Why Not Write It This Way.

"If you can see what some folks call 'depression'

As nothing but a spin of Fortane's wheel;

If you can keep your poise and self-possession

No matter what you think or how you feel;

If you can view a stupid situation

All cluttered up with 'if' and 'aws' and 'buts';

And take it at its proper valuation—

A challenge to your common sense and 'guts';

If you can rise above the mess and muddle,

If you can glimpse a rainbow thru the clouds

When Doubt and Dread and Fear are in a huddle

And hope is being measured for a shroud;

If you can keep a saving sense of humor

For stories that are slightly inexact;

If you can disregard Report and Rumor

And not accept a statement as a fact;

If you can spread the gospel of success,

If you can stir the spirit that stills

The latent life in lathes and looms and presses

And lift the steam above a thousand mills;

If, brief as you can spend an extra dollar;

If you can pry the Sacred Roll apart

And buy another shirt or shoe or collar

And act as if it didn't break your heart;

If you have faith in those with whom you labor,

And trust in those with whom you make a trade;

If you believe in friend and next door neighbor

And heed examples pioneers have made;

If you expect the sun to rise tomorrow;

If you are sure that some where skies are blue,

Wake up and pack away the futile sorrow

For better days are largely up to YOU!"

HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Nelda Mae Bridges, 8 year old daughter of Mr and Mrs. H A Bridges, former residents of Hedley, now living in Bartlesville, Okla., narrowly escaped death by asphyxiation recently. She was found lying on the bath room floor, by an older sister, and was rushed to the hospital, where she was revived after an hour and a half of heroic efforts of the physician. Her many little friends here are glad of her recovery.

Buying of Gold in World Commodity Prices—Administrator Hopkins on Winter Relief Needs.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BUYING of newly mined American gold at prices above prevailing market did not prove so efficacious in raising commodity prices as the administration had hoped, so President Roosevelt called for his financial advisers and they decided to buy gold from the world market.

George F. Warren

Prof. George F. Warren of Cornell and Prof. James H. Rogers of Yale, who had devised the dollar depreciation policy which is being tried, were among the advisers of the plan. The plan was put up to the President and he then told the President that it was necessary to force down the value of the dollar in the foreign market as well as at home, and that if that scheme was successful gold abroad is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of Mr. Roosevelt's revaluation of the dollar. The plan is to buy gold from the world market. The French and British have agreed to support an emergency statement that the government's foreign reserves as the beginning of a depreciation rate, are erroneous. It is the opinion of the administration that conservatism is gradually abandoning the dollar will ultimately be a 50-cent value. But it was frankly confessed that any extensive measure

President Roosevelt's financial advisers, including the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Acheson, Gov. E. C. Harrison, Governor J. E. Crane and Fred I. Kent of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Henry Bruere, the President's financial co-ordinator, at least some of these gentlemen formerly opposed any program of relief for the winter. The President evidently felt the Warren-Rogers plan was an experiment that deserved a trial.

HARRY L. HOPKINS, federal relief administrator, went to Kansas City, met with relief delegates of Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, and told them that the need for relief was going to be greater than ever and that each state and local government must do its part fully. "We are going to start the winter with a million more families on the relief rolls than there were a year ago at this time," he said, and he added emphatically, "The needy are going to be taken care of this winter."

Mr. Hopkins estimated about 3,250,000 families were on relief rolls at the present time. During the five months the federal emergency relief administration has been in operation $218,000,000 has been allotted by the federal government to care for the needy, he said. He noted that when new jobs open up most of them are filled at first by "self-sustaining" idle who have never been on relief rolls. "The idle relief bill of the nation which is about one billion dollars a year, must be paid," he said. "This means that the need for private contributions is greater."

Explaining that the federal emergency relief administration is caring for 10,000 persons by two methods of relief and "work relief," Hopkins expressed a preference for the latter.

and improvement of the federal farm refinancing machinery, especially in the Omaha land bank district. The program has been endorsed by Governors Horner of Illinois, Bryan of Nebraska, McNutt of Indiana and Berry of South Dakota. The proposed code for agriculture would authorize the creation of a board of farmers which would have functions similar to those of trade associations in existing industrial codes. The board, in conjunction with federal authorities, would determine the cost of production of principal crops, determine what is a fair margin of profit for farmers, and set minimum prices for domestic consumption. Though President Milo Reno of the National Farmers' Holiday Association declared the farm strike off pending developments in Washington, the strike was kept up, especially in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

LATE developments concerning the recovery program include these events: Counsel for an employees' brotherhood obtained a temporary injunction restraining the New York Edison company from violating the NRA and the re-employment agreement. President Roosevelt settled two disputes with the steel industry. He obtained a "substantial agreement" between the United Mine Workers and the captive mines of Pennsylvania operated by the steel companies, forcing the latter to accept the checkoff system. He ended the differences between Transportation Co-ordinator J. B. Eastman and the steel companies over the price of rails to be bought by the government, by setting a price halfway between that asked by the companies and that demanded by Eastman. The Ford dealer whose bid was rejected by the government because Ford had not signed the NRA sued to prevent the award of the contract to the next lowest bidder. More than 300 charges that the Ford Motor company is violating the NRA automobile code provisions were dismissed as "not legitimate" by the Detroit compliance board.

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL and his aides have made everything ready for the conversations with Maxim Litvinov of Russia concerning the establishment of relations with the Soviet republic, and the foreign affairs commissioner is speeding to Washington. It is taken for granted that when recognition of Russia is completed the Moscow government will appoint as its first ambassador to America M. Sokolnikov, now vice commissioner of foreign affairs. He was formerly ambassador to London and was Russia's delegate to The Hague. He is descended from a family that was prominent in the days of the czars. Valery Meshlak, it is expected, will be chairman of the Russian trade delegation to the United States. He is acting chairman of the state planning board and has often visited this country in behalf of Russian governmental purchases.

M. Sokolnikov

GERARD SWOPE, president of the General Electric company, ex-industrial and labor adviser to the recovery administration, outlined a plan for the gradual conversion of the NRA into a great private organization with governing powers over all industry. Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and Henry I. Harrison, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, endorse the plan, the former asserting such a scheme would make it possible to avoid cycles of depression, and the latter warning that the NRA would be a failure if it were allowed to become "just a government bureaucracy."

