Charles C. Tims Dies Commencement Service

Charles C. Tims passed away at his home near Giles at 5:30 Sunday morning after only a few hours illness, he having taken suddenly about 3 o'clock with a severe pain in his stomach. Mrs. Tims and his daughter were the only members of his family at home when he passed away. A physician was called and other members of the family, but all was in vain as the Master called and he must go.

He was born near Meridian, Miss., March 12, 1877. He was married to Miss Lucy Ida Tew Jan. 10, 1900. To this union 11 children were born, 8 of whom survive, as follows: Mrs. Annie Mae Sims of Hedley, Miss Eva Tims, John Alfred and his companion, all of near Giles, Gilbert of Lockney, Willie Gray of Littlefield and Percer Lee of Windy Valley. Three girls preceded him in death. One brother, M. J. Tims of Abilene and one sister Mrs. Alma Felts of Colorado Tex are left behind. All of his children were present at the funeral.

He was converted to the Baptist Church in a revival at Biles in 1925. He had lived around Hedley for about 10 years, was of a quiet reserved nature, yet jolly and pleasant with those he came in contact with.

His funeral service was held at the First Baptist Church at 8 o'clock Monday, conducted by Rev. Biggs, assisted by R. V. Wells. A large crowd was present to pay their last respects and the floral offerings were beautiful. The funeral was in charge of Bantin Funeral Home. The pall bearers were E. M. McQueen, E. H. Watson, Wm. Pierce, J. C. Perdue, J. L. Talley and E. M. Glass. Flower girls were Doris Merle Everett, Yvonna Meeks, Juanita Harrison, Nina Jo Foster, Irene Proffitt and Ida Lou Johnson. Honorary pall bearers were J. W. Garland, R. L. Farris, W. B. Mergan, A. B. Harris, D. B. Perdue and J. W. Bland.

Out of town relatives present were Henry Tims and family of Jauade and Jesse Tims and family of Lubbock.

At the Churches

If you do not go to church you are on the defensive. You will have to give some reason for your indifference to it. The church is not on trial, but we are. We are judged by our attitude toward it.

Go to church Sunday and relate yourself in that way to an eternal concern for the deep need of men through centuries past and centuries to come. Membership in a church is one of the highest privileges of life.

Go to church for the enrichment which it has to give to the soul of your qualities of the body and character, which is what personality is.

We should go to church because we are social beings. We can neither live nor die to ourselves. Let us meet at church next Sunday and worship God and honor our mothers.

NOTICE

Curtaining Windows To Increase Width

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
A READER living on a rural route in South Dakota writes me: "My parlor is 16 by 14 feet and has an 8 foot ceiling. Right in the center of the 16 foot wall are two windows, each 6 feet high and 3 feet wide. They are only 1 foot apart and 1 foot from the ceiling. How should I curtain these windows? Should the drapes cover the 1 foot space between them? How long should they be? Would you extend the drapes nearer the ceiling? I have been advised to do this. -S. A."
These questions are nice and definite and all dimensions are given. A scale drawing was made a little larger than the one shown here; 1/4 inch to a foot. This showed immediately that the windows needed to look wider rather than higher. By framing them with a valance and side drapes to the floor they are made into a unit of pleasing proportions.
Give your own home a fresh start with new curtains; slipcovers; and other smart new touches, which you will find in Book 1, SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Book 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, illustrates 90 embroidery stitches and many ways to use them. They are 25 cents each; with each order for both books, Crazypatch Leaflet showing 36 authentic embroidery stitches is included FREE. Address, Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

THE HOOT

Seniors Entertained

Hedley, Texas
 May 5, 1929

Dear Busy,
 Well, the Seniors are about to wind up a glorious and active year. There are only two more events and all will be over but the shouting. The latest entertainment was the picnic given by the Methodist ladies May 5 honoring the senior class, their room mother, Mrs. Bridges, and the high school faculty.

