VISITS SCHOOLS

Deputy State Supt. J. D. Wilson of Canyon inspected the Hedley schools Monday, and made a very favorable report on their condition. New credits were granted as follows: Music, 1 unit; Texas History, 1 unit; English 4, 1 unit; 2 units in Spanish were restored. The Hedley high school now has 25 1/2 affiliated units.

BASKETBALL TOURNAMENT

A rural school basketball tournament was held at Lella Lake last week end, according to Sid Thomas, director. Giles won the senior and junior boys games and Lella Lake won the senior and junior girls.

BOX SUPPER

The basketball girls gave a box supper at the high school auditorium last Friday night, which was attended by a large crowd. The entertainment was given to pay for trophies.

WIFADADOS CLUB

The Wifadados club met March 24 with Mrs. O. A. Mann. Nine members attended and had an interesting program on gardening, exchange ideas, experiences and observations, which were really helpful.

The next meeting will be April 14 with Mrs. Ralph Moreman. Subject, vegetables in the diet. Leader, Mrs. Maness.

Roll call, vegetable I like best.

Kinda of vegetables grown here, Mrs. Swinney.

Cooked vegetables, Mrs. Hall.

All will meet at the Methodist Church at 2:30 where conveyances will take all who can go to the meeting. Since it's gardening time let's make this meeting worth while.

Getting It Right

A grubby urchin walked into the men's outfitting department of a large store.

Addressing an assistant, he said: "A soft man's collar, please!"

The other assistants tittered and the one addressed said stiffly: "You mean a man's soft collar, my boy!"

Pointing to his own collar, he asked: "Do you mean one like this?"

The boy eyed it momentarily. Then he replied: "No! A clean one."

PATTERN 5297

The old-time well—the bucket hanging there, just waiting to be embroidered in its natural setting. And what a lovely and colorful wall-hanging you'll have when finished! You can use as many bright threads as fancy dictates when you begin to "paint" the old-fashioned garden in lazy-daisy, French knots, running and single stitch. And you needn't frame the panel—just line it, and hang it up.

In pattern 5297 you will find a transfer pattern of a wall hanging 15 by 20 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches needed; directions for finishing wall hanging.

Are some SEEDS more intelligent than others?

Maybe you think it impossible to breed vegetable and flower seeds that know how to grow. Well, it isn't! For that's exactly what The Ferry-Morse Seed Breeding Institute is doing at its stations in Rochester, Mich., and Salinas, California.

Cucumbers eight inches long—no more, no less; solid red beets; carrots that are practically coreless; rust-resistant snapdragons. Just a few of our achievements!

Year-in, year-out, new strains, adapted to varying soil and climate conditions, are being developed... existing quality is being improved and protected. After thorough tests for germination and purity, progeny of the foundation stocks is offered for planting in your garden. You'll find them listed in your free copy of our Home Garden Catalog.

THE TEXAS RANGERS

By Theresa Bain

When Texas revolted in 1835, a general council met, and as a part of its work, organized the first Ranger force. This organization consisted of three companies of twenty five each. One was to range east of the Trinity, one between the Trinity and the Brazos and the third between the Brazos and the Colorado.
The Rangers were to serve solely as a protection against the Indians. Their pay was $1.25 per day.

Texas consists of two well defined areas—the plains and the timbered regions. The Indians of these two sections were in constant strife. The Rangers were kept busy keeping white people out of the devastating path of the hostile and war mad Indians. Sam Houston said
"Give me one hundred Rangers and we'll drive all hostile Indians from Texas!"

The Rangers were used during the Revolution to protect the state against border raids and against plundering Indians. Many of them fought valiantly with Taylor in the Mexican War.

With the gradual restoration of order and peace, Rangers were no longer needed; therefore they disbanded. During the Civil War and immediately after, the Rangers were once more organized to aid the government.

During the dark gloomy days of the Reconstruction Period, the Rangers were helpful to those who were in danger or distress.
The present force of Rangers is five companies, consisting of about 175 men in all.

The Rangers were semi-military in character. They were unorganized and undisciplined, but they were quick minded, brave, and had a deadly aim. The most common clothing of the Rangers was either buckskin or sheepskin. They wore a wide-brimmed hat and large boots. The Ranger usually carried a rifle, a six-shooter, a bowie knife, and a rope. The first to be shot was the six-shooter.

In short, the Texas Rangers pushed the Indians farther westward, suppressed lawlessness and crime, and made Texas a better place in which to live.

New Treaty Emphasizes Isthmian Sovereignty; Paves Way for Western Hemisphere Peace Parley This Summer.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

AN ENTIRE new era of permanent peace and "good-neighborliness" may be opened up between the countries on the two American continents when and if the senate ratifies the new treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama which was signed in March.

