NAZARENE REVIVAL

A revival meeting is in progress at the Church of the Nazarene. Come all who want to see souls saved. The opportunity is at your door, don't let it pass by or the responsibility will be on you, and God is your judge. Awake those who profess to know the Lord!

The harvest truly is great, and the laborers are so few. Work while it is day for the night surely is coming, when no man can work. Let's unite our efforts and prayers for the week and watch a revival break out.

The world is crying for unity and salvation and the opportunity will soon be gone and we will have to give an account of our stewardship. Will we do our best that the blood of the lost will not be on our hands?

The meeting began Sunday night with a very good crowd and good interest. Rev. O. A. Brown, evangelist, is an earnest preacher and will help you on to a better life. Come and enjoy his inspiring messages, special singing. The services will do you good and will lift you up. Everybody welcome.

NOTICE

My ice house is now open for business, and equipped with machinery to insure the customer full weight. Your patronage appreciated. Bill Seal

The groom is the son of Mrs. Stella Hill, former Hedley resident, now living in Clarendon. He attended Hedley high school, and is employed by the Home Bakery at Clarendon, where they will make their home.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bland of this city, and attended school at Giles. A reception honoring the couple was given after the wedding at the home of Jim Ben Williams in Clarendon.

The young couple have many friends who join in extending our congratulations and best wishes.

The case before the court had been going on for many days, and concerned a claim that involved wearisome technicalities. Things were not improved when a counsel made a speech of unnecessary length. He said:

"Then, my lord, comes the question of bags; they might have been full bags or half-full bags; or, again, my lord, they might have been empty bags."

"Or," interrupted the sorely tried judge, "they might have been wind-bags."

Easily Adjusted

Screeves and written a play, and it was his first. Incidentally at the same time it was the worst thing his friend the producer had read for some years. "Sorry, my boy," remarked the producer, "but I couldn't do this—it's too long for the stage."

"But, I say," expostulated Screeves, "surely a little thing like that could be fixed up—couldn't you lengthen the stage a bit?"

Science Is After Those Other Vampires, the Bats

Science has been investigating the vampire bat recently, in an effort to cope with tropical diseases which are transmitted by its bite. Captive specimens have been kept under observation, and it has been found that they do not suck their victims' blood, as was supposed, but lap it up with their tongues as it comes from the tiny wound made by their long, sharp teeth.

The bats are so skilled in attack that you don't know you've been bitten. Men will go on sleeping peacefully while the vampire bat drinks their blood, though, as has been proved by experiment, they will start up awake at the slightest touch of the finest hypodermic needle.—Answers Magazine.

"I did not feel like doing my housework, and as I had other work besides, I felt more like lying down. A friend of mine asked me to try Cardui, which I did. After my first bottle, I felt much better. I continued taking it until I had taken six or seven bottles. By this time I was so much improved I was able to leave it off."

My First Airplane Ride

The most memorable experience of mine was my first airplane ride. A tall dark complexioned man with a small mustache of about thirteen hairs, owned this ship in which I took my first ride. The plane was a blue and white cabin plane. The body and wings were white, the numbers, tail and engine hood blue and white striped. As I walked closer to the plane I discovered it to be twice as large as I had expected. I will admit that I was rather shaky in my knees when I started to board it. After I was seated in the large leather chair, the stewardess, who was small and pretty, strapped me in with a leather belt. By this time I was getting nervous.
When all the passengers were seated and strapped in, the motor was started. As we took off,
I could see the passengers grip
the arms of the chairs and brace their feet on the chairs in front of them. The higher we climbed the harder we held on to our chairs, and the harder we pushed on the chairs in front of us.
When our fifteen minute ride was over we landed in the field from which we took off. We were unstrapped and almost fell over each other getting out of the plane. When I reached the ground I declared it was the first breath I had taken since I

HOW ARE YOU TODAY?

DR. JAMES W. BARTON
Talks About

Cutting Down on Water

Practically every overweight individual knows that potatoes, bread, and sugar help greatly to form fat in the body and accordingly these three items are usually eaten in very small amounts by those who are faithfully trying to reduce their weight.

Most overweights also know that fat foods—cream, butter, fat meats, nuts, egg yolks—by preventing wear and tear in the tissues prevent loss of body weight.

However it would seem that there are still a great many overweights who do not seem to know that water in the body tissues adds greatly to the weight of the body, makes life uncomfortable, and interferes with the proper action of the organs and tissues just as does fat tissue itself. This fact is known to boxers, wrestlers, jockeys and others whose athletic endeavors call for speed, skill and endurance.

The first thought of boxers, for instance, after being weighed in, is not food but water or other liquids, as the "drying out" process has left them terribly thirsty.

And when we remember that every pound of fat tissue can and does often hold over three pounds of water, we can readily realize what it means to the weight of the body if too much liquid is not used, as liquids feed water to the fat tissues of the body.

This is the reason that exercise is such a wonderful weight reducer. The exercise heats up the body, first gets rid of surplus water in the skin, then draws up the surplus water in the fat, and then heats and removes some of the fat itself. And the great point about exercise is that the water and fat are gradually replaced by muscle tissue. This muscle tissue not only strengthens the individual and makes him willing to take more exercise, but muscle tissue does not hold extra water as does fat tissue.

Already Water-Logged.

The thought then for overweights is that while water is necessary to every one, and most of us do not drink enough of it, the overweight is already water-logged and does not need so much water. The overweight should drink some water whenever he feels he must, but a quarter to one-third of the usual amount is all that should be taken. Simply gargling the parched throat may help, between drinks.

Another point that is not remembered by overweights is that eating too much salt will prevent loss of weight, as it has been found that a grain of salt will hold seventy times its weight of water within the tissues. Thus a person can easily carry one to one and a half gallons of water in his body, kept there by salt, without showing swelling.