A motor cavalcade of 10 cars made the trip from the church to Luttrell grove arriving there about 6:30; then the fun began. The games started with Keep Away which turned into football. Mr. Harmon couldn't stand the pace so he lay down to rest. Mrs. Owen, who just couldn't resist temptation, threw a dipper full of water on him; therefore a merry chase was led until Mr. Harmon caught Mrs. Owen and threw 3 dippers full of water down her neck. Boy were they all wet. Mrs. Owen looked as the proverbial hen; and as a wet hen, only she wasn't mad at all, merely astonished and wet.

After another hour of fun and frolic supper was called and a mad dive was made for the grub. Oh, you have never seen so much food in all your young life. 8 or 4 different kinds of sandwiches, chicken, ice cream, pickles, potatoe chips and tomatoes. When all of this was consumed the following expressed their appreciation to the ladies for their thoughtfulness in honoring the class: Jerry Hunt, Virginia Watt, Von Biggs, Jonimarie Pickert, Jack Farris, Bruce Edwards, Eddie Mae Land, Potty Richerson, Seretha Gunn, Coach Gregg, Mr. Harmon, Mrs. Owen and our room mother.

The bell has rung for school to take up: I will have to close it, no my love to your mother and father.

Sincerely yours,
 Mary Rains

Trip to Palo Duro

At 4:30 Friday May 5, 5 happy people boarded Golden Bond's truck en route to Palo Duro State Park. This happy group was composed mostly of Home Ec girls with the exception of Miss Bergner, Mr. and Mrs. Golden Holland, Wesley Holland, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Harris and Jack Harris.

After much excitement we arrived at the canyon entrance; the sun had just dropped behind the hills. We heard many comments about the beautiful scenery as we started down the winding trail to the canyon floor. It was about dark when we reached our camping ground. Bonfires were built and everyone enjoyed their supper. After supper beds were spread out on the ground and some of the girls attempted to sleep, but they soon found that there wasn't any sleeping in store for them.

At 4 Saturday morning breakfast was started. Everyone rushed through breakfast in eager anticipation of what the morning held in store.

By sunrise you could see all objects crawling on the sides of the mountain. These objects proved to be some of our girls. About 9 the river seemed very tempting and in a short time everyone had their ropes in their hand and were sliding down the river. Several catches were received but one seemed to mind. After landing and climbing until practically exhausted, we again decided that we were hungry. We returned to camp and found boiled potatoes, pork and beans, fresh tomatoes, pickles, salmon, bread, coffee, cookies and prunes waiting us.

At 12:30 a tired group of girls climbed into the truck and started homeward. The sun was beaming down and the wind was blowing none too gently. We stopped in Amarillo for a few minutes to do a bit of sight seeing. We arrived at Hedley about 4:30 Saturday afternoon. Every one reported an enjoyable time in spite of the fact that their arms were blistered and that they were a tired bunch.

The 7th grade is going to give a 3 act play May 18. The name of the play is Tommy Tomorrow. The last act of the play is to be in form of graduation. The class has had many arguments trying to decide what kind of play to have. After many suggestions, Betty, by trickery, gets them to vote for a baby parade. At the next meeting Betty sees that they do not want a baby parade. She tells them that she doesn't want them to have a baby parade and that she is sorry she ever suggested it. They all vote over and decide on an old fashioned graduation program.

Signs of Impending Trouble for National Labor Relations Board

Advocates of Amendment of Wagner Act Grow More Vociferous; Law Itself and Its Administration Cause Widespread Criticism; Some Expert Stalling.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—It was only a few years ago that any politician, seeking a harvest of votes, would rather have cut off his right arm than offend organized labor. In a close fight, the labor vote held the balance of power. Labor unions forged ahead with remarkable force.

But labor started fighting within its own ranks and there came the C. I. O. Rather, John Lewis, the leader of the mine workers, got ambitious and broke away from the old established and respected American Federation of Labor and gave birth to the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

So, many politicians, including President Roosevelt, turned to C. I. O., because it was modern, streamlined, aggressive. It appeared, for a time, that C. I. O. was going to be the big power among the workers. Having that advantage, C. I. O. went to town, as the football players say. Its strength was manifest in congress and under the auspices of C. I. O. force, Senator Wagner, the New York Democrat, brought forth the national labor relations act, under which the national labor relations board was appointed and began functioning.