Old differences which have existed between America and her isthmian neighbor for a third of a century have been ironed out to a great extent by the new pact. To heartening has been the news of the new document through the Latin Americas generally, it is believed that the proposed "extraordinary conference" between 21 republics of the Western Hemisphere this summer will be assured.

Shortly after the start of the year President Roosevelt voiced a suggestion that a conference of these republics be held, to work out means of assuring for all time the peaceful relations that now exist between the United States and the countries of South and Central America. Since it never began to appear that in the negotiations with Panama that the United States was exhibiting a liberal attitude that had been largely absent in former bickerings (which have been going on since 1903), many messages of approval from other governments have been understood to have been received in Washington.

Conference Looms Likely.
None of the replies to the President's suggestion have been made public at the time of this writing, but in governmental circles it is considered virtually certain that the peace conference will take place this summer in Buenos Aires.

The attitude of Panama, as well as that of several other Latin-American States was ready to loosen a little came in October, 1933, when President Roosevelt and President Arias of Panama conversed in Washington. It was there that the plans were laid for the new treaty, which is characteristic of the administration's policy of liberal treaties and free trade. The exact terms of the new pact have never been released to the newspapers, but it is known that the theme underlying the entire document is the renunciation of the misconception that Panama is a protectorate of the United States.

Points of Accord.

Actually, the changes brought about by the new treaty will be paper ones, largely, with the exceptions of an agreement to construct a new highway across the isthmus and of certain commercial concessions by the United States. Should the time ever come when Panama's independence needed protection the job would more than likely fall to Uncle Sam for Panama has no army, merely a police force trained by American officers.

United States was to have jurisdiction over the ten-mile-wide strip that is the Canal Zone, and would possess and exercise all rights just as it would "if it were the sovereign of the territory." The confusion arising from this clause is not hard to understand. For many years Panamanians have felt that it gave the United States sovereign power; and in the Pan-American conference at Havana in 1928 the Panamanian delegate, Dr. Alfredo J. Alfaro, strenuously objected when it was intimated that this was the truth. It was he who signed the new treaty for Panama, where he expects to run for president in 1937.

U. S. Must Buy Land.

Under the old treaty the United States could acquire by right of eminent domain lands and waters outside the Canal Zone "which may be necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation and protection" of the canal. Technically, of course, this could have been regarded as giving the United States the right to take over any territory in the isthmian republic. Such a "lien" could hardly allow the nation a clear title to its own property, and certainly would have made territorial agreements with other nations embarrassing. The new arrangement takes away the United States' right to acquire territory by condemnation, but gives Uncle Sam the right to acquire it by purchase.

At present the Panamanian city of Colon is separated from the rest of the republic by the Canal Zone, but the new treaty provides a corridor of connection across the zone.

By the treaty of 1903, the Panama Railway company, whose shares are owned entirely by the United States government, was given the sole right of communication across the isthmus. Panama itself was forbidden to build an automobile highway to cover the 47 miles from Panama City to Colon; under the new treaty, such a highway will be constructed.

The railway company has been operating commissaries along its right of way; these were originally intended to serve only American employees, but Panama merchants claim the commissaries have been doing a thriving tourist business and want the business themselves. Now they will get it.

Terminate Gold Payment.

Now that the American dollar has been devalued, the treaty will allow the United States to make its annual payments to Panama in balboas, the Panamanian unit of currency. Instead of in gold coins. The 490,000 balboas which constitute the annual payment are worth a little more than the $250,000 in gold formerly paid every year.

To date it has not become known what the United States army and navy think of the new pact, but this will come out when it is placed before the senate for ratification. It can be construed as weakening American control over the canal, and for that reason may fail to make the grade.

The Navy department, under the new agreement, already has turned over two radio stations to the Panama government, and new agreements for the regulation of radio communication have been reached.

May Remove Customs Collector.

The United States still maintains a collector of customs in the Dominican republic, to assure that the Dominican debt to this country is properly serviced. This officer is something of an irritation to the citizens there.

When the conference of American nations gets under way this summer, there is little likelihood that the purposes of preserving the peace will be carried so far as to establish a "league of nations" for the western hemisphere. What is more likely is a joint treaty which all nations can rely on to aid settlement of disputes.

Any agency so created would probably be given the right to investigate the causes of disputes, to try to effect conciliations and, if necessary, to sit as a board of arbitration. It is improbable that any real instrument, such as sanctions, for enforcing decisions will be agreed upon.

© Western Newspaper Union.

countries toward the United States has, for the last two or three decades, been something similar to that of the strapping youth who feels that he is being "mised" altogether too closely by his older brother, when he is perfectly able now to look after his own interests. The Roosevelt administration evidently feels this attitude is justified, it appears from the provisions of the new treaty.