Now salt is necessary for health and for life itself. Salt preserves the tissues from disorganization and putrefaction, is needed by the blood to hold certain materials in solution, it regulates the chemical reaction of the blood and various juices of the body.

Lack of salt can cause digestive, nervous, bone, and other disturbances.

Use Small Quantities.

However, in overweights, anxious to rid themselves of water, salt must be taken in small quantities. This is a real hardship because overweights are usually good eaters and like their food well seasoned.

Now how are these overweights who have developed a liking or perhaps a craving for salt going to cut down on salt without too much hardship?

Dietitians tell us that raw vegetables do not require salt; that there is enough salt in them to make them "tasty."

"Meat can be made tasty without the use of salt by browning it quickly and adding only a little water. Natural condiments such as caraway seed, mustard, nutmeg, onions, cheese, butter, and lemon can be used."

"Sweet, cold fruit soups may be served. Leafy vegetables should not be boiled in water. Potatoes should be boiled with their skins on, for then the lack of salt is not so noticeable. Root vegetables should be boiled uncut."

Treating Varicose Veins

There seems to be a tendency towards varicose veins in some families, while other cases are due to overweight or to overlifting. When the veins are small, cause no discomfort, no swelling or other symptom they should be forgotten as there is no need for treatment. When, however, there is discomfort or the veins are unsightly, or their removal by the injection treatment or by surgery must be considered.

Dr. J. S. Bobo, Gadsden, Ala., in the Alabama Medical Association Journal describes a method now in use to find out if treatment should be given. A tourniquet (tight band) is placed round the lower part of the thigh just tight enough to obstruct the return flow of the blood in the veins just below the surface of the skin, and the patient is allowed to walk about the room for several minutes to observe if the deep veins are working notwithstanding this ban around the thigh.

8,000,000 YOUTHS ARE OUT OF WORK

Major Political Parties Recognize Increased Importance of "First Voters" in Election Next November.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WITH one of the most spirited presidential elections of many years in prospect for this coming November, both major parties are recognizing as never before the political importance of American youth.

Since the Roosevelt landslide of 1932, seven or eight million boys and girls have become men and women and eligible to vote. This vast army of first voters makes up a block of votes greater than the plurality by which Roosevelt defeated Hoover.

Ordinarily the vote of these young people for one candidate or the other could be forecast to a certain extent, because of the custom of first voters assuming the party allegiance of their fathers which has prevailed in the United States for so long. But youth of 1936 is going to vote with a mind of its own.

There are obvious reasons for this. Times have changed. The party now in power is not the Democratic party as the fathers of these young men and women knew it. It has transcended old party boundaries in a number of ways. It is reasonable to suppose that a good share of the youths who might have cast their vote for an old guard Democratic candidate will vote Republican revealing that the 1935 "crime age" was nineteen years, the United States bureau of investigation declared that most criminal youths committed their crimes because they were in need of something and were not able to earn enough money to obtain it honestly.

Social forces and agencies are not apathetic to the crisis that youth faces. Indeed several movements are well under way to arrive at a solution of the problem. Universities, private business and government are all in the battle, and among the leaders are such employ 4,500,000 workers, reveals that the nation is gradually being educated to the five-day week, which permits sharing the work among more persons by staggering the working days. This would allow youth to enjoy a larger share of the jobs available.

From the combination of the forces which have been listed here the underlying problem of unemployment will ultimately be solved, and the result should be a general uplift in the morale of youth which will benefit our entire civilization. There is nothing quite so stimulating, so provocative to further ambition in youth than the jingle of coins earned from first jobs. It makes the average youth more interested in improving society in general because the spending of his own money gives him the feeling that he is a definite, contributing part of that society, rather than a "sponger" upon it.

Where to Find Jobs?

Opinions concerning the manner in which jobs for youth are to be found or created differ widely. They will have to be found outside agriculture and industry, it is claimed by Dr. Homer P. Rainey, director of the American Youth Commission.

Henry Ford, on the other hand, takes an altogether opposite view. The venerable Detroit automobile manufacturer believes that extraordinary methods or change in the form of government are unnecessary and unwanted. He advocates increasing the production of all kinds of usable wealth—this by relieving the producer from interference by governmental and financial agencies, which relief, he asserts, would remove the evils of underconsumption as well as underproduction.

Mr. Ford says that real wages would be constantly rising and "every human being who needs employment" would find a job if, "through distribution and service," increased production principles were carried out, embellished by a boost in wages and a decrease of prices.

The old adage that "youth must be served" does not apply when there are so many millions unemployed. It is only fair that the jobs available first go to family heads, and Miss Perkins reports that industries are returning family heads to work before youths. Her theory is that the additional purchasing power created by the returning of the older workers to employment and the demand for goods which will result will create still more jobs, and eventually these jobs will be filled by youth.

Youth Needed in Politics.

If politics recognizes a fertile field in the youth of the country, so will that youth find a fertile field in politics, says Joseph C. Fennelly of Kansas City, Mo., who denounces the corrupt political machines which are admittedly operating in many localities.

"No more clamor call challenges young America," he says, "than the call to save democracy, save it from politics and crime, the call to man democracy. That is the new job for youth."

"We hear the call. What if we stand almost alone? What if we have no ready answer to the prophets of the 'isms'?" We know that there is something free and fine in the plan of life which the men of young America—young men, they were—designed for us 150 years ago. We can still believe and work. We may ask help and be refused. But we can ask again; demand, if need be.

Fifty million dollars of the President's $4,880,000,000 work-relief fund was turned over to Aubrey Williams are several, among them that youths are learning to become more skillful workers and more competent citizens when they reach maturity; that thousands do not reach the stage where they are classed as "employables" until several years later than they would ordinarily; and that, with their time and their energies occupied and their security better established, youths are forgetting their tendencies toward crime.

These college freshmen demonstrate how youthful energies and enthusiasms can be directed toward good, clean fun, as well as education.