That much is history.

But now there are signs of impending trouble for the national labor relations board. While its main support, the C. I. O., has its troubles in collecting dues, and with the peace efforts of President Roosevelt who sought to get men of the United States back in one organization having failed miserably, the labor board is up against it. In fact, to summarize the situation in the homely expression of my boyhood home: it looks like the swash-buckling, defiant calf is not about ready to choke itself because of too much rope. It may not happen in this session of congress, but it will happen before long. Why? The answer is that organized labor, as represented by the Lewis faction, made the same mistake as greedy big business frequently makes. It became arrogant; it bit off more than it could chew. The reaction has now set in.

Demands for Amendment of Labor Act Grow Noisier

Advocates of amendment of the Wagner labor act have been knocking at the door a long time. Recently, the knocking has resembled a sledge hammer pounding on a very large number of senators and representatives have heard it. As a matter of fact, it was Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to get the C. I. O. and C. I. O. back into a single national union that has delayed the moves in congress looking for amendment of the labor law. C. I. O., having stood by the President when he was a candidate and having fought for his cause time after time, was entitled to the President's services as a peace negotiator. Many persons thought there would be a happy reunion, but there was no chance at all from the very outset of the negotiations, and the affair did nothing to lift Mr. Roosevelt's prestige, especially in the rural areas where C. I. O. and sit-down strikes have much the same meaning.

While the administrative plans for a union reunion were slipping, there came that sensational verdict by a federal court jury in Philadelphia which assessed $700,000 damages against the sit-down strikers in a hosiery plant. The damages were assessed directly against the men who did the job, and thus for the first time a responsibility, as well as a right, was given to labor. The right to strike long has been established and labor must stand it; never before, however, had there been a court determination that liability also existed if damages are done. It is unnecessary here to review what the labor relations board has been doing. Time after time, it has been accused of dancing to the bagpipes played by C. I. O. The American Federation of Labor, among other critics, has charged it with rank C. I. O. favoritism. The board does not consist of persons capable of winning very much respect. True, I believe they have very smart and fast-moving minds, but I cannot help regarding them as without any trace of judicial temperament. Without doubt, the country would be better off had all three members been ousted months ago.

Act and Its Administration Causes Widespread Criticism

It is, perhaps, as much because of the terrible administration of the law as from the inequities of the loosely drawn law itself that the criticism has been so widespread. Hundreds of cases, coming before the board, have left employers with personal losses as a result of one-sided determinations. Labor unions, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, have repeatedly asserted they could not obtain justice if the C. I. O. figured in the situation. In any event, there are now senators and representatives sponsoring a hatfull of amendments to the law, and a large number of these amendments are being promoted by the A. F. of L. lobby at the capitol.

There is one amendment, for instance, that proposes to disband the present three-man board and supplant it with a five-man board. That, of course, is the political maneuver to get rid of people with whom congress is disgusted. The amendment is by Senator Walsh, Massachusetts Democrat.

Senator Walsh also has introduced several other amendments, one of which, in particular, is worth noting. It would attempt, at least, to eliminate "prejudicial delays." That sounds rather academic. It is, however, important because, according to the A. F. of L. explanation, delays by the board have worked, or have been used, to the advantage of C. I. O. If the C. I. O. was not sure that it had a majority, according to the other union, rather than the board's mind, the amendments were brought up. Then, C. I. O. organizers would start their drives.

Whether the A. F. of L. charges are true and whether the criticisms of employers have been justified, it remains as fact that C. I. O. is now opposing amendment to the act.

Hearings Are Delayed by Various Stalling Maneuvers

Supporters of the law in its present form and defenders of the board as it is now made up succeeded for example in delaying hearings on amendments to the act for more than a month. They urged Senator Thomas of Utah, committee chairman, not to hold hearings while peace negotiations were in progress. They insisted that it was unfair to embarrass the President in his attempts to restore unity in the labor movement, and argued that hearings would bring bitter statements into print. Mr. Thomas yielded to the plea for delay, but eventually the pressure for action became too strong even for the Utah senator to resist.