Three points, particularly, have always been sore spots in the relations of the United States and Panama. They grew out of the agreement of 1903, under which the United States constructed the Panama canal, and they are:

Our right to intervene when necessary to preserve the peace in Panama, our exercise of the right of eminent domain in acquiring auxiliary lands, and our guarantee of Panama's independence. It is this latter provision which has been the most provocative of "little brother" objections; Panama citizens have always regarded this assumed guaranty of their independence as an outright statement of protectorate.

Although the new treaty is the third attempt to straighten out the differences between the two nations it is the first which has not been a dodge of these three points.

The first attempt was a series of five executive orders, known as the "Taft agreement," which was intended to interpret the original treaty of 1903. It went into effect in December, 1904. By May, 1924, it was decided that the real effectiveness of this expedient had disappeared with the completion of the canal, and the agreement was abrogated.

1926 Pact Fails.

For two years the diplomats of the two countries bargained and in July, 1926, a new treaty, intended to be permanent, was signed. But when it came up for ratification in the Panamanian assembly, it went down under a deluge of adverse votes. It had failed even to mention the points of sovereignty, possession of land and paternalism which for 23 years had so grated upon the Panamanian soul. Not only did the real hard feelings develop between the United States and Panama, but other Latin-American countries openly threw their sympathies with Panama.

First indications that the United

The new agreement was consummated under the principle that the protection and operation of the canal is vital to the interests of both nations, and can best be assured through friendly co-operation. The accord reached in 1933, and which it is reasonable to suppose is contained in the treaty, embodies the following chief points:

The United States will use, occupy and control the Canal zone only for the purpose of maintenance, operation, sanitation and protection of the canal. Panama is recognized as the sovereign nation, and as such is entitled to enjoy whatever commercial advantages its juxtaposition with the canal shall bring it, provided that these do not prejudice the purposes of the operation of the canal zone by the United States.

Economic questions which do not in any way affect those purposes may, if they cannot be solved through direct negotiation, be submitted to arbitration. The original treaty held that while Panama was the sovereign nation, the

THOSE awards made by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences are still causing violent debates all over Hollywood. Executives of the Screen Actors Guild and the Screen Writers Guild telegraphed the members the day before the awards were made, urging them not to attend the presentation banquet. They charged that the academy is producer-controlled, and that studio politics controlled the giving of the awards.

Of course the Academy heads denied that, and the battle has been on ever since. It is claimed that Bette Davis was given the prize for the best performance given by a woman during the year, not because of her work in "Dangerous," but because she didn't get the award last year for her performance in "Of Human Bondage." It is urged that Victor McLaglen, who won the prize for the men, gave just one good performance, in "The Informer," whereas Charles Laughton and Paul Muni each gave several. In fact, there are arguments about everything but that belated award of D. W. Griffith for his work in the days before there was any Academy. People wept when Henry Walthall introduced D. W.

They're rewriting Ken Maynard's new picture, because the lioness who acted in it was killed recently. (You may have seen her in "Sequoia.") The company was on location, and the lioness went out for some exercise. In California there's a bounty of $80 on mountain lions, and a prospector thought this was just one more lion, and shot her.

If you want to go into the movies, you'll be interested in the news that several of the big companies are planning to develop their own actors, by establishing schools in New York. In fact, Paramount already has such a school, and RKO and Metro are thinking of following their example. It's all caused by the fact that the picture companies have not been able to recruit suitable players from the stage. They've scoured the field of vaudeville, radio, night clubs and college dramatic societies, and have concluded that training schools are the best solution of the problem.

Wait Disney has a school, too, devoted to training artists to animate the Disney pictures. Recently he advertised for help, and only fifty people out of the 1,700 who answered made the grade. Now he's advertising again. The candidates whom he accepts receive a small salary while they're learning the work, and then go on the pay roll as animators.

Randolph Scott, who went into pictures, not because he was stellar material, but because it looked like a good way to make a living, is to be starred in "The Last of the Mohicans."

John Boles had to cut short his personal appearance tour and rush back to Hollywood to be starred in "White Fang," incidentally, if you have to diet to keep your weight down John can sympathize with you. He starts the day by drinking lemon juice in hot water, and the big moment of dinner, for him, is two lamb chops.

Jean Harsholt gives such an excellent performance in "The Country Doctor" that his old contract was torn up and a new one, with the salary doubled, was given him.

Sunny O'Dea, who danced so well in Eddie Cantor's "Strike Me Pink" that she's headed for the top in pictures, still has to go to school in the studio, because she's not yet eighteen. The fact that she has already made a name for herself as a dancer in New York and London makes not the slightest difference.