Briefly, the plan outlined is to entrust to a national council the code supervision authority now in government hands. Government officials would be members of the council, and it would work in close collaboration with government departments, maintaining extensive research and statistical staffs. The council might be created by an enlargement of the United States Chambers of Commerce with labor representation, it was suggested. SAMUEL INSULL, fugitive former public utilities magnate, and the Greek people were equally jubilant when the Greek court of appeals again refused to extradite Insull to the United States and ordered his release from custody. The judges held the indictment against Insull did not furnish sufficient basis for his extradition. What the American government will do next, if anything, was in doubt. There is no appeal from the decision, but Washington might denounce the extradition treaty. The Greeks hope that Insull will remain in that country and establish big industries; it is rumored that he will ask naturalization and change his name to Insullopoulos.

THE HEDY
ON DECEMBER 15 France will owe the United States another installment on the war debt, amounting to $2,200,028. But we won't get it, or any part of it. The new French government headed by Albert Sarraut intends to default as did that of Daladier on June 15. It was said semi-officially in Paris that the government would abstain from raising the question in parliament, and this policy, rather than his health, would be responsible for the absence of former Premier Herriot because his participation would be certain to revive the debt question.

THE senate banking subcommittee and its counsel, Ferdinand Pecora, kept up their hammering at Albert H. Wiggin, former head of the Chase National bank of New York, and the complicated transactions carried on by him and his companies. It was brought out that the Chase bank made huge loans to Wiggin's personal companies for trading in the bank's stock and for the creation of Wiggin of companies in Canada to escape income taxes. Sherman, one of the Wiggin companies, began selling the Chase bank stock short in 1929, a month before the great market crash, and big profits were made. "What prompted you to sell the bank stock?" asked Pecora.

"I don't know," replied Wiggin. "I must have had some trend of thought at that time. I thought all bank stocks were too high and that Chase was in line with the other stocks."

"If you thought Chase bank stock was too high, why did you permit the Chase Securities corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, the Metport corporation, to go into these various pools to stabilize the market?" asked Pecora.

After considerable discussion with counsel Wiggin replied that the pool bought and sold stock and that "the net result was the sale of stock, just the same as I did."

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT is taking an exceedingly active part in the winter's campaign for the relief of human wants, being chairman of the woman's division. In the course of her duties she spent two strenuous days in Chicago attending a conference of community welfare workers of the nation called by General Chairman Newton D. Baker. Representatives of 34 national welfare and health agencies and delegates from cities preparing to campaign for community chests were present.

"Coming in a crisis year," Mr. Baker said, "these community campaigns for welfare work represent a challenge to democracy and a test of its validity. 'Over the top' must be the cry this year."

ACCORDING to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, the country's wheat farmers have signed up about 80 per cent of the average seeded acreage in the farm adjustment administration's crop reduction campaign. Mr. Wallace estimates that cash benefits to farmers for agreements to restrict plantings next year 15 per cent will exceed $102,000,000, of which they will receive slightly more than two-thirds this fall. Checks already are being sent out, the first going to some farmers in West Virginia.

Applications have been signed covering 570,293 farms on which wheat is grown and representing $1,925,612 acres. A reduction of 15 per cent on this area for the crop to be harvested next year will reduce plantings about 7,780,000 acres.

MODERN Turkey, the republic, is just ten years old, and its birthday was fittingly celebrated at Ankara, the capital. The state as it now exists is largely the work of Mustafa Kemal, the president, and it was with justifiable pride that he recounted its growth and achievements before 100,000 of his fellow citizens at the race course. He said: "Our greatest accomplishment is the Turkish republic which the heroism and high culture of the Turkish people created, thanks to the nation's will and valorous army, but our task is unfinished. What we have done is insufficient."

Even then I wasn't convinced I was going to succeed. But I held on and worked for various other producing companies after my contract with Goldwyn expired. At the old Louis B. Mayer studio, I was directed by Reginald Barker, who had the "knack" of getting the best out of me. Later I signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and became a featured player for that organization. It was the feminine role opposite to John Gilbert in "The Big Parade," which first gave me a great impetus towards a career which had become my life's ambition.

TURKEY today, added the president, is dedicated to peace and is satisfied with her present physical boundaries, but he declared that, as the cradle of ancient civilization, she is determined to spread her cultural boundaries far into Europe.

THAT many Britons are dissatisfied with their country's present international attitude was manifested at two great mass meetings in London in which demands were made that the government repudiate the Locarno treaty and get out of entanglements that might involve her in another European war. At one meeting a resolution was adopted calling on the government to declare "Great Britain's armed forces are no longer at the disposal of the league council to be used against a declared aggressor nation."

How I Broke into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman
BY RENEE ADOREE

ALTHOUGH I never stood before a motion picture camera until I was almost grown, I received a lot of movie training from the time I could toddle about.

I was born in Lilla, France. My father was a circus star and my mother of his troupe. I, also, became a member as soon as I could toddle into the sawdust ring or onto the stage.

My first appearances were in a ballet of 12 girls—too dancers who attracted a good deal of attention whether we were showing in France, Belgium, Germany or the Scandinavian countries. We not only did ballet work, but we also did pantomime, which was my first training. That afterwards came in handy in motion picture work.

At the age of ten I was billed as "The Mysterious Madame X." Every night promptly at eleven o'clock, I would be led blindfolded on the stage, or into the ring. My act consisted of walking up to an aged, toothless and moth-eaten old lion who had been trained to open his mouth so I could thrust my head inside.

This feat made the audience fairly gasp. They thought I was in imminent danger of losing my head.

When I became a little older I specialized in dancing and bareback riding.

It was in France that I saw the first motion pictures, and, strangely enough, had no desire to act in them.

It was the World War which was to blame for my eventual entrance into pictures. I was dancing in Belgium when the Germans invaded that country. With thousands of others, I sought some avenue of escape from that country, because we realized that we might be held as prisoners until the war was over.

I made my escape in a box-car which was attached to a freight train that pulled out of the Belgium capital just ahead of the Uhlans, who first entered the city. I made my way to France and thence to England, eventually embarking for New York, where I went on the stage as a dancer.

Just as I was making progress in musical plays, such as "Oh Uncle," "What a Girl," and "The Dancer," the William Fox studio began making tests for girls for motion pictures. I was one of the girls chosen for a test, but when I saw myself on the screen I decided I was meant for the stage.

Later, I met Tom Moore and he persuaded me to take another film test for a part as his leading lady in Goldwyn comedies. This time I seemed to look altogether different. Mr. Moore was satisfied with the tests and so were the Goldwyn people. I was given a contract and went to the Pacific coast where I made my first screen appearance.

Even then I wasn't convinced I was going to succeed. But I held on and worked for various other producing companies after my contract with Goldwyn expired. At the old Louis B. Mayer studio, I was directed by Reginald Barker, who had the "knack" of getting the best out of me.

Later I signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and became a featured player for that organization. It was the feminine role opposite to John Gilbert in "The Big Parade," which first gave me a great impetus towards a career which had become my life's ambition.