The National Industrial Conference Board, of New York, has completed a survey which would indicate that youth is benefiting from the trend in industry to shorten the working week. This study, conducted on a nationwide scale among 2,453 businesses which and his National Youth Administration, with its four-fold purposes:

1. To find employment in private industry for unemployed youth.
 2. To train and retrain for industrial, technical and professional opportunities.
 3. To provide for a continuing attendance at high school and college.
 4. To provide work-relief projects designed to meet the needs of youth.
- Meanwhile the criminal-youth problem is with us, and while social forces are completing the job of finding employment for idle youth, immediate reforms along certain lines could be of assistance.

Bob Davis Reveals

In Which the "Friendship Oak" Talks About Its Past

DURING the past twelve years, I devoted almost wholly to roaming about the world, willy-nilly, hither and yon, with no particular objective other than the next town or the next state, or one might say the next country, it has been my lot to interview several thousand people, many of whom very kindly and patiently told me something worth printing in this column. From kings and kiltzers, genius to gunman, intellectuals to imbeciles, and so on down the whole line of mortals, I have drifted seeking a line, a phrase, a column that might bring some of the glamour that exists in the far places.

And, in a sense, I have talked with birds and beasts and fishes. Yes, and mountains and rivers, and at the same time set down the secrets that have come to me from islands scattered throughout the seven seas.

Recently, in Gulfport, Miss., on the campus of the Gulf Park College for Girls, I paused and sat down in the shade of a tree so magnificent in all of its aspects, so vast in its proportions, so inviting that I sought an interview, assuming of course that the object of my concern, having for centuries resided on the Gulf of Mexico, would not be averse to disclosing some of the details of a prosperous and well-spent life.

Was Sapling in Columbus' Day.

"It has not been my privilege to look upon so massive yet so symmetrical a live oak as yourself," I remarked, with no desire to conceal my admiration.

"Due to protection from the surrounding forest and the mild climate prevailing along the north shore of the Gulf, which is safely outside the zone of hurricanes," replied the tree.

"How long have you lived here?"

"About four and a half centuries. I was a sapling when Christopher sailed into the Caribbean and had begun to bear acorns when Ponce de Leon reached Florida in quest of the fountain of youth. In 1587, the year Virginia Dare, the first white child born at Roanoke Island, appeared, I had turned a hundred years and was a pretty well developed oak, with strong branches extending in every direction, producing not less than two hundred pounds of acorns per annum, enriching the soil from season to season.

"With the settlement of Jamestown and the coming of the Spaniards, I saw many a pirate ship on this coast where they put in for water and supplies, with headquarters at the mouth of the Mississippi. Lafitte and Blackbeard dropped anchor hereabouts during my time. When Captain Kidd was hanged in London, 1701, for his American buccaneering, I had been right here where you see me now, for more than two hundred years. How time flies!"

"When did you reach the full state of your development; attain your growth, so to speak?"

In Napoleon's Reign.

"During Napoleon's reign, I should say. You can see from the bark on the trunk that I am quite old and that no new branches are putting forth. For the past century I have been producing from six to seven thousand pounds of acorns each year, enough to fatten many hogs. In 1935 my output was eight thousand pounds, or two hundred and fifty bushels. My height at the crown is 70 feet; diameter of trunk, 5 feet plus; circumference of trunk, 16 feet; spread of foliage, 120 feet, the diameter of my almost perfectly circular shadow when the sun is on the meridian late in June. The average length of my main lateral limbs is 55 to 60 feet from the trunk, the terminals curving symmetrically toward the earth; average circumference of limbs at trunk, 5 feet; nearly 12,000 square feet of shelter; length of lateral roots, 85 feet; depth of tap roots 35 feet. I decline to tell my weight.

"What are these platforms and staircases built into the lower limbs around the trunk?"

Branches Now a Classroom.

"The outdoor lecture room where Vachel Lindsay held his classes in English literature and poetry. There is space here for 50 students to seat themselves comfortably. Extended, these platforms could easily accommodate 150 students without disturbing my leafage. There is room under my extended branches for all of the 300 girls attending Gulf Park to find shelter without crowding one another, and with space to spare. You will observe that I have the proportions and characteristics of a vast umbrella.

"You should have a title."

"I am called 'the Friendship Oak.' Those who enter my shadow are supposed to remain friends through all their lifetime no matter where fate may take them in after years. I can tell you, without betraying secrets, that there is not an alumna of Gulf Park college, regardless of when she was graduated, who does not possess, tucked away somewhere among her keepsakes and treasures, a twig, a leaf or an acorn that came out of my heart. And when I am too old to bear leaves and acorns, I wish to be felled, fashioned into timber and converted into a summer house where the girls of Gulf Park can foregather and exchange the confidences of youth."

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake
© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.

Fashions have always been a mystery to me.

Fashions

When, almost over night, I discover that men and women are practically all appearing in costumes which differ widely from those that they were wearing a year ago, I never fail to be astonished.

But why not? As well go through the world thinking in the same way as dressing in the same way.

And if, from Adam's day we had continued to think in the same way we should still be using the leaves from the trees for clothes and trying to support ourselves on the fruit that grew on their branches.

For years the city of New York was a succession of brown stone or granite buildings, all of them pretty much alike, and only a very few modeled on Greek architectural ideas.

Then the island became so crowded that there was not room for expansion in any direction but upward.

Upward the city grew. Great and beautiful sky scrapers were planned and built, and now the sky line of the American metropolis is one of the wonders of the world.

Following close on fashions in business structures came a change of building fashions in little towns and cities.

These, when they followed the old colonial styles imported from England, were at first beautiful enough.

But they soon changed to the mansard roof and to a bad imitation of the Queen Ann cottage, till by and by the country was belted by monstrosities that blighted the landscape.

Sometimes we overdo it. I read in a newspaper the other day that cooked rice is now served in colors to match the scheme of the hostess who wants to be modern in entertaining her guests.