Gary Cooper's wife, Sandra, who doesn't care for the movie spotlights, has made a reputation in spite of herself; she's known as one of the best dressed women in Hollywood. The other is Kay Francis.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Pauline Starke, whom some of you will remember from her movie days, is to be starred in a stage play. . . . Gross Moore doesn't want to make any more movies. . . . Mary Brian is back from England. . . . Jack Benny is thinking of really learning to play the violin—with Rubinfog as his teacher. . . . Never has Freddie Bartholomew given a more moving performance than in the sketch he did on the Rudy Vallee program recently. . . . Boshe Carter, news commentator, made 2,172 consecutive broadcasts—then he came down with the grippe, and had to miss one, and he'll never get over it.

Cottons and Linens Go Style-High

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

COMES SPRING! By the signs of the times in fashion's realm you know it. When the new cottons and linens announce their arrival and when to celebrate the event, merchants and style creators hold high carnival in the way of style-revealing previews, then be assured that spring is here no matter what the calendar and the calendar and the elements at large may have to say.

As a tonic that will revive jaded and winter-weary spirits like magic we know of none better than the new spring and summer fashions, created to refresh, crisp and dainty wash fabrics—the new prints, sheer and otherwise, the gloriously colorful rough cottons that tailor so beautifully and the exotic printed linens that bespeak India, Tahiti, and picturesque Tyrolean peasantry.

In the advance showings there is a cotton or linen for every occasion, sporty, tailored, formal or otherwise. Dresses, suits, ensembles for morning, for street, for afternoon wear, for dinner, dancing, active and spectator sports, all are included in the spring and summer parade of stylish cottons and linens. Children's fashions play a big part in the displays of spring and summer cottons and linens.

Front page news in regard to linens and cottons is they have gone that highbrow they have entered society in the form of lovely gowns as pretentiously styled as finest of silks and wools. Then, too, as media for smart tailored suits, cottons that are as handsome-looking as woolsens and linens (the new non-crush and non-wrinkle kind) are featuring big this season.

Outstanding among the new widely heralded fabrics are shantung, hand-blocked linens, printed piques, lace that lends itself to tailoring, blistered sheers, and rough cottons and countless other attractive washable weaves. Plaids, stripes, checks, gorgeous floral patterns and interesting geometric motifs often of leaf influence, go to make up vast print collections.

Color is literally on the rampage with the primary hues strongly evident and pastels retaining their importance. Designers express enthusiasm for dark monotonous with high-contrast. Brown, black, the darker greens and wine shades, are especially promoted as key colors. Two-piece suits with black skirts topped by bright colored or white jackets are expected to enjoy wide vogue during the coming months.

The attractive models pictured are positive proof that cottons and linens are going style high this season. This stunning suit of rough-surfaced plaid cotton and the frock of printed linen called forth much admiration from an enthusiastic audience who witnessed a most brilliant and dramatically staged revue and cotton carnival held recently in Chicago in the famous Merchandise Mart where it is claimed more floor space is devoted to merchandise and fashion interests than any other building in the world.

A dark blouse is worn with the plaid suit. The charming linen frock in navy with red and white checkings is enlivened with heavy bright red braid frog fasteners on the blouse, thus sounding a voguish military note.

PADLOCK AND KEY

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is the frock of your day dreams, a fitting theme for a happy spring-song. It is of rose colored linen with dark stitched linen belt. Despite the fact that it's leap year the young lady in the picture is taking no chances with her affections and so she puts a decorative padlock above her heart (see it on the clever pocket) and another on the corresponding pocket on her skirt. Then she tucks the key in her belt, as she models this smart frock in a preview of spring and summer styles introduced during a cotton and linen carnival held recently in Chicago at the Merchandise Mart.

Printed Slip
A gay printed slip to wear under a dark dress is just feminine enough to delight any woman. The print shows bright flowers on a black ground.

SPRING MILLINERY OF MANY PERIODS

New French millinery for advance spring fashions shows the influence of various period styles, according to recent reports from the Paris office of the Du Pont Style News Service. Hats reflecting the Flemish art are seen at several of the houses, the style being interpreted in different ways by leading designers.

The Chinese art and costume is especially apparent in creations by Agnes, who also favors the Abyssinian trend, finding inspiration for her triangular and pointed crowns in the Negus culture.

The strong influence of the Medici period and coiffure of the Reine Margot are themes which have been developed by Marie Alphonsine.

8 Basic Colors Adopted for Women's Fall Shoes

Eight basic colors for women's shoes have been officially adopted for fall, 1936, by the joint committee of tanners, shoe manufacturers and retailers in cooperation with the Textile Color Card association, it was announced by Margaret Hayden Torke, managing director of the association. High style shoe and leather colors will be selected later, it was stated.