Blond Army

THAT Hollywood has more blonds to the square foot than any other city in the world was proven recently at the Paramount studios. William Beaudine was directing a girls' school scene for "The Crime of the Century." Desiring to improve his scene composition, he called out: "Will that blond please move three feet to her right?" With one accord thirty-five girls moved three feet to their right.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—President Roosevelt's bold move in ordering the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase newly mined gold, with a view to forcing higher commodity prices, has led to more discussion and, I may add, confusion, than anything he has done since the banking holiday of last March. He described the action as a move toward development of a "managed currency" for the new deal. His action was as swift as it was unexpected.

The fact that his announcement created so much confusion and resulted in so much discussion is attributable largely, I believe, to the lack of knowledge generally among people concerning the part gold plays in the country's economic structure. In the absence of that understanding, the natural question was: what's it all about? And to show how the program succeeded in stirring things up, I need add only that the discussion continues and the confusion remains.

Mr. Roosevelt sought, by having a federal agency buy the new gold at prices above that which gold is valued at in world markets, to make the dollar less valuable as it is measured in world trade. It was a move, therefore, supplemental to his action of last March when he placed an embargo on export of gold. That action resulted in more dollars being required to buy an ounce of gold than when gold could be bought and sold freely. In other words, gold became more desirable to have than did the currency of the United States even when it was issued against gold.

Thus, as a correlative fact, more dollars were required to buy a bale of cotton or a wagonload of corn or wheat or a hog or share of stock in a corporation than had been required before the embargo on export was laid. When the federal government, for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is an agency of the government, began to buy the newly mined gold at prices higher than if the gold were being bought for minting into money, the dollars became cheaper again.

The President hoped for an increase in prices of farm commodities and all other things entering into trade corresponding with the reduction of value in the dollar as measured in world trade. (After all is said and done, world trade governs the value of commodities because only in world trade does the age-old law of supply and demand operate unhampered.) For example, the federal statute providing for the value of the gold dollar made the ounce of gold worth $20.67. The first day's purchase of the new gold was made on a rate of $31.36 per ounce of fine gold. It was Mr. Roosevelt's hope, and the theory of the economists who believe in the Roosevelt program, that prices would advance so that commodities would be worth roughly one-third more after the purchase of the new gold than they were worth in February before gold was withdrawn from circulation. To draw the comparison on basic dates nearer to each other: the price at which the initial purchases of new gold were made should have increased the price of commodities by a percentage as large as was the difference between the price paid by the government for the new gold and the price at which that gold could have been sold in the world market.

Whether the thing is capable of working that way remains unanswered as far as I am able to see. Indeed, the conviction held by most monetary experts and students of finance in Washington is that the program cannot be regarded in any other light than as an experiment. It must be considered an experiment for the reason it never has been tried before so that results of a test are not available.

But Mr. Roosevelt believed that the argument advanced by some of his "brain trust" advisers was worth an experiment. I am told on what I consider to be good authority that practical monetary men in the administration had no part in formulating the program. The theorists developed the scheme and the President accepted it.

Use of the experiment had to be adopted before any further moves could be made toward a "managed currency." The idea of a "managed currency" is that the value of the currency shall be made to fluctuate, thus maintaining a stable price for a bushel of wheat or a bale of cotton or products made from them. In other words, the theorists argue that the value of the dollar can be controlled to such an extent that the prices of all commodities, whatever they are, will range within a very narrow limitation from year to year.

The position these theorists take is that by managing the currency, there is just one thing to control, whereas by keeping the currency on a stable value, commodities undergo price changes and there are many commodities to worry about. In the current operation, the move is one of buying gold to make the dollar worth less. If prices of commodities reach a point too high, then the government will sell gold. Immediately, according to the theory, the value of the dollar would go up and that would result in a dollar buying more of a given commodity.

I have been unable to learn from any of the folks who had a hand in development of the Human Factors present just how involved will over certain human factors in the

For instance, the value of the dollar may be fixed so it will buy of wheat, but other wheat in the world may have a tremendous crop. They will have much more they can use and, naturally, producers will want to sell badly. In fact, that they will take 25 a bushel for the wheat. Will Americans deliberately pay $1 when they can get wheat for 25 cents, or there be a tariff wall built so high no wheat can enter this country at all? And if there is that tariff wall, how will foreigners buy our goods, some of which they obviously are going to want? The circumstance is that unless they can sell something here, they will run out of money eventually and cannot pay for purchases in America. That situation will run through our entire structure of commerce and business.

In fairness, it must be said that if there can be world-wide control of production and if industrial production can be stabilized and if employment remains the same, then certainly the government can "manage" its currency.

There is much discussion in Washington, however, that the gold purchase plan constitutes the first step in a general inflation of the currency. On the face of things, it would seem that inflation is certain. On the other hand, Mr. Roosevelt is regarded by many men who know him and have known him through the years, as an individual who wants and will have sound money. They are saying that even now he is leaning away from inflation because he has seen what inflation did to Germany and what it has done to every other country attempting it. Sooner or later, their currency became worth only the value of the paper as script or waste, or souvenirs.

There seems to be no doubt that fox farming is an important industry. It has at last been organized as such by the farm credit administration. The fox farmers, it seems, have suffered like others during the depression and have to have help. They are going to get it, too, from the farm credit administration. Here is the announcement, officially made by the Department of Agriculture:

"Considering silver fox raising a business that calls for long experience and special equipment, the farm credit administration has informed the Department of Agriculture that it plans to make loans on silver foxes as primary security, but it will make such loans only to those operators who have specialized in fox farming, have proper equipment and have shown expert knowledge in the general care and feeding of the animals. Each application, it is added, will be considered on its merits, and in cases where fox farming is incidental to general farming or other business operations, silver foxes may be considered as additional security, within reasonable limits."

In other words, the farm credit administration has decided that a silver fox is just as good as a horse, or a cow or a pig as security for a government loan, and regional credit corporations have been advised they may make loans on that basis. After talking with some of the Department of Agriculture folks, I am inclined to the opinion that possibly the fox pelts are better security than some other farm animals. Certain it is that individuals who can afford such luxuries still have money, and they are about the only ones in the country still having it.

The truth of the old adage that "politics makes strange bedfellows," never has been better demonstrated than under the present administration. There is considerable comment on these conditions among Washington observers, and Republicans are overflowing with mirth about the actions taken.

"We Republicans have been enjoying this one phase of the administration's recovery efforts," said one Republican leader. "Just think of it! Here is a political party that throughout its history has argued for low tariffs and has criticized those of us who have insisted there must be protection for home industry. That same party, having full responsibility for the government, now is turning to high tariffs in a number of cases and has even gone to the extreme of laying an embargo on competitive goods from abroad. Shade of Boies Penrose, (the late Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania) the thing is laughable."

