ITALIANS ARE ROUTED IN A FIERCE BATTLE

(Copyright 1935 by United Press) ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 25.—Ethiopia claimed the rout of three Italian battalions on the northern front today with more than 100 Italians killed.

An official statement said the fight occurred near Hawale, north of Makale, on the northern front. The three Italian battalions, it was asserted, had plundered a village and had encamped to feast on captured cattle.

Ethiopians surprised the Italians in a canyon in the mountains, attacked furiously and killed the commander and more than 100 men, according to estimates of those present. The rest of the Italians were put to flight and eight horses and 13 mules, carrying ammunition, were captured. This victory was impossible to confirm, as usual.

COMMUNISTS SEIZE TOWN IN ARGENTINA

(Copyright 1935, United Press) RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 25.—Communists were reported in control of the city of Natal in the north today and loyal troops and rebels were fighting for control of Pernambuco.

Luis Prestes, communist leader for all of South America, was believed to be leading the rebellion. It was reported that the movement was intended to be a general one, providing for outbreaks not only in Brazil but in Argentina, Chile and Paraguay.

Federal regulars, army and navy airplanes and government cruisers were speeding north to engage the rebels, Gen. Manuel Rabelo was named in supreme command with orders to suppress the revolution. All army, navy and police units in the country were put on emergency duty.

It was indicated that the rebels had control of the states of Rio Grande, de Norte, of which Natal is the chief city and that they were strong in Pernambuco state.

Communists disturbances have been brewing in the north for months. Authorities have been watching developments and believe the rebellion is doomed to failure.

Apparently capturing the wireless station of Natal the Communists leaders broadcast messages saying "Long live Luis Prestes," and claiming victory.

CLASHES ARE FEARED OVER NORTH CHINA

(By United Press) SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 25.—Serious fighting between Chinese and Japanese troops seemed certain today if the government sends additional troops to Hopei province to suppress autonomists.

The foreign office statement issued at Nanking to the effect the government would not tolerate the new autonomous government in the demilitarized zone, added that counter-measures were contemplated.

It was not explained, however, whether they would be of a military character. The Japanese have declared that dispatch of Chinese troops is violation of an agreement reached following the crisis last June.

Italy to Consider Oil Embargo As A Hostile Act

(By United Press) ROME, Italy, Nov. 25.—An Italian government spokesman told the United Press today that if the United States should declare an oil embargo against Italy it would be considered not only an unfriendly but "hostile" act, and would necessitate the adoption of Italian counter-measures.

The attitude of the United States has become a vital matter to Italy.

Roumania, an important oil producer, notified the League of Nations it is ready to extend an embargo on oil, coal, iron and steel against Italy, provided other League members agreed to do likewise.

Super Wrestling Program Booked For Arena Tonight

Two of the fastest bouts ever to be held in Ranger are on the program at the Elks arena tonight. The management has promised better bouts for the Elks arena fans and they are now in position to contact the best in the game. The fans have shown their appreciation of better bouts by their faithful and increasing attendance each week.

Tonight there will be a test of supremacy between two of the fastest and cleverest middleweights in the wrestling game. Blondy Chrane, the pride of Abilene, who has appeared on the Ranger mat on several occasions and has always pleased the fans and can be relied on to put out everything he has to win his match. Blondy is pitted against Albert Szasz, the Hungarian flash, who has the reputation of being one of the fastest men in the wrestling game. The fans were not satisfied with the 45-minute bout of these two last week so after many letters, wires and phone calls the matchmaker succeeded in getting a return bout over a longer duration to see who is really the best. They are slated to go two falls out of three with a two-hour limit.

The 45-minute preliminary, while over a shorter route, will be equally as good as the main event. Eddie O'Shea, the wild Irishman of New York and a favorite in these parts and who needs no introduction to the Elks fans, takes on a newcomer in Texas, Dory Detton, the Utah Mormon, who is a fast, clean and clever wrestler, who has been going over big in the Northwest and Pacific coast, is making his first appearance in a Texas ring in Ranger tonight and he says he fears no Irishman from New York or anywhere else.

