An Example of Courage

With telephone wires and cables connecting all the continents of the world today news travels fast. We hear of shipwrecks or any major disaster a few hours after they happen, for such is the magic of the modern day world. The Apostle Paul was a victim of shipwreck during the time he was an active gospel preacher. Several prisoners, Paul among them, were aboard a freighter loaded with wheat on its way to Rome. The prisoners were being taken there for various things, Paul to stand trial before Caesar for having preached the gospel. The voyage was delayed enroute and Paul warned the ship master that the winter season was near and it would be dangerous to continue. However they tried to go on, only to lose control of the ship for fourteen days and be blown helplessly about. Although Paul was a prisoner of the Roman government, he was cheerful and unafraid during this fearful time and was master of the situation. The ship ran aground near a small island. Paul encouraged the other prisoners and crew members telling them they would all get to shore safely. And even though he was bitten by a poisonous viper on the island, he never lost his courage or forgot the sole purpose of Christians on the earth is to further the cause of Christ, for he went among the people of the island healing them and doing good. Putting God and his kingdom first as we are admonished to do, makes the trials of this life much easier to bear.