And the Republican leader's assertion about use of the tariff by the Roosevelt administration was true. More than that, it is apparent that there will be additional use made of high rates that can be invoked under the flexible provisions of the tariff laws, provisions which the Democrats, when in the minority in congress, vigorously opposed.

Planes Vie With Gulf-Dymaxion In Thrilling Air Pageant Throng

By Don Mockler

(Feature Writer, "U. S. Air Services")

ROOSEVELT-FIELD, N. Y., (Special)—With the calm and efficient hand of Captain Alford J. Williams at the controls as Director of Events, the aeronautical extravaganza staged for charity and billed as the National Air Pageant held here October 7 and 8, came to a glorious conclusion Sunday night. More than 75,000 New Yorkers have had their first real taste of aviation activity on their "home grounds" since the races here in 1925.

As a special Pageant feature Captain Williams took his Curtiss "Gulphawk" into the air on both days and introduced "painting aerobics in the air," accomplished by a unique chemical smoke tank arrangement, allowing detailed study of the intricate maneuvers performed by this outstanding airman.

The Pageant attracted several hundred civilian fliers, in addition to 21 ships of the 8th Pursuit Group, 11 planes of the 2nd Bombardment Group, and 30 ships of the East Coast Expeditionary Force of the U. S. Marines.

As the Manager of the Aviation Department of the Gulf Refining Company, Al Williams had seen to it that the full airport service facilities of Gulf were placed at the disposal of the Pageant participants, and the Gulf airport trailer, special trucks, field cars, etc., were busy twelve hours both days of the Pageant.

Jimmie Wedell, holder of the land plane speed record of 305 mph, was prepared to defend his record against all-comers, and incidentally also try and establish a new record but was forced down on his first attempt when his motor cooling loosened, damaging his propeller.

Captain Williams had been commissioned by an anonymous patron of aviation to offer a silver trophy and a $2,500 purse to the flier establishing a new speed record.

Speaking of the unknown donor Captain Williams stated that "this American aviation altruist, has in mind the sole thought of providing a definite objective toward which this country's plane designers, builders and fliers might strive.

"I consider that this gesture is one of the finest and most important that has ever been made in the name of aviation."

Major Ernst Udet, German ace, was excellent in his aerobatic work. An outstanding performance was staged by Roy Hunt, who with motor dead, came down from 10,000 feet, doing a series of outside and inside loops, spins, rolls, and dives. Major Alexander P. deSeveraky, in an amphibian of his own design, es-established an unofficial amphibian speed record of 176 mph.

Trophy donated anonymously as inspiration to continued development of American aviation.

Despite the air features, attention was diverted to the ground every time the Gulf-Dymaxion came past the stands. This car, illustrated above, embodies the streamlining lessons taught by aerodynamics. With a top-speed of 120 mph, it produces thirty miles to a gallon of fuel. Its single rear-wheel steering makes it especially flexible in any traffic situation.

As the aerial bombs late at night signalled the close of the Pageant, Captain Williams expressed his personal appreciation to Mrs. Roosevelt and all the members of the many volunteer committees who had worked with him during weeks of intensified effort to bring the involved program of the National Air Pageant to a successful conclusion.

Dog Gone!
By GENEVA COOK
© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

MR. MOONEY of Mooseville stood in the door of his cabin in the woods which covered the side of Mooseville mountain, peering near-sightedly at a folded copy of a newspaper which he held in a leathery-brown hand.

LOST: Big tan dog resembling hound—Name: Floppy-ear. Reward: $10.00, P. O. Box 351, Mooseville.

His steps made slightly uncertain by years and rheumatism, Mr. Mooney limped across the cabin, and opened the door into the woodshed.

"Come 'ere, Floppy-ear!"

The big tan dog ambled toward him. Mr. Mooney regarded her speculatively. "Now if those people that put their air notice in the paper sees my sign I stuck up in the post office, I guess likely your folks'll be right along, ma'am. Some o' those summer folks up to the lake, most likely. Don't know no better'n to go wanderin' all over the maunting."

At the sound of a car laboring noisily up the steep hill, he closed the woodshed door upon the dog, and hobbled outside. The car was an old one painted blue and gold, and the driver was a fair-haired slim girl, with blue eyes to match her sweater and beret. She left the car at the end of the road out past the thick trees clustered around the edge of the clearing, and came running across the stony field to the cabin.

"Hello!" she called. "Have you got Floppy-ear?" She came up to him, breathless. "Oh, please, is she here? I've looked everywhere!"

There was the sound of a barking from behind the wood shed door. "Oh, she is here! Here's the reward." She thrust into the tough wrinkled right hand of Mr. Mooney a crisp, new ten dollar bill.

Suddenly there was a honk! honk! from the direction of the car. "Oh, whoever is blowing the horn of my car? I came up alone! Wait!" And she was gone, leaving Mr. Mooney looking after her, his mouth still open to speak.

"I beg your pardon, sir!" Mr. Mooney gave a violent start. There at his side was a tall, good-looking youth with dark hair.

"I came to claim my dog, sir. You have her here, I think—in the shed, perhaps?" With three long strides, he was past the astonished Mr. Mooney and had opened the door of the shed. The dog came bounding out to him, jumping at his legs, exhibiting every sign of joy and recognition.

"Here," smiled the young man. "Here is the reward! Thank you, sir!" He thrust into the left hand of Mr. Mooney a neatly folded ten dollar bill. "Come, Floppy-ear!" he called, and started across the field.

Before he had gone two steps the girl was facing him, her eyes flashing. Without speaking to him, she turned scornfully away. "Come, Floppy-ear!" she called. And the dog came running to her, jumping, barking, with joy.

Mr. Mooney, because he was near-sighted, had to move nearer to them in order to puzzle it out. He had to move nearer still, because he was a little hard of hearing. But neither of them noticed him at all.

"You don't want that dog," the man was saying in an even, firm voice, that somehow held a note of bitterness. "Come here, Floppy-ear." The dog came.

"You don't value a gift when you don't care anything for the giver?"

"I do care for the giver—I mean, I—I—did—I mean—"

The young man's voice became softer, and Mr. Mooney moved a little nearer. "Just what do you mean, Jocelyn?"

"I—I mean what I said—Gerald."

Mr. Mooney was getting nervous. He didn't like to have folks kissing right in front of his cabin. It wasn't respectable. He cleared his throat as loud as he could, but no one paid any attention. Then he tried something else.