And the friends of the law were right when they anticipated bitter words. Senator Wagner in his testimony spoke rather blatantly about critics being unacquainted with the purposes of the law. He felt, too, that there was no need for haste about changes. He rather hinted that there were some Ethiopian gentlemen in the woodpile, but failed to put his finger on them. He simply was standing pat about the whole thing. A little later, however, the C. I. O. people named the terrible "conspirators" who wanted the act changed. The American Federation of Labor had "conspired" with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. There was the fine unseen hand, the Chamber of Commerce, big business, personified. It was the guilty party; it was speaking for the employers who want to grind poor workmen into the dust, destroy unionism, wreck the families of the wage earners—or so the C. I. O. shouted. Well, as far as I am concerned, I fail to see why the C. I. O. picked the Chamber of Commerce. It is so thoroughly discredited that it hasn't had any influence at the capitol in 10 years. Why anyone should think that the Chamber of Commerce could have started a movement as strong as the present demand for change of the labor act is quite beyond me. But that was what the C. I. O. charged. It may have been what Senator Wagner meant.

Say Changes Would Benefit Neither Labor Nor Industry

Finally, the labor board itself appeared before the senate committee and announced it had an "open mind." Its mind was so open that it submitted a document of 360 typewritten pages, analyzing the proposals for changes and arriving generally at the conclusion that the proposed changes were no good. In substance, the board said that the bulk of the changes being pressed "would benefit neither labor group, nor would they be of help to industry." Most of all, in the labor board's mind, the amendments would "conflict with the basic purposes of the act."

Thus, as the hearings were concluded and the committee seeks to do some deliberating on its own account, labor finds itself still fighting within itself, lacking direction and one could almost say, lacking purpose. It is so bad that there must be the same greed, the same thirst for power within the ranks of workers as there is among political leaders and heads of governments. Those fellows who play the game of politics can lose their jobs and the country is none the worse. But when political labor leaders play their games and lose, the pawns are the workers who have no means of protection.

New Transatlantic Airliner Service Closes Round-the-World Travel Gap

Yankee Clippers to Start Early in May Between New York, London

By SHELDON TAYLOR

GOT $1,785 and 14 days to spare?

Come vacation time and you'll be able to exchange that $1,785 for a one-way passage eastward around the world by air!

For only a few weeks hence, huge, 42-ton clipper ships will wing out of New York for Southampton, bridging the last remaining gap in round-the-world commercial aviation.

Twelve short years after Lindbergh crouched in the "Spirit of St. Louis," up to 40 passengers will stretch their legs in comfort, dine luxuriously and sleep in standard berths while the Atlantic surges several thousand feet below. It's Manhattan to Europe in 24 hours, arriving at Southampton in time to catch the Imperial Airways boat for Bombay, East Indies, Australia and all points east.

Boats Have Two Decks.

The new clippers can seat 74 passengers on short hops like New York to Bermuda, where service is already under way. But 40 is enough for transatlantic travel when you toss in gasoline, baggage and the unorthodox-sized crew of 10 which keeps this mechanical wonderbox operating from special quarters on the flight deck.

Clipper flying is an entirely new sensation, even for veteran air travelers. There's a unique atmosphere of spaciousness about it, comparable to moving from a hotel room to a seven-room house. Actually there are 10 compartments on the passenger deck, most of them for general living purposes and a few with special functions.

They start at the nose with a large compartment for stowing anchors, mooring apparatus and cargo. Next comes a large lounge, amazingly wide, followed by the steward's pantry where three men can work at once preparing meals for 80 people. Behind it is another large room, then a compartment which can be transformed into a dining room where passengers eat in three shifts, just like a threshing crew. Then follow three more passenger compartments, a ladies' dressing room and a lounge. Last—and most publicized of all—is the so-called "bridal suite" where anyone willing to pay the price may have complete privacy.