And I notice in the food stores that the packages of edibles of various kinds, once hideous and uninviting, have become things of beauty, which are far more attractive to the eyes of purchasers.

I am told that fashions in education are now shifting constantly, probably to keep match with the fashions in religion that are observable almost everywhere.

And men and women, with the whole past of the world from which to choose, are constantly making their world more beautiful.

On a coastal steambomb the other afternoon I sat behind two obviously prosperous men who were talking about their boys.

The Best Investment

Inasmuch as they took their seats by the rail not far from mine I did not feel like an eavesdropper while I listened to them.

One of them was saying, when I sat down:

"I am going to set aside safely enough money for Bill to live on. I will put it in trust, so he can get only the interest from it, and that ought to be enough to keep him.

"In these days you never can tell what may happen, and I don't want him to go hungry if there comes another financial upset in the country."

"I think," said the other man, "that that is the worst thing you can do. If your boy is like the average boy, that investment will give him such a feeling of security that he will never step out and do anything for himself. How much of an investment did you have to start with?"

The other man grinned: "About forty dollars.

"Paid my tuition for the first year in a little inland college. But of course I had to work my way through for the other three years."

"And now you're pretty well fixed, as I happen to know. Why don't you give the kid forty or fifty dollars, and tell him to try to live on it for a month and see what happens?"

"The poor youngster would starve."

"Not if he knew that was all he was going to get from you. A little money won't do him any good. If you would give him a fortune, he might learn how to take care of it, and be able to carry on when you passed out. But he probably wouldn't. The best investment you can make for that boy is an education to start with—a business education—and then leave him to his own devices. If he has got the right stuff in him he will get by. But if he knows that he will have plenty of money he will begin figuring out how to spend it, even before he gets hold of it, and that won't do him any good."

"Times have changed," said the father of the boy. "Youngsters need more money to start with than they used to."

"That's nonsense. On the East side of New York, and everywhere, for that matter there are boys who are making their way on no capital at all, and some of them will some time be among the big and successful business men of this country."

"I'd hate to have my kid have to buck the world with what he can learn in a college."

"If he's that kind of a kid, don't send him to college. But if he's the right kind, he'll get along. But he'll never get along if you tell him he won't need to work."

After First Look, Dumb-bell Louged to Look for Life!

It is true that once in a while, at a dinner, for instance, a woman is put next to a man who stolidly stares at his plate and answers "yes" or "no" to everything she says, writes Emily Post in the New York Herald Tribune.

I remember one occasion when a certain very attractive young woman struggled throughout the soup course and the fish course and half-way through the meat course without getting so much as a glance in her direction. Finally she said firmly:

"Will you please turn your head and look at me?"

He turned a face that was quite blank unless slightly raised eyebrows meant a glimmer of inquiry.

"I want to be sure you know," said she, "that I've tried my best to talk to you, and now I'm going to try no more."

Whereupon she turned to the man on the other side.

The end of this incident sounds like fiction, but I vouch for its truth. She is now the wife of the first man.

NEW KITCHEN STOVE MAKES ITS OWN GAS

Housewives Marvel at Coleman Range That Lights Instantly Like City Gas—Cooks a Meal with 2c Worth of Fuel

A new kitchen range that offers every cooking convenience of the finest city gas range is now available to housewives, wherever they live.

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, brings to a lifetime of inventive genius his crowning achievement in this amazing new Coleman Safety Range. This new stove makes its own gas from ordinary, lead-free gasoline. A patented method of carburization converts liquid fuel into gas, much the same as in present day automobile engines.

The Coleman Range lights instantly, like city gas. Its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners, another of Mr. Coleman's outstanding developments, produce a clean, desirable flame, so hot that a low flame does all ordinary cooking. Tests show an average family meal for five takes about 2c worth of fuel.

Coleman Ranges are finished in gleaming porcelain enamel. Their pleasing colors combine outstanding beauty with unequalled performance.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful new Coleman Ranges will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by simply addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-236, Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

Fabric Accent on Pretty Woolens

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUIT yourself this spring—it's quite the smartest thing to do. To state it more emphatically, a suit or "compose" ensemble tailored of handsome woolen weave is a fashion "must" this spring. You are not the type to wear a suit? Before you jump at conclusions see the endless variety of suits in the spring style parade. There is no question as to finding an affinity suit this season.

There's a whole family-tree of suits in the fashion picture, related as far as the perfectly stunning woolens that fashion them, yet entirely different in the final analysis of color moods, silhouette and general style. If you are too heavy at the waistline to wear one of the trim little mantled short-jacket suits, there is a consolation prize awaiting you in the picturesque cape-and-skirt models tailored of some one or other of the gorgeous tropical woolens that make color glory and novel weave their theme. Such a costume is pictured to the left in the illustration. This is a Bruyere ensemble of a nubby gray and green mixed summer tweed. This type is a decided favorite with smart Parisiennes.

The classic tailor developed in men's wear suitings is an outstanding fashion, with definite preference for the single breasted type with its flattering sweep of long lapels. Both hard and soft finished worsteds are used in these suits, with sharkskins, herringbone weaves, distinct checks, chevrons, serge types, monotone and chalk stripe flannels and wool gabardine all important.

Men's checked worsted is the practical fabric for the good looking spring suit to the right in the picture. It has a classic single-breasted three-button jacket with traditional flap pocket ets and a slim straight skirt. The back panel of the jacket and the skirt are correspondingly slashed at the sides.

The new mixed or compose ensembles are appearing with coats in contrasting color and fabric. The "baby reefer" of fingertip length with double-breasted closing and man-tailored styling of lapels and pockets is frequently seen in covert cloth, or in wool gabardine, in beige, tan, navy or gray worn over tailored suits or with the one-piece dress of contrasting woolen. A reefer coat of the sort described centers the group shown. It is tailored of a very fine wool gabardine. Note especially its new length. The latest "baby" swagger coats also adopt this new length, also a hiplength.