"Come here, Floppy-ear," he called. The dog came.

The man was taking something out of his pocket. "And you'll wear my ring again, Jocelyn?" he was saying, and slipping it sparkling in the sunlight, on her slim white finger.

Together they turned and smiled for a moment at the leathery-brown old man who was staring at them from the yard. Together they called "Come here, Floppy-ear!" The dog went.

Mr. Mooney stood in the door of his cabin and watched them walk, close, down across the stony field, the dog running joyfully at their heels. He looked down at the two ten dollar bills, one in each hand.

"Doggone!" said Mr. Mooney.

Why Liquid Laxatives Do You No Harm

The dose of a liquid laxative measured. The action can be controlled. It forms no habit; you do not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement, and with no discomfort at the time, or afterwards.

The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it!

An approved liquid laxative (one which is most widely used for both adults and children) is syrup pepsin. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription, and is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help, as they do in the case of cathartics containing mineral drugs. Ask your druggist for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Member N. R. A.

took her hand shakily. "How awfully sweet," she said. "Then let's talk because I can see you're tired. Rocky has told me every-thing. You know Rocky is just like a brother. We spent all of our vaca-tion together as children, so I hope you won't mind his having told me. I don't think anyone else should know—" "Your father—" began Doris. "No, I don't think so. I'm sure he'd approve, but if anything comes up, it's better if he doesn't know. I have a small sitting room with a porch of my own downstairs. You shall spend your time there. I have everything planned. You need see no one except Mary, a maid who's been with us a long time, and is practically blind besides. And Rocky shall go and see your people." "But your wedding—" said Doris. "Yes; I'm afraid I shall be rather busy. I won't be able to see as much of you as I'd like. But it's not until Saturday. That's four days, and that's oceans of time for Rocky to get to New Jersey and back. He'll take the train. The bishop is arriving Saturday morning—so he'll be in time for the wedding rehearsal which is to be at eleven on the day of the wedding. And Friday night my bridesmaid is coming from Mount Kisco, and several friends of father's are coming—the Du Val's, of course, will be here." "Oh I don't think we ought to stay," said Doris. "But we'll get away long before the wedding." "Oh no! You must stay for the wed-ding." Rocky shook his head gravely. "I will have to get Doris away before then. She'll be recognized." "That's true, isn't it? But surely you'll have everything cleared up by then." Doris said: "If I do stay, couldn't I write letters for you—or do some-thing useful?" "That's an idea. I'll have about a million letters to write. You are an angel." She rose. "Now you must sleep. This is Wednesday night. Rocky will get a train in the morning and be with your family—if it is your family, which I doubt—by tomorrow night. He ought to be able to get back here by Friday, and you can leave then, if you feel you must." She took Rocky firmly by the arm. "We must go now. And let the poor child sleep." "I don't know why you're all so con-siderate of me," said Doris, who was trembling on the verge of tears. "It's Rocky who needs rest, really. I've dozed in the car a lot, and he's been at the wheel since three o'clock this morning." "Yesterday morning," said Rocky. He stood for a minute looking down at Doris when Beatrice had left the room. "Good night. I probably won't see you again until I get back." His curt tone startled Doris. He was biting his lips nervously. His jaw twisted unpleasantly. "What's the matter?" said Doris in astonishment. Rocky held out his hand. "Good-night," he said in a businesslike tone. As the door closed behind him tears sprang to her eyes. He had been so— not exactly unfriendly—but so matter of fact. She hardly knew what she had expected him to do. But certainly she had not looked for this abrupt impersonal good-by. She crept between the sheets for-lornly. The sun was streaming in her room when she woke. Beatrice was stand-ing beside her with a loaded tray. "It's ten o'clock," smiled Beatrice, "and I thought you might be hungry." Doris sat up, opening and closing her eyes. They still smarted from the strain of her long drive. "Oh, You're nice to bring up this—but aren't you terribly busy?" "Busy calming the maids. You'd think each individual one was being married herself!" "Has Rocky gone?" "Yes, quite early—I have to run now. But I brought you this." She gave Doris the morning paper. Doris read it as she drank her coffee. At first she didn't notice the story though it was on the front page. Then the name "Diane Merrell" caught her eyes. She set down her cup with a gasp. It was a double column heading on the front page of a New York morning paper. Some young reporter had done his best to make a humorous incident out of the stopping of Mrs. Rockwell Du Val on the road to Rockwell St. Garden's house. The story was sym-pathetic to Doris and Rocky. Lacking a picture of young Mrs. Rocky Du Val, they had printed one of Oscar Du Val, who had the caption, "Son's wife taken in false arrest." Doris read it through twice. It would have been a good story—a good on the police—if only she had Mrs. Rocky Du Val. finished her breakfast slowly. The end of the story was a para-graph which said that Mrs. Du Val was the fourth wrong Diane Merrell to have been discovered. "Why couldn't one of those girls have been Diane Merrell instead of me?" she thought as she got out of bed. She would ask Beatrice to get her some old newspapers. She would like to read about Diane Merrell. She was bathed and dressed when Beatrice came back. "I'm afraid I've been a long time, but there's such a lot to do." There was a busy little frown on her broad brow. "I wonder, Beatrice, if you could dig up some old newspapers for me to read—" "Of course." They went downstairs together to Beatrice's pretty little room, done in flowered chintz. "This has been my own special place since I was sixteen," said Beatrice. "I'm sure there are some newspapers in the basement. I'll send them up." A few minutes later, an elderly maid came in and put down a huge pile of old newspapers on the table. Doris rose unsteadily. She felt a little faint as she put out her hands to touch them. Here lay her own story—or did it? Would she have the courage to read it? The first paper was recent, and yielded nothing. As she continued her search with a beating heart, she came upon great glaring headlines: "Shoots Groom After Wedding. So-cietly Girl Kills New Husband and Dis-appears. Note Found." She read feverishly. She had been married at an afternoon wedding on May 19 to a man named Howard Val-ery. Immediately after the wedding reception, which had been at her fa-ther's home, she had gone out by a side door where her own motor was parked, loaded with her luggage. The groom had been with her. As they were about to step into the car she had shot him, and driven away. As she read, a stronger and stronger feeling of antipathy for this girl Diane Merrell developed. Was it possible that she had ever been a girl capable of all this? She was a heartless, cold-blooded criminal. For the note proved that the crime had been premeditated. She studied the note again. It had been found in the pocket of the poor boy whose body was discovered sprawled against a flowering lilac bush. It read: HOWARD: This marriage can't go on—it cannot. You must be crazy. I don't want to kill you. Do something about it for heaven's sake. D. Could any girl have written such a note and forgotten it? Surely, surely if she were Diane Merrell, she would remember something now. But not a faint glimmer of recollection enlight-ened her. Could it be that she had two sides to her nature, and that that other, darker side was hidden from her now, sleeping quietly? Some day it might wake again, and she would find her-self a killer. She would be capable of shooting somebody she loved—capable of shooting Rocky. She was sick and frightened. She lay at full length on the gently sway-ing couch. Then she propped her head on her hands and took up another paper. Diane Merrell had driven herself to New York. Her car had been found parked on Forty-sixth street the day after the murder. She saw a large picture of herself. Yes, it looked very like her. There was no doubt about that. She went back to her reading. There was a description of the wedding. It brought back nothing at all. Doris tried not to think any more about Diane Merrell. Surely Rocky would discover something that would help her. He must be nearing Mor-ristown by now. She went to bed early. The next afternoon would bring Rocky back. That would have to settle her fate. Now she felt numb and exhausted. In spite of everything she slept.