Pilots Have Easier Job.

Up on the flight deck are the most elaborate aeronautical laboratories ever placed between two wings. Two pilots sit in the ship's nose, but the instrument board on this flying Colossus is really much smaller than that of an ordinary land plane. Pilots maneuver their flying instruments and can glance at gauges showing the motor speed and manifold temperatures, but that's about all. At another desk sits the engineering officer who monopolizes the dials, keeping an hour-to-hour log and watching for trouble. He's not especially concerned if a motor "goes out," for the clipper can fly nicely with two while a mechanic is out in the wing fixing the third.

Radio man, navigating officer and captain make up the rest of the crew, and the captain has little to do but watch his 10 flight officers who work in shifts, repairing during off hours to their cabin behind the navigation room.

Two Routes Planned.

Transatlantic aviation, over a route so coveted that airmen have named it the "blue ribbon" line, hasn't been started by the simple procedure of building a boat and saying, "Let's go." There were other problems:

One was weather. Airships could fly very nicely from New York to Southampton via Newfoundland and Ireland during the summer, but another route was needed in the winter. The best bet was via the Azores and Lisbon, Portugal, a distance of 4,451 miles compared with 3,375 miles over the northern route.

To follow such a varied schedule it was necessary to expand existing weather services, a job the United States weather bureau has undertaken by soliciting western Atlantic reports twice a day from 20 to 40 ships. An even greater obstacle was foreign competition. Pan-American entered a joint agreement with England's Imperial Airways to start two-way service simultaneously. But when Pan-American made ready to start this summer there came vague, unenthusiastic answers from London. Imperial's primary interest was establishment of direct England-to-Canada aviation before inaugurating England-to-U. S. travel. But American indignation reached such heights that Imperial agreed to let Pan-American start the service first, with the British company joining later this summer.

U. S. Subsidies Smaller.

Another problem was the financial handicap, under which American-owned airlines operate at a disadvantage to their foreign competitors. Should German, Spanish or Italian interests secure operating rights from Portugal, permitting them to use Lisbon and the Azores as a base, they could exert serious competition on the American company. Germany already has valuable airlines in Latin America and across the South Atlantic, and would be loathe to surrender supremacy. Complicating the danger is the direct government subsidy plan under which Italian and German airlines operate, compared with the air mail contracts on which American lines must depend for their subsidy.

In Pan-American's case, a $53,000 subsidy for mail is asked for each transatlantic trip this summer, making a lump federal contribution of $2,758,213 for the 52 junks planned.

One justification is that Pan-American has spent $1,500,000 developing the route. Another, far more important, is the place of ocean aviation in re-establishing America's maritime commerce. Last year the United States maritime commission, then headed by Joseph P. Kennedy, recommended that transatlantic aviation be developed as the best means of meeting foreign competition in this field.

Urge Passenger Planes.

For passenger travel the far-sighted commission urged a fleet of 18 flying boats like the new clipper, three flying daily, carrying the same total passenger capacity per year as a super liner. The planes would cost only $18,000,000 as against $50,000,000 for a super liner.

For its sponsors the new Atlantic service will culminate years of work which started when young Juan Trippe was graduated from Yale's Sheffield scientific school 19 years ago. More tangibly, it started when Trippe bought three "jennies," battered ships of World war vintage, and started the Long Island airways. He was president, general manager and a good pilot, but bigger things were ahead. In 1928 he interested Vanderbilts, Whitneys and Rockefeller in formation of Colonial Airways, flying between Boston and New York as the first contract air-mail route.

Anyone else but Trippe would whoop for joy when the first Yankee Clipper leaves Port Washington, Long Island, for Southampton during May. They'd whoop because a 10-year ambition was being realized. But Trippe won't say a word; he may make a speech, but his acquaintances know he can talk more and deliberately say less than anyone else in the airplane business. Maybe that's why the ambition came true.

