bran may be given in small cakes, cookies and macaroons.

Bran Date Muffins.—Break two eggs into a mixing bowl and beat with an egg beater for two minutes; add two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of softened shortening. Add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder to one cupful of flour, add one cupful of bran, one-half cupful of dates cut fine, and one-half cupful of nuts cut fine. Mix all as usual and beat well. Bake in well greased muffin pans for twenty-five minutes.

Calif's Liver Sandwich Spread.—Rub cooked liver with hard-cooked eggs through a sieve, using to one pound of liver three hard-cooked eggs. Add one grated onion, salt and pepper to season. Mix well and spread on buttered bread. A layer of thinly sliced sour pickle will add to the sandwich.

Shrimp and Liver Sandwiches.—Take one cupful of cooked shrimps, one cupful of cooked chicken livers, one Bermuda onion and one green pepper. Remove the seeds from the pepper and grind with all the other ingredients; mix with a little mayonnaise or chili sauce. Use on buttered white bread for filling.

GRAPHIC GOLF

WEIGHT ON HEELS AIDS PROPER STROKE

KEEP the weight back on the heels is the advice handed out by MacDonald Smith. This allows the body to turn just enough to prevent retarding the arm movement as the clubhead is swept down and through with the arms. The shoulders are held back instead of coming around to the left ruining control and power. To offset too rigid legs in this position the knees should be bent slightly. A slight give here also keeps the golfer from stooping over too far. A fault of golfers in general is that they bend forward too far with the weight on the toes, a position in which it is difficult to pivot properly. One reason for this is that the ball is often too far away, necessitating

CRIBBAGE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HALF of the game is what you throw away, And what you keep, before you start to play. And life's the same, Same sort of game— Much like a hand of cribbage that you play.

Count up your cards, not after but before, Keep what will likely make the largest score. Some joy denied And thrown aside May, at the finish, make you even more.

Discard the useless from your heart and mind, The plans unworthy and the thoughts unkind, Old hurts, old hates, And selfish traits, And winning will be easy, you will find.

Yes, keep the right and throw the wrong aside, The little jealousies, the foolish pride, Consider, too, The things you do, The evil habits from the good divide.

For they will win who wisely will discard The useless action and the useless card, Watch life the same, Then play the game— And you will find the winning not so hard.

Amnesia in Some Form Seems the Common Lot

Writes Waldemar Kaempfert in the New York Times:

"Since January, 1930, the New York Times has reported 64 cases of memory lapses as serious as that of Colonel Raymond Robins. There must have been hundreds more of which the press never heard. Men and women who forget who they are, and who wander about pathetically—totally new personalities so far as the world is concerned—are commoner than many of us suppose.

"The truth is that we all suffer a little from amnesia or loss of memory. Who has not had the experience of trying to recall the name of a person or place, apparently in vain, only to have it flash up vividly in the mind hours later and for no apparent reason? 'Normal amnesia' the physicians call the phenomenon.

"Luckily we have the power of reconstructing and synthesizing mental records of past events. It is only when the blankness covers long periods that amnesia is dangerous.

"Although they know little enough about the mind and its vagaries, psychiatrists classify amnesias. There are localized amnesias, which affect only certain groups of memories. A man may forget how to walk, for example, but not how to crawl or hop; his memory of writing may have gone, but he will still be able to talk.

"Then there are retrograde amnesias, in which it is impossible to remember what occurred immediately before some mental or physical shock. The victim of anterograde amnesia forgets experiences almost as fast as they occur. Paramnesias try to fill the gaps in the memory by illusions."

Our Government — How It Operates

By William Bruckart

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR

UNDER our system of government, predicated on alignment of the citizens into two major political parties, changes are effected very slowly in the matter of expanding, or accomplishing a shrinkage, in any establishment or its functions. Some politician rises up and makes "an issue" of every proposal of that kind, and quite obviously he has his following. Thus, oftentimes functions of government go on long after their necessity has ceased.

But I am going to discuss changes that have come about whether the political parties desired or not, changes that were accomplished in a manner comparable in reverse to the history of the memorable character, Topsy, who "just grewed." They are centered in the Department of the Interior, and I say without fear of contradiction that no department of the government has experienced such changes with respect to importance of its several units.

It was not so many years ago, less than half a century, that the country looked to the Department of the Interior in connection with the grave Indian problem; it looked to the same agency concerning disposition of the vast public lands, and the same agency was in charge of all veterans' pensions, though the number was small as compared to now.