CHAPTER X

Rocky did not come the next after-noon. Instead came a telegram say-ing that he was catching a train that night and would arrive Saturday morn-ing. That would be the day of the wed-ding. Doris had developed a streak of hopefulness. Rocky would have un-raveled some clue, and would bring back the miraculous news that she was not Diane Merrell. Or he would have discovered that Howard Valery had not been killed, or that he had committed suicide. No, that would not do. The experts said that that was impossible. She remembered read-ing that. Besides, Diane had left a note. But how stupid she had been to put down on paper such an inten-tion and then to carry it out, leaving the note for the police to find. Of course she hadn't meant it for the police. Friday passed in a stew of specula-tion. She woke at dawn next morn-ing with a heavy heart. After breakfast she waited on the little porch beside the sitting room for Rocky. Her feeling of uncertainty deepened. After all, if she was Diane Merrell what could Rocky do for her? Whatever happened, a long life of loneliness stretched before her; that, or death. "Mrs. Du Val sees no one." It was Mary's voice.

her that. "The doctor's orders are that Mrs. Du Val cannot see anyone." "I told her. But she won't listen." Doris started to her feet. Who could be wanting to see her? Was it Rocky? No, it was a woman. As she hesitated, she heard Beatrice come in to the sit-ting room. A new voice said loudly: "But I'm going to see her." Where had she heard that voice be-fore—a strong husky girl's voice? "Believe me," the voice went on, "you'd better not try to stop me if you know what's good for you." Doris peeked in. The girl was some-one she had seen before—a brown-eyed girl in a tailored suit of green linen. Doris had seen her before—but where? "Pleatry of good reasons—" "Whom did you wish to see?" Beatrice was speaking in a crisp im-personal tone. "I want to see the girl calling her-self Mrs. Rockwell Du Val." The girl eyed Beatrice, unimpressed by the lack of cordiality in her manner. "Plenty of good reasons why she don't want to see me I know—" "Then why do you try—" "Plenty more why she'd better." Doris recognized her. She was the girl she had seen at the clam stand—the friend of the real Doris. Rocky had called her Molly. The big brown eyes looked full of de-termination. She was looking Beatrice full in the face belligerently. "There's no use trying to high-hat me. Are you Mrs. Du Val?" "No," said Beatrice quietly. "I thought you weren't. I have an idea who she is. And I intend to go through every room in this house to find her if I have to." The quiet youthful voice of Beatrice was in marked contrast to Molly's in-sistent tones. "Won't you sit down and tell me what it is you want to see Mrs. Du Val about?" "That's my business," said Molly sul-ly. "Supposing you tell it to me." "Like b—I I will." "Then I'm afraid you can't see her." Molly's tone held a jeer. "Oh yeah? Well, supposing I tell you I'm a friend of the real Mrs. Du Val?" Beatrice said nothing. "That gets you, doesn't it? Now perhaps you'll understand why I want to take a squint at the girl who is palming herself off as Doris Du Val." "I'm afraid I don't," said Beatrice quietly. "How did you find out about this?" "Doris saw it in the papers. Mrs. Du Val arrested. And that made her wonder, as the saying goes. 'She sent me a wire.'" "You are here then as Mrs. Du Val's agent? Am I to understand that?" Molly sat down and crossed her legs. "Yeah. That's about it." "Where is Mrs. Du Val?" "That's my business, too." "Rocky said that Doris had left him. Do you know where she is?" "Supposing I do?" "Does Doris want to get Rocky to come back to her?" Molly disdainfully inserted her tongue between opened lips and blew vigorously. "H—I, no," she remarked when she had finished the exercise. "I'm sorry. I don't quite under-stand." Molly, searching in the untidy depths of her very large hand-bag, brought out a paper package of cig-arettes. "Gee, I've smoked my last one." She crumpled the bright green wrapper in her fist. "Have you got one?" Beatrice rose and handed her a sil-ver box filled with the small white cylinders. Molly seemed cheered as she lit her cigarette, and much more favorably impressed with Beatrice. "Tell you how it is—this is just between you and I, of course—but Doris wants me to astonishment showed in Beatrice's breathless "Dicker? Financially? Do you mean that Mrs. Du Val wants to get a divorce from Rocky?" "That's it. I knew you'd get it. I knew you'd get it." "But—I should think that would be a private matter for her to discuss with Rocky." Molly blew a smoke ring very care-fully. This done, she looked at Beatrice pityingly. "You look like a girl who would think a thing like that." "I am awfully sorry. I'm afraid you'll think I'm a bit stupid. But what financial transactions are you talking about?" "In a couple of words, baby; all-mony." "Allimony?" Doris could not stand any more. She stepped out from behind the cur-tains. "I'd like to say a word or two." Beatrice rose. Her face was horri-fied. Molly's big brown eyes half closed in a veiled, critical stare. "I thought you'd turn out to be the girl. I wrote Doris about meeting you down among the clams. And was she pleased? She's been trying to get something like that on Rocky for months! The Du Val's have got plenty, and she'll take a big cash settlement, and that will be the end. You know—she's willing to be big—" Doris was seething. She clenched her hands together and spoke with difficulty. "I have nothing to do with all this." "Oh now, what's the use of taking that attitude? Some girls wouldn't be generous like Doris. With what she's got on you now—she could get all-mony for the rest of her life—see? But she won't—say listen, Girlie, you're in the movies, aren't you?" "Of course I'm not."