Towels or Picture In Quick Stitchery

Pattern No. 6242

You'll love these quaint motifs that make a hit wherever they're used! The appropriate mottoes (they come in pairs) make them unusual as towels and equally effective as small pictures or for pillow-tops. They're mainly in 10 to the inch cross-stitch with a bit of other simple stitchery to lend variety. They're fascinating to do. Pattern 6242 contains a transfer pattern of 6 motifs averaging 5 1/2 by 7 1/2 inches; color schemes; materials needed; illustrations of stitches.

To obtain this pattern, send 15 cents in coins to The Sewing Circle, Household Arts Dept., 259 West 14th St., New York, N. Y. Please write your name, address and pattern number plainly.

Pull the Trigger on Constipation, and Pepsin-ize Acid Stomach Too

When constipation brings on acid indigestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with certain undigested food and your bowels don't move. So you need both Pepsin to help break up fast that rich undigested food in your stomach, and Laxative Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels. So be sure your laxative also contains Pepsin. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative, because its Syrup Pepsin helps you gain that wonderful stomach relief, while the Laxative Senna moves your bowels. Tests prove the power of Pepsin to dissolve those lumps of undigested protein food which may linger in your stomach, to cause belching, gastric acidity and nausea. This is how Pepsinizing your stomach helps relieve it of such distress. At the same time this medicine wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your bowels to relieve your constipation. So see how much better you feel by taking the laxative that also puts Pepsin to work on that stomach discomfort, too. Even finicky children love to taste this pleasant family laxative. Buy Dr. Caldwell's Laxative—Senna with Syrup Pepsin at your druggist today! (Adv.)

NERVOUS?

Do you feel so nervous you want to scream? Are you cross and irritable? Do you feel those darts to you? If your nerves are on edge and you feel you need a good general system tonic, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. For over 60 years one woman has told another how to go "smiling thru" the nature's Pinks Compound. It helps nature build up more physical resistance and thus helps calm quivering nerves and lessen discomfort from annoying symptoms which often accompany female functional disorders. Why not give it a chance to help YOU? Over one million women have written in reporting wonderful benefits from Pinkham's Compound.

Star Dust

★ Sleuthing for Talent
★ A Glutton for Doing
★ Typical Actor at Four
By Virginia Vale

IF A stranger bobs up in your town and begins asking people to take screen tests, don't be surprised; just blame it on Jesse Lasky, who began making pictures way back in the early days.

Jean Parker seems to be the public's favorite actress for the roles of the heroines of Gene Stratton Porter's novels. She appeared recently in "Romance of the Limberlost," and was signed recently by Monogram to do "Her Father's Daughter," by the same author.

"Never a dull moment" seems to be Leslie Howard's slogan these days. Playing a leading role in "Gone With the Wind" isn't enough to keep him really busy, it seems, so he has signed with Selznick International to act as associate producer on "Intermezzo" and play the leading role as well.

There's an amusing story going around about Sally Eilers' four-year-old son, one that would indicate that he's losing no time in acquiring the typical actor's point of view.

THREE SHUTTERED HOUSES

By BEN AMES WILLIAMS

"No, no," June insisted. "You were always so sweet to Mother. You and Grandma both."

"It was not what we did to her," the old man said. "It was what we permitted to be done."

She had seen Uncle Jim at her mother's funeral, in the undertaker's little chapel where frugally the services were held, and again later in the cemetery.

She had gone next day to his cabin in the wood, only to find it closed, secured; but there was a note on the door addressed to her.

During the fortnight after her mother died, and for the first time in her life, June began to be happy.

Clint was tender to her, but so were others too. The world, after her mother's death, turned in so many ways a new countenance toward June.

She hugged this secret happiness till Asa found a chance to ask her whether the gown fitted. She told him then:

"Yes, perfectly. I don't see how you know the size."

She almost laughed under her breath. "I can't imagine you going into a store and buying things like that."

He said with an amused promise in his tones: "I'll surprise you again."

he said. "I told him three's a crowd; but I couldn't get rid of him. We'll maroon him here and go on upstream, you and I."