The newest tweeds (in the lead for travel and country wear) are in rich deep colorings accented with flecks and nubs of contrasting shades. There are also many soft lovely tweeds in natural and pastel colors with over-patterning in bright color. Casual assemblings are smart in informal suits, the skirts frequently being in monotone or flecked tweeds and the jackets in gun club patternings, hound's tooth or shepherd checks or conservative Glen plaid.

A leading fashion is the adaptation of the masculine morning suit with striped skirt and oxford gray jacket in men's wear worsted, frequently bound with braid. Another favorite in this class is developed in men's wear flannel with pearl gray skirt and steel gray jacket with revers of the lighter skirt fabric.

TRICKY GLOVES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

As front page news novel fabric gloves are "it" in a big way this season. Not only are gloves creating a sensation because of their startling colors but they are given to tricks that are as practical as they are intriguing. A really wonderful idea is the glove with a zipper pocket in the left wrist to hold your small change. See it in action as pictured above. Another cute idea is the glove with an unbreakable crystal inset on left wrist (see picture) so that your wrist watch is visible without turning back the cuff. This year there is an endless variety of beautiful mesh glove fabrics of bemberg brought out.

Knife-Plated Sleeves

Some of the new sleeves now shown are knife-plated

SPRING HATS REVEL IN TOASTED TONES

In addition to black and plenty of navy blue—especially a dark purplish shade—the prominent colors in hats for spring and early summer are toasted tones, blond tortoise shell, burnt straw, natural beige, fawn, tomato red and soft tints of washed blue, as well as tones of grayish blues on the slate side.

Bright red is used a great deal in combination with black, with navy blue and with white. The greens are represented by soft tones of reseda.

Pastel tones in general are foreseen for spring and summer, and among them is a soft shade of pale faded pink that is sponsored by all the leading milliners. This color is called old pink by certain houses and ashes of roses by other designers.

Sequin Embroideries Far From Being Exhausted

The vogue of sequin embroideries is far from being exhausted.

Such houses as Maggy Rouff and Chanel use sequins in wide designs on sheer rayon crepe grounds or on chiffon or lace dresses. Ardansse embroiders with sequins in plastic material the two ends of a long scarf or panel in the same fabric as the evening dress, and fastens this scarf to the wrist where the embroidery gives a bracelet effect. Lelong obtains changeable effects on chiffon dresses by disposing sequins in degrade tones

Spanish Shawl Scarfs

Spanish shawl scarfs are being shown with some of the new spring hats. They are made of knitted black silk edged with fringe and are worn knotted loosely about the neck like a fichu.

Shoe Colors

Newest shades for women's footwear in London include wine rose, burgundy, berry bloom, cassowary and raspberry.

For a Change

You can vary a simple shirtwaist frock of white or pastel silk by a change of color every day or so in silk necktie and scarf mesh to match.

Distinctive Dress With Scalloped Collar for the Charming Little Girl

1833-B

Any little girl from two to six will look simply charming in this distinctive tiny frock which has a high waist finished off with a dainty scalloped collar, and three little buttons.

The shape of the collar gives the dress a fetching demure look that is adorable on all little girls. Notice the soft flare of the skirt and the loose short sleeves—simplicity is the keynote. This design requires a minimum of time and effort to make. Try it in gingham, wool challis, muslin or a silk with a wee little flower design. You can also make this version in a simple crepe which is used in party frocks.

"RAYMOND PITCAIRN"

Unfair Competition

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Picture a store-keeper, a dairy-farmer, or a small manufacturer who through years of industry has established a moderately successful business. Out of its returns he supports his family, and pays wages, taxes, insurance and all the other costs that such enterprise entails.

Then into his community enters a competitor. This rival is more fortunately situated. He doesn't have to worry about making a living, or meeting tax bills, or showing a favorable balance at the end of the year. A rich uncle takes care of all that for him.

How long could the store-keeper, or dairy-farmer, or manufacturer continue to meet such competition?

That, in effect, is the question raised by an official report recently submitted at Washington by the Committee on Government Competition with Private Enterprise.

It reaches the conclusion that, except in such fields as national defense, research, conservation and the like, Federal competition is "wholly destructive."

What attention will official Washington give this significant report? That is difficult to say.

For years, citizens who have seen their own taxes used to underwrite competition against them have protested against those methods—without success.

For years, they have pointed out that government competes against private enterprise in more than 200 lines—including certain agricultural products, construction materials, harness, textiles, clothing, printing and a host of others.

For years they have pointed out what the Committee now emphasizes in its report. Namely:

"That government expenditures will be reduced and revenue increased if the Federal Government withdraws from competition with private enterprise except under the conditions specified.

"That under normal economic conditions government competition with private enterprise . . . contributes to the development of a socialized industry.

"That a revival of private industry will permit the return of labor to its normal occupations, will hasten the return to American standards of efficiency and maintain the dignity of labor which has made the American working man the nation's greatest single influence for the advancement of democratic ideals."

Protests of the nation's workers and taxpayers against Bureaucracy's unfair competition have gone unheeded. Will an official report fare any better in protecting them in their constitutional right to earn a living? Let's hope so.

In the words of the report itself: "The government's true function is to protect and promote the economic activities of its citizens—not to supplant them."

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireplace, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there.

"Twin Bays Golf Club," replied the gentleman. "It's only about three miles from this road."
"Well," the Duke suggested, "if you're in a hurry, why don't you let me take you there? Then Evans and I can come back, and have another try at this. If Evans can't do anything, I'll send a mechanic from the village."
"That's very kind of you, but I've a better idea. You say you're hungry, too. Why don't you lunch with us, and leave your man to do the rest?"
"Swell!" said the Duke. "Evans, drive us to the Twin Bays Golf Club, and then come back to this job."
"You know what to do, Bates," he continued to his man. "Come on; let's get in!"
Barry turned round to look for the girl in the green dress. She was whispering to Evans, the other side of the stalled car.
As they strolled up the road:
"You're Mr. Ridder, aren't you?" the girl asked.
And before Barry could reply, she went on: "Your man told me. I thought I recognized the car."
"John Ridder's son!" exclaimed the white-haired gentleman. "Well, I am surprised! So you've made it up with your father, have you? You must have heard him speak of me. I'm Judge Hambridge."