Five of the colors have been repeated from recent seasons. They are maroon, marine blue, chadron, Oriental oxblood and Araby green. The three new colors, which have not been named as yet, consist of a ginger type of brown, a russet brown and a dark gray.

Paris Accessory Ideas

Paris is sending over grand accessory ideas, little things that can do so much for a costume. Mainbocher has colored head flower bouquets trimming the waistline of sheer black woolen frocks, while another house features frogs of supple metal in silver or gilt. Chessmen in metal dangle from the neckline of a smart frock, and Schiaparelli uses gold chains to hold up the trains of evening gowns when dancing.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Dough that has been kept in the refrigerator for several hours after it is molded should stand in a warm room for about twenty minutes before putting it into the oven.

To prevent diced fruits dropping to the bottom of a gelatin mold, chill fruits and add when gelatin mixture has partly congealed.

Discolored linoleums may be cleaned with alcohol. After cleaning allow them to dry thoroughly, then apply lacquer.

Orange juice mixed with confectioner's sugar and a little grated orange rind makes a very soft and delicious cake frosting.

Fat for deep frying is at the correct temperature when an inch cube of bread dropped in it becomes a golden brown in 90 seconds. This is for cooked mixtures.

Marinate fresh fruits to be used in salads as soon as they are cut or sprinkle them with lemon juice. This prevents discoloration.

Always keep salads on ice until it is time to serve them. They lose their flavor when exposed to heat.

If rugs lose their stiffness after cleansing and do not lie flat on the floor, a thin coat of white shellac applied to the back of rugs will stiffen them.

Some stucco walls may be washed with soap and water, but a coat of stucco sprayed over the whole surface is much more satisfactory than washing.

Synthetic Gentleman

By Channing Pollock

Copyright, Channing Pollock WNU Service. SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States.

"I hope not," the Duke replied, grinning broadly, and seeing that the four servants smiled, too—plainly surprised at the master's good humor.

"This is Evans, sir," the butler continued. "This is Mrs. Mulligan, Cook, sir. And Annie Jeffers, the parlor maid. If you don't mind, sir, I'll get them set, and then I'll come upstairs to report."

"Fine!" said the Duke, calculating that five minutes would get him into his clothes, and out the front door. He was climbing the steps again when Willetts called.

"I never thought, sir. Your bed isn't made. I'll get the linen out, and have Annie up there right away. You'll want a good fire in your room to dry things out."

"I've got a fire in the library," the Duke replied. "Don't hurry. I'm very comfortable."

They did hurry. He had scarcely got his trousers under the mattress when Annie appeared, just as he had seen her in the hall, and with a small load of immaculate sheets and pillow cases.

"Mr. Evans is lighting the furnace," she said. "The house is that cold. It's an oil-burner, Mr. Willetts says. I wonder you didn't think of it. But, of course, you're a stranger here, too."

"A stranger!" What did she mean by that? Where had he been, he wondered? Evidently, not home, at any rate. So that was why Willetts hadn't known he wasn't Mr. Ridder. Was Willetts new? The girl was on her knees at the hearth, and the Duke ventured half a question.

"Willetts isn't a stranger?" "Of course not," Annie replied. "Nor Mr. Evans. Just Mrs. Mulligan and me. We was taken on when Madam and Mr. Ridder expected to spend the summer here, and we'd've been let out, I guess, when they decided to go to Germany. If it hadn't been for your coming back."

"I picked just the right minute, didn't I?" grinned the Duke. "And 'You sure did!' grinned the parlor maid, spreading the linen over the arms of two chairs.

It was an amusing conversation, but it had been too long. Returning to the library, trousers still in hand, Barry Gilbert encountered the ubiquitous Willetts. "I'll take those, sir," said the butler, taking them.

"Oh, never mind!" "They'll need pressing." "I'll need them."

"They'll be ready for you in the morning," Willetts said, with a note of finality. "Did you bring any pyjamas, sir?"

Any lie would do for now. "Yes," answered the Duke, "but, like an idiot, I checked my suit-case, and God knows what happened to the check!"

"I'll get you a pair of your father's," Willetts volunteered. "You're very much of a size." He was taking stock of the new master. "Look like your father, if you don't mind my saying so, sir. Same figure. Same kind of face, only kinder, if you don't mind my saying so, sir."

The Duke didn't mind. It was all "a lucky break," only how long would it last? "Mustn't over-play my luck," thought the Duke. But the real Mr. Ridder "wasn't coming until tomorrow." Why make a break for it tonight? The storm was roaring, and throwing buckets of water against the windows.