But the Inspector said, smiling at the girl on the bank above him: "I suspected that Clint was up to something, coming out here so much. How are you? I met you one day, remember?"

She did remember, and she said so, conscious already of that feeling of liking and trust which Tope could when he chose inspire.

She tried to recall, afterward, whether Tope had asked her any questions that day; but she could not be sure of a single direct inquiry.

"I'm excited," she confessed.

and her mother's headache, and the fact that there was no milk in the ice-chest, so that Aunt Evie had to go next door—everything.

Tope nodded, and Clint came to her side. "I'll walk a little way with you," he said.

"I'd almost forgotten about that night," she looked at Clint squarely.

"He's all right. A fine old fellow." The young man chuckled.

He was able in the end to reassure her. Before they parted, still out of sight of the houses on the hill, they planned to meet next morning at Uncle Jim's cabin in the wood.

She went away from him up the slope, smiling to herself. It had been easy to read the impulse in his eyes; she had seen and welcomed it.

When she reached the house, it was to learn that Grandpa Bowdon had died half an hour before.

CHAPTER IX

June, to her own astonishment, wept for Grandpa Bowdon as she had not wept for her mother. His going touched her deeply; and she went to her room and stayed there for a while alone.

"He was ready to go, June," he said. "Don't feel badly. And—it was just like snapping a string. No hurt, no pain."

She wished suddenly, desperately, to see Clint, to be with him now; but since she could not, she smiled at Asa, and dried her tears, and went down with him, her head high and steady.

"You remember the flags by the W-Branch in white, purple and yellow blossoms and the bees working on them. You remember the smell of the hot young corn in the little bottoms—and you remember the watermelon patch and the creek where you left your clothes when you went in swimming by the sycamore."

When she came through the sunlight woods, up the path to the cabin on the knoll, he was there as she expected. He saw her approaching and was swift to meet her.

June stood still as he drew near, and she was trembling and shaken. He came toward her, his hands outstretched; and without knowing how, or caring, she was in his arms—and happy there.

"I shouldn't have stayed with you, yesterday," she said, after a long time. "I might have seen him again, if I'd come home."

He urged: "June, June, you couldn't have helped. And you liked being with me, were happy. That's what he'd have wanted for you."

"I never was really afraid before," she whispered. "Not for myself. But I am now, Clint. Oh, I am now. Afraid for me and you."

"You're carrying a load, June. Good lass. I wish I could give you a hand."

"It's a woman's business," she told him. "You do more with them, keep them going."

"I've got to leave them tonight," he confessed. "I'm due in court in Providence in the morning. It's just an appearance, but the judge down there is a crank. And I have to see my client tonight."

When he had finished, he went home with Uncle Justus; but half an hour later he stopped in again. June was washing the last dishes.

"Father's gone to sleep in his chair," he told her, smiling. "He'll wake up and put himself to bed by and by. I'm going over to say good night to Mother and Grandma."

June nodded, intent upon the dishes, intent upon her own thoughts. It was half after seven. Clint had said he would be waiting, a little distance down the road, at eight; but she had no hope of coming to him so soon.

"There isn't any cream," she said. "I'm sorry."

"Milk's all right if you use enough of it," he assured her, smiling in that dry way he had.

"He's all right if you use enough of it," he assured her, smiling in that dry way he had.

Neither Clint nor she would remember, afterward, much about the motion-picture they saw that evening. In the dim obscurity of the theater, their eyes were much more often turned toward each other than toward the screen.

He saw her start with dismay, and laughed, and promised: "I won't say a word." He disappeared.

Later Aunt Evie came into the kitchen. "Those old folks won't sleep a wink," she said gently.

"I know," he asserted. "I'll be here." He grinned at June. "Good night, kid."

"The funeral is at five," she told him evenly.

"I know," he asserted. "I'll be here." He grinned at June. "Good night, kid."

Aunt Evie poured the milk into two glasses, and June went with her into the other room.

The girl was full of a great tenderness for these old folk. Under Aunt Evie's calm insistence they sipped their milk obediently; they set the empty glasses; they lay down to sleep like children, side by side.