These two matches should keep the audience spellbound from the first tap of the gong until the right arm of the winner is raised. A capacity house is expected tonight and those wishing a good seat can make reservations by calling phone 283. The show starts promptly at 8:30 p. m., rain or shine, hot or cold.

Type of Peaches For Texas Climate Is Now Discovered

(By United Press) WICHITA FALLS.—Experimentation with various types of peaches carried on at the state experiment station near Iowa Park during the past nine years indicates that the variety known as Dr. Burton is best suited to survive and produce regularly a good crop in the Wichita Falls area, according to results announced by L. E. Brooks, horticulturist, and C. H. McDowell, superintendent, at the station.

Data compiled by Brooks from the completion of extensive tests on 72 different varieties and strains of peaches is now being prepared by him for publication as a bulletin for the extension department of Texas A. & M. The experimentation to be reflected in the bulletin covers several years. It is expected to be in print shortly after Jan. 1, 1936.

The Dr. Burton peach originated as a seedling at the home of Dr. E. S. Burton in Grayson county more than 30 years ago. It is practically a free-stone, although classified by the horticulturist as semi-free. The fruit is of medium size, is of a light color and is red-checked.

Taxpayers Burdened By Officeholders

When Scheherazade of Arabian Nights' fame, was trying to think of enough tall tales to keep her husband from having her head cut off at the break of dawn, she told him about the Old Man of the Sea.

The Old Man of the Sea was a tenacious individual who had a way of jumping on the shoulders of perfect strangers and compelling them to give him free transportation. Once he got on, there was no getting him off; he stuck and enjoyed the ride until his human steed could go no farther.

Now Scheherazade flourished 'way back in the days of ancient Bagdad, but her story has a very modern ring, and the American taxpayer can listen to it with a sad smile of recognition; for if ever there was a person who is ridden by the Old Man of the Sea, it is this same taxpayer.

Wherever he goes, the taxpayer carries on his shoulders a flock of officeholders, and he could very profitably get rid of a great many of them if they didn't have their knees cemented firmly against his short ribs.

Forget, for the moment, about the vast horde in Washington, and the lesser hordes in each state capital, and think only of the local county seat. It probably is no exaggeration whatever to say that at least half of the county officers in this republic are completely unnecessary and would be cut off the payroll forthwith if our system of local government were even 50 per cent efficient.

For one thing, we have far too many counties. In this day of autos and paved roads, a state which contains three dozen counties could combine them into eight or ten without working any real hardship on anyone. The horse and buggy era made small counties necessary; the modern age makes them utterly useless.

It is self-evident that a slight extension of the state police idea would completely do away with the need for sheriffs, deputies, and small-town constables.

If it be objected that deputy sheriffs have such essential duties as the serving of legal papers to perform, it can only be replied that Uncle Sam's registered mail would do that job quite as efficiently and infinitely more cheaply.

We have county auditors and treasurers and assessors, each with his own staff, when one office could very well do the work of all three. We have vestigial remnants, such as coroners.

We have, to top everything, the fact that 99 per cent of these offices are grossly over-staffed, due to the requirements of party politics.

The needless officeholder is the modern Old Man of the Sea. The taxpayer patiently lugs him around and pays through the nose for the privilege.

Some day, let us hope, the taxpayer will get wise, pitch the Old Man into the nearest ditch—and discover that he can govern himself for about half of the present cost.

A hearty laugh is often as good, if not better, than a hearty meal.

Sport Glances.By Grayson

FIGHT results columns of today read like G. A. R. directories. The way old-timers hang on is a sad commentary on the newer crop of beak busters, if any.

Tommy Loughran outpoints Maurice Strickland, a British clouter, in London. Mickey Walker is suspended by the Montreal commission for failure to keep an appointment. The erstwhile Toy Bulldog should have been commended for good judgment. Loughran and Walker have been around since 1919.

So has old Gawge Godfrey, who finally found blokes in Europe whom he can lick. Indeed, old Gawge struts the boulevards of Paris as the I. B. U. heavyweight czar, while a stout stevedore tours this country as champion.

Paulino Uzcudun is carted all the way from Spain as cannon fodder for Joe Louis at Madison Square Garden, Dec. 13. Isidore Gastanga, slower than Gus Mancuso, is to be sent against Louis in Havana, Dec. 29. The Negro then will meet Charley Retzlaff either in Detroit or Chicago. Retzlaff takes nine on a dirty look.