For a moment, Barry considered disclaiming his bogus identity. But what was the use? He could see Evans' listening ears through the half-open window between them and the driver's seat, and he wanted to get to Montauk Point.
"Not Judge Curtis Hambridge?" he said, omitting to add that he had seen the name in yesterday's newspaper.
"The same," replied the Judge.
"Your father and I are—well, we've known each other since he came down to Southampton, three years ago. This is my daughter, Patricia. Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."
He laughed.
Patricia looked straight ahead.
"Where is your father?"
"On his way to Bad Nauehm."
"That heart of his, eh? Always told him it would cut up again some day." He leaned forward, and wound up the window behind Evans' ears.
"Well, I'm glad you two got together at last. It's been killing your mother. She spoke to me about it—privately. Pat and I are the only people in Southampton who know that John Ridder's got a son. He wouldn't mention it, and wouldn't let anyone else mention it. I tried. I couldn't act that way to a boy of mine, I said; 'no matter what he did. Flat on his uppers, somewhere in Florida, and you in a big empty house on Long Island.' . . . I suppose you're going to spend the season here, now."
"I don't know—yet," answered the Duke.
"Well, I would. This is your chance. Make good, and the old man'll be ashamed of himself when he comes back. Haven't got a job, anywhere, have you?"
"I'll bet he dances wonderfully," said the girl.
She had been taking him in, out of the corner of her eye, and now she paid him this compliment with a quiet scorn that was as subtle as her perfume.

"I had a job a few months ago," observed the Duke.
"What happened?"—with a disarming smile. "Did they want you to work?"
"You're being very rude, my dear," the Judge admonished. "The truth is that Patricia's rather fed-up on our young men. And she's heard a few pretty wild stories about you."
They had reached the club now.
"Get Judge Hambridge's car running," the Duke instructed Evans, "and then you and Bates get something to eat, and bring both cars back here."
"Not later than two o'clock," said the Judge.
A moment afterward, he was writing "John Clarke Ridder, Jr., in the guest-book."
"You've got me all wrong," Barry told the girl in the green dress. "I'm not exactly a rich man's son."
"No!" said the girl. "That's nice!" She was rude. And extremely beautiful. "Hard-boiled," thought the Duke. "There's one lady I'd like to tame."

Together, they strolled through the wide Colonial foyer of the club, and into its white and deserted dining room.

"Early yet," commented the Judge. "Southampton doesn't get going before the end of June. Pleasant club, though. We're opening our house next week. Just ran down today to have the water turned on, and all that sort of thing. How's your place? Still got Willetts?"
"Yes."
"Good servant, Willetts. Your father lays him off all winter, and goes to live in a hotel, but Willetts comes back every spring. How about a little salmon salad, Mr. Ridder?"
"Salmon salad—with mayonnaise, please."
He smiled, remembering yesterday's hot-dog at Huntington.

"Rather a coincidence, meeting you here," he said. "I'd just seen your name in The Globe."
The Judge's brow clouded.
"Yes. Your father's newspaper. They say I'm a Tammany Judge, robbing the peepul."

"It's always easy to work up excitement about the under-dog," Patricia cut in. "As though it really mattered what happened to the under-dog."
"You don't like rich men's sons," the Duke remarked, "and you don't like under-dogs. Just whom do you like, Miss Hambridge?"
"People who make their way."
"Can't you feel sorry for people who don't?"
"Not very," she admitted, frankly. "Nobody does. Most of us pretend to. I don't know why. They're merely the brake on civilization. They don't count. Civilization does."

The hard-boiled mix!
"I suppose you'll be keeping bachelor's hall most of the summer," suggested the Judge. "The Nauehm treatment is eight weeks, I believe. Well, you'll have to make yourself at home with us. I'm a widower, and away a good part of the time, so you and Patricia can fight things out on the tennis court." He glanced at his watch. "We'll be down for good the first of next week. How about dining with us Thursday?"
"Please do," smiled the girl.
"I should be delighted," said the Duke.

"At eight? Don't dress. We wear flannels most of the time out here."
"Flannels it is," said the Duke.
Purring softly, as though nothing had ever been wrong with its vitals, the Judge's car drew up to the steps.
"Until Thursday, then, and thank you for the lift. I'm mighty glad to have met John Ridder's boy."

"I'm glad, too," added Patricia, giving him her hand. "Maybe I'll learn to like rich men's sons."
"Or under-dogs."
They drove away.
Evans' humor seemed to have improved with luncheon.
"Montauk Point?" he asked, holding open the car door.
"No," the Duke answered. "I've changed my mind about Montauk Point. Some other day. I think we'll go home now."

CHAPTER II

Well, of all the mad resolutions! "I'm going to wind up in prison," reflected the Duke. "And, as a good many wiser men have done, on account of a girl."
"A snip of a girl, at that!" He grinned at that.
Where was he going to get flannels? Or even a clean shirt? How could he hope to get away with this for a whole week? "Let's think it out quietly. Papa and Mason are safe in Bad Nauehm. Probably for a couple of months. The ref John Ridder isn't coming to Southampton."

"Stop at the railway station," he instructed the chauffeur. "I've got to see about my bag."
But, oddly enough, the bag hadn't arrived.
"A big tan-leather suit case?" echoed the baggage-master. "You're going to have a hard time locating it, unless you can find your check."

"Must have dropped it from my pocket when I pulled out my railway ticket on the train." His Grace told Willetts at dinner. Willetts had been very apologetic about sending the master away for lunch. "It's cook, sir. She's new, and, what with the kitchen all upside down—"
"Don't worry," interrupted the Duke. "I had a capital time. But what are we going to do about clothes, Willetts?"