June took the glasses started toward the kitchen to wash them. Behind her she heard Aunt Evie say: "No. I'll leave the windows closed. It might rain. And you don't need any air. You'll be asleep so soon."

She was always thus calmly bent upon having her own way; when she came back into the kitchen, she looked at the girl keenly. "You all right, June?" she asked.

"Oh, yes," June told her guardedly.

"You must go to bed," Aunt Evie directed. "As soon as you are done here. Good night, child."

Her hands flying, she slipped out of her clothes, changed swiftly into the dress Asa secretly had given her. She stood for a few minutes before the mirror, busy with her hair. At last she was satisfied. Some one radiant and lovely looked back at her from the mirror there.

"Darling! You're shaking all over!"

"I'm excited," she confessed, laughing softly. "I never did this before, and I've got a new dress on." He kissed her again, and she confessed: "And I thought of the night Mother died. I was scared."

"Not scared now," she urged, and held her close.

"Never with you," she promised him.

So presently he put the car in motion, allowing it to coast silently down the hill. Another car overtook them from behind and passed at speed.

Neither Clint nor she would remember, afterward, much about the motion-picture they saw that evening. In the dim obscurity of the theater, their eyes were much more often turned toward each other than toward the screen.

Sun in the sky. The oak-studded autumn sky. Wind in the saffras sprouts. The great skies that sweep over the W-Hollow and the stream sing a song: "It was when you were young here that the hollow looked like a fairyland to you. It was the scene of your childhood. You can remember the martins around the boxes in early spring fighting the English sparrows. You remember Uncle Mel used to throw clods out of the garden at the sparrows and try to run them out for the martins. You remember the bee stands under the plum trees and the bees working on the white plum blossoms!"

"You remember the flags by the W-Branch in white, purple and yellow blossoms and the bees working on them. You remember the smell of the hot young corn in the little bottoms—and you remember the watermelon patch and the creek where you left your clothes when you went in swimming by the sycamore."

When she came through the sunlight woods, up the path to the cabin on foxes, rabbits, squirrels, turtles and terrapins. It was all heaven here to you. The sun came over the timbered hills in the morning—ran down a blue pathless sky and dragged a patch of gold in the long summer evenings over the green chestnut trees on the ridge.

"You remember it was heaven to you, a paradise of earth where there was poetry on the ground, the nodding flowers, the green hair of April! It was a heaven of childhood with the log shack and the scrubbing barns and cornfields. But some came by and stole that faraway fairyland from you!"—Jesse Stuart, Kentucky Poet of W-Hollow, in The Southern Literary Messenger

Parent-Teacher Assn.

Parent and Teacher Association met last Thursday evening at 8 o'clock to close out its year in business and enjoy a pleasant program.

The first number on the program was an instructive and inspiring report of the Eighth District Conference of Parents and Teachers which met at Borger. The theme of the conference this year was Parental Quests. Some interesting thoughts she brought us were; parents should teach their children responsibilities to prepare them for future citizenship; parents should grow with the child as well as be his guide; parents and teachers should teach crime prevention; also teach him the effects of alcoholism. Mrs. Johnson made us all feel as if we too had had a close up of this convention and gave us some of her new enthusiasm for the years work next year.

Members of the Treble Clef gave us special music: A three part chorus of Bezuteous Night, O Night of Love.

The last number was the installation of officers for next year. Mrs. W. O. Bridges, a former president, used the Oak Tree Ceremony. The following officers will compose the staff for next year: Mrs. C. L. Johnson, pres.; Mrs. Ray Moreman, vice pres.; Omon Sweet, treasurer; Mrs. Myrtle Tinsley, recording sec and Mrs. E. M. Hall, corresponding sec.

The seventh grade received the dollar for the month of May.

After the adjournment, the members and visitors were directed to the home economics room, where Mrs. Hall and co-workers served fruit punch and cookies.

The Association has had a very pleasant and profitable year. It wishes the members pleasant vacations this summer, and look forward to the new work next year.