Reading all this, and where Johnny Risko is clamoring for a shot at Louis, Jack Sharkey can't be blamed for coming back. Steve Hamas is to take another fling, too, as quickly as his trick knee mends.

Louis Punches Himself Out of First-Rate Job

LOUIS punched himself out of a first-rate job in bringing the heavyweight division and boxing back during the summer. There is no worthy rival in sight, unless you consider Jimmy Braddock and Max Schmeling as such.

The other classes are worse off than the heavyweight. John Henry Lewis is perhaps the most formidable light-heavy monarch in some years, but has not been touched by bucks office magic.

The middleweight wreath hasn't amounted to anything since Walker chucked it for more remunerative heavyweight matches. Having run out of bouts with Jimmy McLarin, Barney Ross, the welter ruler, finds himself all dressed up with no place to go.

Al Roth's inability to lift the lightweight leadership from the battle-worn Tony Canzoneri further demonstrated the inferiority of the new school. Indeed, things are so soft among the 135-pounders that the faint-hearted Al Singer was inspired to take another whirl.

Customers Lose Interest in Little Fellows

FREDDIE MILLER is a fair sort of a feather, but there is no one with whom he can draw anything approaching important coin.

Lou Salica is making every effort to keep the bantam business alive, but the customers long ago lost interest in the midgets. Few can name the present flyweight foreman. Remember when Pancho Villa packed ball yards?

While Primo Carnera still can elbow his way to technical knockouts over Walter Neunfels, and get paid for it, there appears to be little hope for the heavyweights.

There won't be anything of an exciting nature until new big fellows are developed. Meanwhile, King Levinsky has struck upon a bright idea for the older heads. The Kingfish is engaging in mixed matches with wrestlers. This is a pastime at which most heavyweight fighters should be perfectly at home.

Plainsman Recalls Days Wild Horses Roamed Panhandle

AMARILLO, Tex.—Ranch McQueen, weather-beaten plainsman, remembers when—

He rounded up the last herd of wild "mustangs"—horses that roamed free over the treeless levels of the Goodnight Ranch, with McQueen trailing.

The JA and LX, two of the largest ranches of the Texas Panhandle, had hired him to trail the mustangs.

"The leader saw me when I rode over the ridge," McQueen related. "Then he snorted and the herd was off. The first run lasted about 25 miles."

McQueen, however, had his own ideas about capturing wild horses. He would remain barely within sight, watching the mustangs crop grass until dusk. When darkness came, he would return to his chuck wagon and get a fresh mount. At daylight the next morning he would resume the chase.

"The stallion never led the herd," he explained, "although most folks believe that. When there is danger, some mean old mare takes the lead and the stallion follows as a sort of rear guard."

After five days of hide-and-seek with the wild herd, McQueen tactfully kept the mustangs running ahead of him until the blundered into a corral—and were trapped.

"That lead mare was the meanest horse I ever saw," the old plainsman chuckled. "She broke her neck, and it was a good riddance. We got some good horses out of the wild herds, but as saddle and work horses, they weren't worth the trouble it took to catch them."

WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Most of the smart boys, some of whom have inside information, are betting that the wet-dry issue will rise from its grave and enter the presidential campaign.

Drys polled 312,000 votes in Kentucky the other day. Politicians can't ignore a showing such as that.

Even though the wets did carry repeal by 110,000, the existence of strong dry minorities in many states is indicated and there's some evidence of a certain reaction against conditions under repeal.

The strategy of politicians now is to make liquor a collateral issue which can be used to their side's advantage.

Democratic strategists, who have their eyes closely on Governor Landon of Kansas, have been thinking that Landon's dry record was his chief liability. But they also figure that Landon may be smart enough to make an asset out of it.

If he were to utter a cry for "temperance," attack conditions since repeal, inferentially blame them on the Roosevelt administration, and demand reform, he might become a hero of the drys without alienating many wets.

So convinced are some advisers that Landon will try something of the sort that Roosevelt has been urged to take the "temperance" issue to his own bosom before someone else grabs it. Don't be surprised at some effort along that line.