In the meantime, the West was developing. Public lands were being absorbed and the number of Indians was decreasing and the blood was being diffused. Far-seeing statesmen recognized that conservation of the beauty spots required early action, and preservation of them as national parks got under way.

The course of the times carried with it the constituent elements of new problems, such as administration of irrigation projects, as the arid states received the overflow of population. Reclamation of lands was the premise from which the movement had to proceed.

Thus, the Department of the Interior saw its influence wane in some sections of the country and on some matters of national import, and observed it expanding in others. The public domain has declined in size and importance until the general land office is only a fraction of its former self, though still an office of consequence, and the office of commissioner of Indian affairs, once among the powerful offices of the government, has declined in importance correspondingly with the shrinkage of Indian population and problems.

Through the years, of course, the department has received additions, such as the office of education, and the national park service has been built up as the nation sought to conserve for the future the beauty spots and recreational grounds naturally presented in virgin form. The development of the great resources of Alaska to a large extent is under the direction of the secretary of the interior who has the Alaska railroad under his administration. There is also the geological survey, an agency for study of the nation's geologic map.

As to the changes that have come in the department since its inception, however, none stand out more than does the expansion of influence through construction and management of irrigation projects. Actually, none bear more importantly on the economic and physical well-being of what was the West of yore. The director of reclamation has been exerting this influence of the federal government for 30 years, and if one may use the constant calls for additional legislation as a criterion, the limit of power and influence of that office is yet afar off. Irrigation is only in its infancy.

As the work in connection with educating the Indians and providing for their future welfare and protection of their funds grows less, and as the area of the public domain declines, the functions of government decline there, but in another part of the great building that houses the department the functions of government are expanding that the national parks may be protected and preserved for future generations. And so it is, too, with the commissioner of education who is the liaison between the state school systems and the federal government, as well as serving in co-operation with all educational institutions throughout the country.

It is not intended in this discussion to depreciate the value of the work done by any of the units making up the Department of the Interior. The purpose is to show how a changing of conditions, resulting from growth of the nation itself, has brought about modification of the work and the demands upon government. None can say that the general land office, for example, lacks consequence when it is recalled that every day and everywhere there is some one or group clamoring to gain a leasehold on public land to exploit mineral resources of oil, of copper, of a dozen other things. These are owned by the federal government and proper administration of them is just as vitally important as sound construction of the gigantic project headed up in Hoover dam and the Colorado river basin.

BEADS ONCE USED AS LEGAL TENDER

Wampum Recognized by the Colonies in 1637.

The earliest American money was wampum, that being a string of shells an Indian wore around his neck when he dressed up. The red skin's necktie was not merely something which the New England colonist used to trick a native out of some choice skins. The beads were actually recognized in the Colonies as the coin of the realm. A Massachusetts order in council of 1637 made wampum full legal tender up to a shilling, at the rate of six black beads or three white beads to a penny. And a Connecticut statute was authorized by law to pay taxes in wampum up to ten pounds sterling.

In an identical way, tobacco was established as the money of Virginia, rice of South Carolina, wood of Rhode Island and rum in many places. The value of each of the miscellany of trinkets and vegetable was always reckoned in terms of pennies, shillings and pounds of the English monetary system. The colonists brought along small amounts of metallic money when they came across. And as this accumulated, it circulated freely among the people.

Traffic with the Spanish colonies brought in some of their coins, but trade as a whole was handicapped because of the lack of an adequate currency. The demand for money was so persistent that a mint was set up in New England, but opposition by the home government soon put a stop to that.

Due to the lack of metallic money, the Colonial governments fell into the practice of printing paper money. As there wasn't any other circulating medium, the paper passed for time as if it were the real article. However, since the issuing governments could maintain no adequate reserves for redeeming the notes as they fell due, and as the colonists found the device so easy that there was a constant temptation to put out more, the notes fell in value.

When depreciation went so far as to appall the authorities, a new set of bills would be put out, with the officials swearing that this time it would be different and the issue would be confined to what could be redeemed. But the promises, even when backed by good intentions, were never kept.

At length, the English merchants complained that they were having difficulties making collections for goods sold and delivered because of the variable currency. The English then yielded and sent over a quantity of silver and bronze, and put the colonies on a sound metallic basis.

So it stood when the Bostonians gave their famous tea party. Wars are financed in three ways: by taxing, borrowing or inflating. Taxation was not available to the American revolutionists because the precipitating cause of the war was the objection of the colonists to taxation. Borrowing was impossible, except to a slight extent with France, because the new country had not established its credit. The only feasible means of financing the war, therefore, was by inflating, by issuing irredeemable paper currency. And that is precisely what was done.