The butler had gone into the bedroom, and returned with a pair of purple silk pyjamas. "Anything else, sir?" "No, thanks."

"I'll be leaving you then. There's a lot to do—getting the rooms ready for cook and the maid. They've never been here before. Don't know their way about. Evans don't neither. What time breakfast, sir?"

"Oh, say eight o'clock." "Right, sir. Good night, sir," said the butler, bowing himself out.

"Easy!" thought the Duke, standing before the fire, with the purple pyjamas in his hand. "Too easy! Too damned easy! There's a catch in it somewhere!"

Willetts implied that he had been with the family some time. Why had he never seen the son? Or even a picture of him? Why was he so willing to accept a stranger in the house at his own word—practically without question? Why did he take those questions? "I'm trapped," mused the Duke, "or else—"

Or else what? "Or else he's no more a butler than I am Mr. Ridder. How do I know what he is? There's a lot of mighty valuable junk in this house."

It was with that thought in his mind, and himself imagined in a new and exciting role, that His Grace of Hollywood flung the other cheek on an I. O. linen pillow slip, and dropped off to sleep.

The trousseau were beside his bed when he awoke. And all that cinema nonsense had evaporated from his mind.

Just "a lucky break." A good night's rest in a warm, dry house, whose owners had suddenly dashed off to Europe, leaving the establishment to a son who happened to be unknown to the servants.

"If I belonged in a house like this—"

He squared his shoulders, and sauntered down the carpeted stairs. No need of finishing the sentence. Already, he felt a new dignity; a new, stiffening self-respect. The trousers were neatly pressed, and "G. O. D morning, sir," said the butler, as he entered the breakfast room.

There was nothing "make shift" about the meal, Evans had been to town for cream, and bacon, and bread, and the Duke's courage rose with every sip of the steaming coffee.

"What's this?" he inquired, his eye falling on an envelope at his plate. "A letter for your mother, sir," Willetts replied. "It came after she'd left the hotel, and Evans got it when he went back for some things he was to bring out here. He forgot it last night, sir. Mrs. Ridder expected some mail from the employment agency, and places like that. She said you was to open it, sir."

Barry hesitated. He could feel a chilly something in the butler's gaze. Sooner than return the gaze, or evade it, he opened the envelope.

A hundred dollar bill dropped out. "Well, sir!" exclaimed the butler, any doubts he may have entertained lost in his surprise.

"Well," echoed the Duke, with that new courage born of the steaming coffee.

And so he'd come East, Ankle-deep in the sand, that morning at Southampton, he kept thinking of the letter he'd just burned. And of his own mother. He had missed her all through his childhood, watching the other boys with their mothers, or, at school in England, getting ready to go home to them. "I lost her," the old man had said, and never mentioned the matter again. Had she died in Algiers, in childbirth, or merely grown weary of wandering, and decided to stay somewhere with someone? "I'd like to find her," the Duke thought.

At noon Evans brought the car. "Do you know where we're going?" asked the Duke. "Yes, I'm taking you for a ride."

Almost surly, thought the Duke. And it had a sinister sound, that phrase. "You want to get lunch, don't you?" the chauffeur added, quickly.

"I want to see the end of the island. We can eat anywhere."

The Duke sank back into the cushioned seat. It gave him a curious sense of importance—being driven like this. Along the highway they sped.

The car was slowing down now, and, looking ahead, His Grace saw another limousine drawn up at the side of the road. Evans threw out the clutch, and then put his foot on the brake.

A husky young fellow in uniform was standing in front of the other car. Beside him was a spare, white-haired gentleman. And, framed in the car's doorway, ready to alight, stood a pretty girl.

"Stop," said the Duke, quite super-erogatorily, since they had stopped. She was the prettiest girl he had ever seen, the Duke decided. He had made the same decision many times before, but this time he felt it would be final. Tall and slim and dark, dressed in an ensemble of hunter's-green tweed, with a top coat to match, and a tiny felt hat perched upon her sleek black hair, she looked, somehow, like a thing turned out by an entirely perfect machine—trim, and polished, and built for speed. Her eyes were gray, the Duke was to discover later, and wide, and a little cold. Her nose was a straight line from her forehead, and her lips were bright red against the pale ivory of her face.

"Can I do anything for you?" inquired the Duke. He was standing before her now, and her glance took him in, calmly, appraisingly, before she answered, "No, thanks."

And with that, Barry felt, she erased him from the landscape. "Yes, you can," said the white-haired gentleman. "That is, if either of you knows anything about a car. My chauffeur doesn't."

"We'll be glad to try," the Duke said, cordially. "Have a look at it, will you, Evans?"

Suddenly, Evans walked over to the open hood. "It's the ignition," the other chauffeur told him. "Start her up."