COPPER-COLOR SLIPPERS

By Alice Duane

LEE HARLEY sold shoes in Stone and Bumsted's basement. It wasn't a very interesting job, perhaps. Cheap shoes. An anxious, bargain-hunting crowd. Not a very pleasant combination on Saturday afternoon. But Lee was young and pretty and, in one way and another, she found life very well worth the living. She was an orphan, and was alone in the big city. But she had a most congenial sort of home with Mrs. Flannagan—a motherly woman whose children were all grown up and in homes of their own and who, to fill her time and her pocketbook, rented rooms and served meals to six or eight young shoppers. This sort of home was a lot more to Lee's liking than renting a room, without meals, and cooking for your-self. It was something like the old style boarding house—where the boarders kept tabs on each other and where the—in this case kindly—landlady dominated over everybody's destinies. Mrs. Flannagan didn't need to charge high rates to make both ends meet nicely. As she said to one of her married daughters who protested at the work she did; "I'd keep the house going anyway, darling, and still be out of debt on what your father left me." "But with what they pay me, I've enough and to spare for lots of pleas-ures." "All they actually cost me is their food, and maybe a bit here and there for lights and what-not." So she gave them good food and plenty of "lights and what-not" for a figure that didn't eat up all their salar-ies. As a consequence the girls who found a place at Mrs. Flannagan's were indeed lucky. On the Saturday afternoon of our story, Lee was hoping for closing time. Not because she was doing anything very exciting that night. Nor the next day, for that matter. But because of the copper-color slipper. Once in a while a pair of really good shoes found their way down-stairs from the third floor shoe de-partment to the basement of Stone and Bumsted's. Slightly soiled or shopworn, they were not quite right for the regular department. They were thrown in with their cheaper sisters in the bargain basement. Like a refuge princess, perhaps, buf-feted by fortune into humble life, where she must rub elbows, or heels, with those of lesser origin. The copper-color slippers had come down while Lee was at lunch. She had found them on the table of "fives," marked $2.98, when she came back to the floor. Lee had recognized their quality at once. Their soft finish, their fine luster, their delicate lines—all proclaimed the right to expect a better place in life than Stone and Bumsted's bargain basement. There was a rule at Stone and Bumsted's department store which extended to the salespeople the privilege of buying anything they chose in the store on Monday mornings before the establishment opened for regular busi-ness. As soon as Lee laid eyes on those shoes she decided to get them the following Monday morning before they were grabbed up by one of the usual horde of bargain-seeking customers. She was making a dress—the girls sewed together, sometimes, in Mrs. Flannagan's big bedroom, using her sewing machine and asking her help—to wear to the big Stone and Bumsted employees' dance the following Saturday evening. And the half-finished dress would be made perfect, Lee knew, if she had those slippers. Without admitting to herself that she was doing it, Lee placed the cop-per-color slippers under some others. And all through the busy, trying after-noon she found time to look occa-sionally to see that they hadn't been sold. As the hours passed and a dull gleam told her harried eyes that the slippers were still on their counter, her heart lightened. Twenty minutes to closing time. And then the blow fell. "Oh," said a breathless, sweet voice in her ear, "could you wait on me? I've found just what I've been looking for. Just the shade. Look." Premonition in her heart, Lee whirled around. She faced a girl about her age and size. But a girl dressed in clothes that betokened luxury and wealth. In her white-gloved hands she held the copper-color slippers. If she had been poor, perhaps Lee would not have minded so much. But this girl—this girl could pay $25 for slippers, thought Lee, and not know it. But she dropped to her knees be-fore one of the crowded chairs and carefully tried the shoes on the girl's shapely foot. They fitted, perfectly. Lee took the girl's $3—three crisp one dollar bills—and walked wearily toward the wrappers' desk. And she couldn't help it—her eyes were blinded with tears she couldn't keep back. She collided with a good looking young man blocking the aisle.

"You see, the slippers," questioned the young man, puzzled. He smiled at Lee. "Oh, I see, the slippers." He stooped to get them from the floor where they had fallen when Lee collided with him. "It's I who should be sorry, I am—it was awkward of me to be stand-ing—" He stopped, looking searchingly at Lee. "Why, what on earth's the matter? The slippers aren't hurt, are they? You're—" Lee nodded miserable nega-tive. "No—they're not hurt. I'm sorry. Excuse me, I have a customer waiting." And she tried to push past him. But the substantial young man blocked her way, purposely, how. "Then what is it? Because I want to know. Do they—is anything here cross or unjust?" He had taken off his hat. Lee liked his steady brown eyes, his thick, straight, rather stiff hair. He looked kind and understanding, and for a moment she thought of tell-ing him about her disappointment. But she quickly put on her most pro-fessional salesgirl manner—the man-ner she knew would get her promoted upstairs before very long. "It's quite all right," she said a little stiffly. "Everybody here is very kind and just. Pardon me, please." "Get your package and change and then come back here," said the young man in a voice of authority. And without reasoning why she did so, Lee obeyed him. Then he got the story out of her. But not until he had told Lee he was young Bert Bumsted, and then only because he would have blamed her tears on unkind treatment from other salespeople or department heads if she hadn't told him. Bert's face was smiling when she got through. "Why that's all right," he said. "You see, one of my jobs is going about seeing that everybody is being well treated—the employees, I mean. You're new, so you hadn't seen me here before—and I don't advertise my identity. I'd rather people didn't know me, of course; makes it easier to get at what's really happening. But say, isn't it funny? I was just up in the regular shoe department and I saw another pair of those shoes ready to come down here. What size were those?" "Five B," murmured Lee. "Yep. Same size," and without more words Bert Bumsted disappeared. He was back ten minutes later, a little breathless, but flushed with pleasure. Under his arm was a box, with the coveted slippers inside. Lee knew then—well, she knew the cop-per-color slippers Bert brought her—for which he solemnly took three crumpled one dollar bills from her re-turning two cents to her in change—were not damaged, to be sold in the bargain basement. But she knew, too, that the spirit that prompted Bert's kindness was something too fine to be harmed by trivial objections. She accepted the slippers quietly, almost solemnly. But she gave Bert a sweet, shy smile as she left him that made the crowded, close basement seem like paradise in springtime to him. Three months later the newspapers carried photographs of young Mrs. and Mrs. Bertrand Bumsted, Jr. It might have been noticed by dis-criminating critic—in the shoe de-partment that the bride, pictured in a soft and becoming afternoon dress, wore a pair of slightly worn but very pretty evening slippers. But perhaps nobody noticed. Such a radiant smile gleamed on young Mrs. Bumsted's pretty face, and such a look of happiness glowed on her husband's, that it would have been a captious critic indeed who could have criticized her shoes.

Good Resolution for 1934

It's early yet for New Year resolutions, but here's one worth considering—"I'll do my part to reduce fire waste in 1934."