SURPRISE, not to say indignation, was registered here when Rudolf S. Hecht, retiring president of the American Bankers Association, urged before the association's convention immediate steps to take the government out of "the many fields of business activity in which it has become engaged," with special reference to banking and credit.

It happens to be known here that the RFC bailed out Mr. Hecht's bank, the Hibernia National of New Orleans, to the tune of millions of dollars, and reorganized it, after it had closed.

The question is raised whether the bank has paid off the RFC and thus far no one is heard answering that it has.

ONE characteristic of Postmaster General Jim Farley's celebrated green ink is the fact that it fades.

Various documents in Jim's department which have been exposed to light considerably show virtually indistinguishable gray marks in the space for his signature while other handwriting, in black ink, stands out clearly.

Also, your correspondent recently jotted down the signs painted on office doors in the corridor leading from the forest of pillars and panachings surrounding Farley's office. In succession Secretary to the Postmaster General, Stenographers of the Postmaster General, Messengers of the Postmaster General, Mail Room of the Postmaster General, Clerks to the Executive Assistant to the Postmaster General, Clerks to the Postmaster General, Special Assistant to the Postmaster General, Administrative Assistant to the Postmaster General.

About that time you begin to suspect that the P. M. G. is a pretty important guy. Then you trudge down corridors of first assistant P. M. G.'s, deputy second assistant P. M. G.'s, assistant deputy fourth assistant P. M. G.'s and so on until you just go plumb dizzy. (Copyright, 1935, NEA Service, Inc.)

YES, HANGIN' BY MY TEETH, I DID A DOUBLE FLIP, FROM ONE SWINGING TRAPEZE TO ANOTHER, GRASPING THE SECOND ONE BY MY HEELS, WITHOUT A NET UNDER ME!

BRAVO! SUCH A FEAT MUST HAVE BROUGHT YOU FAME AND FORTUNE! STRANGE THAT I DO NOT RECALL YOUR NAME! KUHN-KUHN!

MY STUNT OF WRESTLING A SAVAGE LION, BAREHANDED, TO THE FLOOR, WAS A SENSATION!

SAY, LISTEN, SAMSON! JUST ROLL UP YER SLEEVES AND WRESTLE THOSE THREE CANS OF ASHES OUT OF THE CELLER!

Sunderland magistrates, perturbed by the continuance of juvenile crime, have decided to take advantage of the act of parliament and in future to punish parents as well as the offending children. When a child or young person is placed on probation the parent will enter recognizance for the child's good behavior and a further offense by the child would cause a breach of recognizance leading to serious results for the parents.