"Well," the butler responded, "there's your father's tailor, sir. Crowell, on Fifty-first street, just east of the Avenue. You could start an account there, sir. And Mr. Ridder Senior gets his haberdashery at Bartlett's, and his shoes at Kennedy's."

"All that takes time," Barry objected, "and I'm going out to dinner next Thursday. And Thursday's five days off. I haven't a shirt to my back, Willetts, or anything else but my father's purple pyjamas."
Willetts' face brightened.
"If you can wear those, sir, I don't see why you can't wear Mr. Ridder's linen—in an emergency, sir. There's a whole high-boy full of it in your closet, sir. And he's got a dozen summer suits in that cedar chest."
"Flannels, too?"
"Oh, plenty of flannels," answered

Willetts. "And golf trousers. They're sure to fit."

Both men smiled.
Wonderful what a smile would do. His own broad grin undoubtedly explained the friendliness of the butler, and he himself had fallen victim to the same upturning of a pair of carmine lips. He had resented Patricia Hambridge's whole-hearted until she smiled. His still resented her, but he knew exactly how many days it was to Thursday.

The case against Evans was that he never smiled.
"What's the matter with Evans?" asked the Duke, using his fork on a morsel of sweetbread sous cloche.
"Matter, sir?"
"He seems morose," said the Duke.
"The fact is, Evans' wife is very ill, sir."

"In Patchogue?"
"Yes, sir. We left her there. That's what made us late last night."
"Go on."
"That's about all, sir. Mrs. Evans has been ill some time. It's a kind of anemia, sir. Evans didn't want to leave her. When he found he was coming out here—only yesterday, sir—he asked Mr. Ridder if he could bring Mrs. Evans. There's quite a big room over the garage. And Mr. Ridder said, 'No.' He's—well, he's firm, Mr. Ridder is. I guess you know that, sir. And then Evans decided to put her up in the village for a few days. But she was taken bad at Patchogue, sir, and we had to leave her at a hotel. Evans was a good deal upset. They've only been married a few months."

"I see," said the Duke.
He thought about the matter all through dinner.
As he was quitting the table, "Willetts," he said, "I think you'd better tell Evans to go back to Patchogue, and get his wife. Tonight, if she's fit to travel. Or tomorrow morning. My father won't know anything about it, and it seems a pity to waste that room over the garage."

"Yes, sir," said Willetts. "Thank you, sir. Anything else I can do for you, sir?"
He went on thinking about it before the fire.
"Houses without people, and people without houses."
"Funny world!"
"If I belonged here—" the Duke repeated to himself.

"The trouble with people like my father," he ruminated, "and Pat, is that they don't know what it is not to have enough. They've never known, or they've forgotten. We must've experienced things to have any feeling about them. If you see a man shot, you're horrified. But if you read about fifty thousand men killed in battle, it doesn't mean much to you."
"My father—"
And, suddenly, he realized that, when he said "My father," he was thinking of John Clarke Ridder.

For the twentieth time since the beginning of this astonishing adventure, his mouth spread itself into that broad grin.
"If I stayed here a month," he reflected, "I'd be calling the old man 'Dad.' Already, I'm calling the girl 'Pat.' Making myself at home—that's what I am. Better clear out after dinner next Thursday. Or after breakfast Friday. I'm simply ruining my appetite for baked beans!"
Willetts interrupted his meditations. "Evans would like to know if you'd see him, sir."

"Of course. Tell him to come up." He had an embarrassing ten minutes with the chauffeur—embarrassing, but very heart-warming. The surly Evans was transformed. Barry never had seen anyone else so grateful. "You must have thought I was pretty grouchy this morning, sir, but I was worried sick. I kept thinking how the missis looked when I left her last night. I didn't dare quit, on her account. If it'd been just me, I'd've starved to be with her."

"There's likely to be an awful row when my father gets home," warned the Duke.
"We can clear out before then." Evans hesitated. "The missis ought to be all right in a few weeks. It's wonderful, this sea air."
"When do you want to go for her?"
"I telephoned from the village, and the doctor thinks she'd be all right to make the trip in the morning, sir."

"Tell you what we'll do," said the Duke. "I've got to go to town to get some clothes and things. I'll ride with you to Patchogue, and take the train there. You can bring Mrs. Evans home, and I'll take another train out from New York."

Evans tried to speak, but without success.
"That's all now. You can figure what train I get from Patchogue, and tell Willetts. Good night."

"I'll get square with you for this some day," he said, and gulped hard, and left the room.
"Gosh," mused the Duke; "I'd stay a month, if I thought I could do a few more things like that."

Mr. Crowell was most obliging, though a bit suspicious at first. John Clarke Ridder Senior's blue summer suit hung to his bogus son almost comically, and John Clarke Ridder Senior's shirt was choking him. "You made these tops for my father," the Duke remarked, "and I put 'em on this morning because I've just come up from Florida, and lost my baggage en route. I've got to have a suit by next Thursday. Can it be done?"
"I'm afraid not."
"Can you make a pair of flannel trousers by then?"
"I think so."
"Go to it," said the Duke.

WHEN Mac West's effects were moved off the Paramount lot, a fashionable gallery of Hollywood celebrities watched the strong men carry her furniture out to a red moving van. The list of onlookers included Carole Lombard, Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Jack Oakie and Herbert Marshall. Mae, who voluntarily relinquished her contract, was not there. She will begin a new picture for Columbia which is headed by Emanuel Cohen, who was her boss at Paramount when she made her first film hit. She is to receive $300,000 for this picture. Mae was presented at the moving party by Jim Timony, her manager, who checked over the list of furnishings from her dressing room which were moved to the new studio. These included a piano, a desk, a divan, a chair and an oil painting of Mae.