"She won't start." The two men began fussing with the engine. "It's got to go," fumed the white-haired gentleman. "I haven't had a bite since breakfast, and I'm due in New York at five o'clock."

"Fussy myself," said the Duke. "Where did you mean to go?"

"It's Got to Go," Fumed the White-Haired Gentleman.

"Spelling good takahareneh," he called it, "because their papas are rich." From one of the longshoremen, Barry had discovered that he should have a mother. The old man had never mentioned it, so his son raised the question. "I lost her," his father said.

"How?" "In Algiers. You were born there." It was years before Barry was old enough to put the two things together. "Did she die when I was born?" he asked then, and got no answer.

This was in San Sebastian, where the old man worked for an engineering concern. Soon afterward, they pushed on to England, and short-lived prosperity. Barry went to school, for the first time, and found that he had learned more from his father than the other lads from their professors. That was fortunate, because the schooling lasted only a year before Barry—fifteen now—was taken to India. "I can't stand counting houses," his father had told him. "They've given us a berth in Calcutta."

It wasn't an upper berth, and it was in another counting house. "I met a fellow today," the elder Gilbert announced, "who's got something to do with the diamond mines. I think we'll go to Johannesburg. They didn't, because, a week later, the old man found another friend who suggested Manila. From there, it was only a step to Canton, and the tea business, and a shorter step to Hong Kong, where Francis Gilbert came home one night with a fever, and died the next morning."

Barry had begged a clerkship in Hong Kong, and then worked his way to San Francisco. On the boat was a movie director. "You've got a great smile," he told the youngster. "I think I can use you." Hollywood then, and one studio after another. Youth, and looks, and the ingratiating grin helped a lot there. And Barry learned a lot, too. How to wear clothes, and how gentlemen behaved—or Hollywood thought they behaved—in a drawing room. He was earning two hundred dollars a week, sometimes, when a wallet vanished from a coat thrown over a table "in the set." The Duke knew who took it. She was a poor little thing, though, and desperate, and His Grace kept his mouth shut. They couldn't pin it on him, he said, and they didn't, but there were no jobs after that.

By John Blake

There used to be in my school reader an old story of General Washington's encounter with a non-commissioned officer watching a squad of private soldiers at work.

He was a little fussy man, seated on a stone fence and calling out orders to the soldiers.

It was useful to get the road repaired as soon as possible. The troops were soon to pass that way. If the road was not in shape to be used safely by the artillery and cavalry the patriots might lose the opportunity to meet the enemy at the time specified by the high command.

General Washington rode up, sized up the situation, and spoke to the pompous non-com, inquiring why he did not take off his coat and help out with the work himself.

The corporal poked one of the soldiers with a stick, and then turned on the general, whom he did not recognize.

"Sir," he said, haughtily, "it is not for me to do such work. I am a corporal."

General Washington thereupon shed his coat, and picking up a stone went to work. Being a powerful man he was of great assistance and the job was soon done.

The corporal glanced at his negligently, and then feeling that something ought to be said, thanked him for his assistance and inquired his name.

"Washington," said the general quietly.

Looking more keenly at the visitor, the little fellow fell back, and probably would have fallen on his face had not the commander of the army stopped him.

"You need not apologize," added the general. "Only the next time work is to be done by your squad, bear a hand. It will help things along."

It was characteristic of Washington, as it is among very many great men, though not all of them, by a long shot, that he did not dwell on his own importance.

His job was the winning of the war. He lacked men and money. It was difficult, both to retreat when necessary or to advance when the opportunity offered.

In his later life Washington was dignified private citizen. But he never was afraid that his dignity would be lowered by playing a man's part when it need arose.

If nothing excites you or interests you particularly—outside of a game or a circus parade or an accident, you had better be on your guard.

Indifference was a curse long before Mr. Wordsworth wrote about the peasant to whom a primrose by the river's brim was just a flower.

If you can go through this life without getting excited now and then, you are in a bad way.

You have eyes which ought to see, and ears which ought to hear, and a mind which ought to think.

Employ these gifts only in the quest of bread and butter, and they will not be of much use to you.

This life ought to be profoundly intriguing, and now and then highly enjoyable.

Get all you can out of it while you are here.

Meet as many intelligent people as you can. See every big show that is to be seen, from a shower of meteors in the sky down to a circus parade.

Read every good book which you have time to read. If you put in enough time in reading, that will mean a great many books.

Read books that will teach you something, and which will enrich your life. Keep informed about what is going on in the world by reading newspapers, which are a daily record of present day progress.

Travel if you can. If you can't, read books about travel.

If you can get as excited about a new and useful scientific discovery as you do about a major football match, you are in a fair way to mental advancement.