If a hundred million Americans did resolve that, and didn't drop it along about the second week of January with the resolution concerning smoking, the nation would have a splendid start toward winning a difficult and ancient fight. We have long been the most prodigal of people when it comes to fire. We've sacrificed thousands of lives and millions of dollars to it—precisely as the people of the pre-Christian era sacrificed their victims to the god of flame. In these days the reason was superstition—in ours it is a combination of ignorance and laziness. And one is as reprehensible as the other.

Fires mean high tax rates. They mean destroyed jobs and opportunities. They mean bankruptcy and privation and want. They mean terror and misery and disaster. They mean stultification and despair. They've ruined whole communities. Their total economic waste can't be expressed accurately in figures—the direct loss comes between four and five hundred million a year, and the indirect waste is several times as great.

Conquering fire in 1934 would give recovery a mighty impetus. It would save jobs and payrolls and homes and farms and producing industries. It would keep money at work that would otherwise be destroyed and made useless. Make that resolution!

CLEAR CIDER MORE PROFITABLE

A PROFIT of at least $10 could be added to the income from the 100 gallons of apple cider which is made on the average farm if the fruit juice was clarified.

The truth of this statement is borne out in the experience of farmers who have been using the homemade filter recently developed in Michigan. The filter, costing little more to make, has revolutionized the production of apple cider wherever the clarified juice has been of benefit to the public.

Experts and fruit growers agree that clear apple juice is a better product to market, and the farmer responding as they have it has been placed on sale at roadside markets, retail stores and restaurants, there is an opportunity greatly increasing the consumption of this pure fruit beverage.

While clear cider is not a new drink from a commercial standpoint, farm production has been limited to the larger orchards because of the cost of machinery. The homemade device for producing quality apple cider gives the farmer, who can contact the public or retail outlets, a chance to turn low grade fruit into a nice profit.

Experiments with consumer demand show that apples which were otherwise unmarketable or saleable for more than 10 to 15 cents a bushel, grossed 90 cents to $1.50 a bushel as cider, basing the yield on 3 1/2 gallons to the bushel of apples. And the cost of producing the clear cider is around 10 cents a gallon, everything considered.

Clear cider is easy to make. Apples are pressed in the usual manner and the juice treated with a chemical called pectinol. It is an enzyme which breaks down the colloidal matter or pulp. The mixture is allowed to remain overnight, the exact time depending upon the temperature, ripeness of the apples and the amount of pectinol used. The process can be speeded up or retarded, as desired.

Shortly before the cider is placed in the supply tank, a filtering agent called hyflo is added. It is an absorbing agent like Spanish clay and other such materials, which catches the sediment and permits the clear juice to flow.

The filtering device consists of a barrel, five feet of garden hose, a muslin tube inside of a cylinder of copper fly screen. The hyflo settles in the muslin tube and the juice from the barrel or supply tank, hoisted five to six feet, flows through it. The tube, by the way, is rested in a wooden trough somewhat similar to that used for feeding hogs.

The accompanying sketch shows the filterer. Everything, including the barrel or tank, unless it is bought new, should not cost much more than $1, and it will last a lifetime. The device and parts should be thoroughly cleaned after use.

Farmers who have been making and selling clear cider report an unusual demand, some marketing 100 gallons a day at 50 to 75 cents a gallon, with ordinary cider, on adjoining farms and roadside markets, finding slow sale even at 25 cents a gallon. Where both clear and ordinary cider have been offered, consumers have expressed an exclusive desire for the clear juice, even though it costs more.

Something new in farm products, processing clear cider has an advertising advantage. Consumers are anxious to see how it is made, and progressive producers have been making it a practice to do the job in public and on certain days which are announced before hand, to which the public are invited.

Farmers who have no direct selling opportunities have found city retailers willing to handle and display clear cider where they will not bother with the ordinary fruit juice. And where clear cider has been placed in restaurants to get public reaction, sales not only have been larger but the price higher. In one restaurant, diners mistook it for tea because of its clearness.

In addition to clarifying apple cider, the new homemade device can be used on other fruit juices, kraut juice, and in making vinegar, all products which consumers will buy direct from the farmer.

ving Style to One's Old Frock

Slight Changes Frequently Can Bring It Strictly Into Fashion.

Putting touches to frocks so that they are in the latest fashion can often be done by the woman herself without the aid of a dressmaker. In order to make the least possible work of this renovating, the frocks should be carefully studied to see how to economize labor without sacrificing results. Fortunately, styles this season offer opportunities for making the most of last year's gowns by slightly changing them. Much attention is paid to shoulders and sleeves, and organdie remains a dainty material for accessories to a costume. Without entering into the field of the costumer or couturier, some suggestions for home alterations are given today.

Units to be combined as the worker wishes can be bought in organdie. It is possible to assemble these ready-to-use units in numerous ways. For example, a set of petal collar and cuffs can be fashioned from ready-made petals. These will give a novelty note to a dress which requires some such touches to bring it up to date. A crisp organdie bouquet assembled from blossom-petal and foliage-leaves can give a final note to the corsage with or without the set just described. Belts and bows and cuffs and wide collars or organdie to harmonize with the color of a dress can be added to one's wardrobe. Or the accessories can be of any preferred material which does not call for laundry work. There are silks and satins and novelty goods which are excellent for such purposes.

To give the broad shoulders which have come after a lapse of many years, various methods can be called into service. If there is enough textile left from a frock, it can be made into epaulets or ruffles to form shoulder caps for sleeves. Should there be no material, substitute silk or satin to match a cloth frock, or velvet for a silk or satin dress. Make a belt to match, and cuffs, and these ensemble. A frock which has seemed a bit out of style, with touches, which take but a very little while to make, can be refashioned to accord with new fashions.

Sleeves can be altered by using contrasting material either in the shade of the dress or in contrast to it. Fullness is almost essential somewhere, either at shoulder, elbow, or lower arm. Puffs and ruffles can be inserted or let into plain sleeves successfully.

A deep collar, of bertha, which is made so wide it extends beyond the shoulders, will give the broad shoulders so fashionable.

Washday Satisfaction

Housewives everywhere will recognize the truth of these remarks, on an important subject, by the well-known domestic economist, Ruby Baker:

"The weekly wash is an important event in many a household. And while nobody can honestly say wash-day is a picnic, it is a satisfaction to hang out lines of snowy-white clothes—and watch them flapping gayly in the sunshine.

"By the same token, it's disappointing to hang out clothes that look foggy and dull. Many a woman, though she tries and tries, can't get a wash to please her.

"Did you know that the quality of soap has a lot to do with the success of a wash? Good quality means good ingredients—more cleaning power—greater washing ability. A good soap gets dirt out easier—and gets it all out. It gets clothes cleaner, and that means whiter."