A special automobile that will speed more than three miles a minute is being built for M-G-M for use in its new picture "Speed." It is expected that it will be sent out on the road for publicity purposes when the picture is finished. The producers promise that it will not be driven at anywhere near its maximum speed.

Grace Moore has never sung the aria "Woman Is Fickle" in Rigoletto, for that is the tenor's job, but it might be a theme song for her off-again, on-again act with the movies. After announcing that she was through, she says she has changed her mind and is going to make some more pictures at Columbia. She has made one important reservation, though. No more scenes where she is singing while milking a cow.

Richard Arlen is on his way to England where he will make a picture for Gaumont-British. Accompanying Dick are Joby and little Ricker. When his English hitch is over, Dick will return to Hollywood to go to work for Twentieth Century-Fox, with whom he recently signed a contract to make three pictures.

Anita Louise, whose blond beauty has captured many hearts, will be cast for the feminine lead in Warner Brothers new picture, "The Charge of the Light Brigade." This, it is said, is the biggest film opportunity Anita has yet been given. Errol Flynn, who swept to stardom in "Captain Blood," will play opposite her.

Hard luck has dogged the footsteps of many a movie star of yesteryear but it has nipped rather constantly at the heels of Alice Lake. She is now the ward of the Film Welfare league in St. Vincent's hospital. Fifteen years ago she was in the big money and had an immense following. Recently when brought into court and her plight revealed, she said she could not even get work as an extra. She still gets fan letters, however.

The success which has followed David O. Selznick's ventures in reviving classics of literature has won him a well-deserved acclaim. "Little Lord Fauntleroy," in which young Freddie Bartholomew, the English star, is featured, has attracted about as much attention as "David Copperfield," which endeared Selznick to the Dickens fans of America and abroad. Faithful adherence to the story itself in the talkie version was responsible for much of its effectiveness.

Lucien Littlefield, co-author of the screen version of "Early to Bed," has joined the cast which already includes Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland. The picture, originally called: "Where Am I?" is a farce detailing the life and love of a clerk in a glass-eye factory. Ruggles plays the role of the clerk who is engaged to Mary Boland. The picture develops a kick when the down-trodden Ruggles goes berserk, quits his job and successfully establishes a rival glass-eye company.

Let Age and Youth Agree to Differ: A Form of Agreement

Conclusion of Sage of the Problem of Life's Contrasts.

One of the most serious of life's contrasts is the continual misunderstanding which arises between old age and youth. It is true that from time immemorial man has been dissatisfied with youth and youth has resented the implication. Though we ourselves had no such temptations as beset the young people of today, nevertheless our parents were just as anxious about our doings as any parent now could be. To us, their children, the problems of this perplexing day are intricate in comparison. But, S. thought it out in this fashion: Let them (age and youth) agree to differ, for who knows but what agreeing to differ may not be a form of agreement, rather than a form of difference?

Lady Slane, in her attempt to live her own life after fifty years of being a satellite in the wake of a distinguished husband, is criticized by some as devoid of maternal love in wishing to live apart from her family. But is not life in most families a proof of the saying that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country? The desire to explore one's individual country becomes rather important as life recedes with all passions spent.

So much is now being written about flaming youth that it will soon believe that the whole stage of life was meant for the presentation of its own play and the footlights sole.

ly to exhibit its own charms. Well, so be it, since upon its shoulders must fall the work of the world, Sir Edmund Gosse in writing his "Father and Son," endured severe criticism because he said too much (later, because he said too little) in trying to present the influence of a strictly puritanical father upon a son whose attitude toward life had changed. Stevenson's comment upon the book helped to smooth over the harshness of such criticism when he said that it was a very delicate task, very delicately done. Published in 1907, it was, to use the author's words, a record of a struggle between two temperaments, two consciences, and almost two epochs.

It seems to me that Mr. Brownell in his "Standards," has found the keynote to the lack of harmony between the two generations when he says that youth fails to consider how much more crowded the pigeonholes of age are than its own, and how much more irksome it is to arrange their contents, and that, in conjunction with the proverbial egotism of youth, is the whole cause of the difficulties that arise.

A case in point is the talk between the aged Belarius and the two sons of Cymbeline before they learn of their princely heritage. Belarius tells at length about the charms of mountain life in Wales, adding that it is nobler than attending for a check, richer than doing nothing for a bubble, prouder than rustling in unspun silk. They listen respectfully and reply:

Happy this life is best if quiet life be best, sweeter to you that have a sharper corner, well corresponding. With your stiff age; but unto us it is a cell of ignorance, traveling abed. What should we speak of when we are as old as you? when we shall hear the rain and wind beat dark December, how in this, our pinching cave, shall we discourse the freezing hours away? We have seen nothing.

How hard it is to hide the sparks of nature, says Belarius to himself! M. O. W., in Indianapolis News.

Find Picture of Adam and Eve on Tablet of 4000 B. C.

The great mound of Tepe Gawra in northern Iraq, composed of the ruins of ancient cities built successively one on the other, has yielded another clue to the past. This most recent find, announced by Dr. E. A. Speltzer, of the University of Pennsylvania, concerns the Bible. It is a clay tablet on which are impressed the figures of a man, a woman, and a serpent. Archeologists, quite naturally, think these figures may represent Adam and Eve. And since the estimated age of the tablet is about 6000 years, it indicates the story of the first man and woman was passed down among the ancients many years before it was recorded in the Bible.—Pathfinder Magazine.

BECAUSE:
the very silence of Electrolux testifies to its simpler, more efficient refrigerating method—no machinery at all! Thanks to this simplicity of operation, it's the only refrigerator that can offer you all these long-life advantages:

- No moving parts to wear
- Lasting efficiency
- Continued low operating cost
- Fullest food protection
- Savings that pay for it

ELECTROLUX'S silence is more than a comfort. It's evidence of the basically different method of Electrolux operation, wherein a tiny gas burner takes the place of all moving parts. Come in today and inspect the beautiful 1936 models for yourself.