Look around you at the mechanical miracles of the time, like airships and radio and motor cars and railroad trains which move a hundred miles an hour.

There is more to be got out of life now than there has been in the whole history of the world.

There is more to see, more to enjoy, more to ponder over, more that is interesting and amusing.

I often think how excited Benjamin Franklin would be if he could come back to the earth and see the vast electrical development that followed his discovery that the lightning that flashed through the sky has been harnessed to billions of dollars worth of productive machinery.

Don't be deaf and blind as you go through life. Keep informed; keep awake. Read and observe. Perhaps you will return to earth in another form some time. But that is merely speculative.

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

THE person to ask whether the preparation you or your family are taking for the relief of headaches is SAFE to use regularly is your family doctor. Ask him particularly about GENUINE BAYER ASPIRIN.

He will tell you that before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin most "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as bad for the stomach and, often, for the heart.

Which is food for thought if you seek quick, safe relief. Scientists rate Bayer Aspirin among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and the pains of rheumatism, neuritis and neuralgia. And the experience of millions of users has proved it safe for the average person to use regularly. In your own interest remember this:

You can get Genuine Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by asking for it by its full name, BAYER ASPIRIN. Make it a point to do this—and see that you get what you want.

Cross Children May Need Simple Laxative

When children are cross and touchy give them Feen-a-mint, the delightful chewing gum laxative. Feen-a-mint regime has pleasant effect as soon as you start chewing it, for its stomach-settling mint brings a clean, fresh taste to the mouth. As you chew out the laxative ingredient which is absolutely tasteless, the flow of digestive juices is increased. The laxative is mixed with these juices and carried into the system evenly and gently. Feen-a-mint doesn't gripe, nauseate or cause upset and is non-habit-forming. It passes through the stomach and into the bowels so scientifically that the action is wonderfully easy and thorough. Try the pleasant, refreshing Feen-a-mint way. Doctors prescribe its laxative ingredient for both children and adults. Sold on a money back guarantee. (6¢ a box, 15¢ and 25¢ a box.)

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination, backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

MONTGOMERY-HOWARD

The marriage of Miss Phyllis Howard and Joe Montgomery took place in Childress Friday afternoon, March 27, with Rev. H. A. Heath, retired minister of the Baptist Church, reading the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Howard of Memphis and is a granddaughter of Mrs. M. T. Howard of Clarendon. She is a popular member of the younger set and is a talented musician, being violinist in her father's orchestra.

Mr. Montgomery is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Montgomery of Clarendon. The couple will make their home near Clarendon where the groom is associated with his father on the Montgomery ranch.

Their many friends extend best wishes for a happy future.

Mr. and Mrs. Will W. Holland and Weldon Bennett went to Hastings, Okla., Saturday and attended a reunion and dinner Sunday honoring Mrs. Holland's father, J. C. Gibson. The occasion was Mr. Gibson's 79th birthday, and he received a number of nice gifts. Forty eight relatives were present, and wished for Mr. Gibson many more happy birthdays.

Rev. and Mrs. M. E. Wells, Messdames R. W. Alewine, Truman Caldwell and E. M. McQueen attended a meeting of the Paloduro Association of the W. M. U. in Amarillo Tuesday.

Dorris Mendenhall of Wichita Falls is visiting his grandmother Mrs. W. D. Mendenhall.

NEWS OF THE STARS
of Movies and Radio
Star Dust

By Virginia Vale

Twelve million Americans daily go to the movies. Uncounted millions nightly "listen in." What is happening behind the scenes in these flashing, intensely fascinating fields? Now you can know.

Virginia Vale, in her column, "Star Dust," offers all the news highlights that concern motion pictures and radio favorites. Miss Vale, after two years as associate editor of a motion picture magazine, was called to the desk of a New York daily to handle interviews with radio and screen luminaries. Her friendships with headliners now extend to the great majority of the nation's stars. This intimacy assures you of a glance into the life of every great personality on the screen and on the air.

is the one and ONLY publication with the knowledge, experience and courage to give you every week the first-hand, inside information which is positively necessary for you to have. It is the ONE publication which is under no obligations to the big moneyed interests or Czars of trade—none of those fatal tie-ups with the selfish cliques who gamble in the very life blood of the people. That's why the Pathfinder is in a position to tell you the unvarnished facts in the plainest possible English. You can depend on every word it says—and there is no substitute for reliability.

EVERY WEEK FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington is now the news center of the entire world. It is the one place in the country where a strictly unbiased and reliable publication can be issued. That is why the Pathfinder is located there. The same clear sighted vision which led to the selection of the National Capital as the home of the Pathfinder over 40 years ago is the backbone of every single issue of the Pathfinder today.