With All My Love by Mary Raymond

Begin here today... DANA WESTBROOK, born and reared abroad, comes to America after the death of her parents. Her mother, who she has never seen, is a wealthy woman who has been ruined by loss of money and who she considers disgrace to the family name. Twenty-one years before, Dana's mother eloped with young DANA WESTBROOK. She left her husband and an infant daughter, NANCY WALLACE. DANA, who was born a year later, was born in a poor little town in the southern home of her grandmother. She is received coldly by her half-sister, but is greeted cordially by her aunt, MISS ELLIE CAREWE. Mrs. Cameron shrewdly decides to capitalize her granddaughter's beauty and begins plans to introduce Dana to society. Nancy, who has taken little part in social life, hides her love for handsome, rich RONNIE MOORE. Nancy is disturbed because her beautiful younger sister is soon to marry him. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IV DANA, watching the retreat of her half-sister, can't to one of her swift, intuitive deductions. "She's brassy. Every time you reach out toward her, you get pricked. But it isn't the kind of pricking a sneaky person would give you. It's a forthright kind you don't mind so much. In spite of the fact that she dislikes me, I'm sure I'm going to like her." Dana went into the house. "That you, Nancy?" "It's Dana," the girl replied, her heart beating a little faster at the sound of her grandmother's voice. She wondered if she would ever become accustomed to the harsh, controlled tones and mirthless dark eyes. "I wanted Nancy to do the marketing for me." "She hasn't had time to get very far," Dana said. "Couldn't I take the car and pick her up? Then we could market together." She spoke eagerly. It was lonely sitting about the old house with nothing to do. Marketing would be a diversion. "Humph. Drive?" "Yes. Ever since I was a little girl." "Here's the car key. Wait—I'll write out a list." A few minutes later Dana was driving down the long street under a canopy of branching elms and oaks. The car was a dilapidated old model, but it ran. And it was nice to be rattling along on a nice, sunny day. Occasionally a pedestrian turned and followed the car with curious eyes. "It's because I'm a stranger," Dana decided. Evidently, everybody in the town knew everybody else. How different from the cosmopolitan European cities. Youthfully Dana decided she didn't mind the stares; it added zest to a commonplace mission. OVER the rise of the slope she would probably find Nancy, who was evidently a fast walker to have covered so much distance in so short a time. But Nancy was not in sight as the car dropped down on the other side. Dana stopped the car. Intersecting with the street over which she had come was another of very different appearance. They were chatting like old friends when they mounted the steps of the Cameron home. "Smart," was the word Dana used mentally. These homes evidently belonged to the wealthiest families of the town. The one on the corner, far back among its green acres, was a reproduction of an imposing English manor house. Ivy clung thickly to the brick walls and spiraled about its chimneys. Dana turned the nose of the car in this direction. She would drive for some distance on this attractive thoroughfare and if she failed to see Nancy she would return home. She drove rapidly, the road unwinding like a long white ribbon, and handsome homes marching past in picturesque review. The one she was passing now was an enormous structure, set high on a hill several hundred yards away. Its turreted towers gleamed brightly under the glare of the sun. A veritable woodland of trees and flowering shrubs had been rudely paraded in the center of the grounds, permitting those passing by to glimpse the immense white stone residence. But Dana was destined not to pass. There was an ominous explosion, the car swerved suddenly, and came to a violent stop. "Darn!" Dana exclaimed. "Now, I'm in for it." She was thinking of her grandmother, who would be waiting for her groceries and would never understand why Dana had taken the prolonged drive which had ended in a puncture. She looked about anxiously. No help in sight. From her vantage position, through tall spruces of iron Dana had a clear view of the house, and it pleased her not at all. "A costly imitation of an English castle," she decided. Or was it French? But there was none of an old

"I Knew Diamond Jim"

(By Hugo Weigert)

One day a jeweler brought me a set of unusual pieces of jewelry to chase. He also told me exactly how he wanted it done. I told him that if they were done the way he wanted them, they wouldn't be correct. He was indignant. He said that they were to be exact imitations of a famous set of jewelry. I told him I knew that perfectly, because I had made that famous set of jewelry and I had made it for Diamond Jim Brady. After that, he let me make all the pieces exactly as I had made them in the first place.

Mr. Brady had 30 different collections of absolutely flawless diamonds, sapphires, rubies, emeralds, pearls and other jewels—a different set for each day of the month. These pieces were studded with 20,000 diamonds and 6,000 colored precious stones.

Although I carved the settings of all of Diamond Jim's jewelry, I only saw Diamond Jim once in my whole life. One night I was coming back in the subway. Directly opposite me sat a stout individual who looked like Ali Baba decked out in the loot of forty jewel thefts. I recognized the jewels right away but before I could make up my mind to tell him who I was, he got out at Herald Square. At any rate, I'm glad to have the opportunity of making a

El Paso Liquor Dealers Fear 'Wet' Law Is Too Dry

(By United Press)

EL PASO, Tex.—Texas is now a "wet" state—and still it isn't, El Paso bar and cafe operators have discovered.

With keen competition confronting them from Mexican cases of conviviality across the international bridge in Juarez, the El Paso bar-keepers regard Texas' new law against sales by the drink of "hard" liquors as a death blow to their business.

"I'm going to quit," one innkeeper blurted out. "Why, I couldn't sell enough beer and wine to pay expenses. This place will be for rent."

El Paso officers indicated they might regard the new statute with one eyelid drooping.

"We'll have to try and enforce the law," Police Chief L. T. Robey remarked, "but I put a lot of emphasis on that 'try'."

Sheriff Chris Fox added, "I'll do the best I can with an apparently hopeless situation."

United States customs collectors, however, dampened the Juarez enthusiasm somewhat by decreeing that visitors from the United States to Juarez would have to bring across the bridge their $100 worth of duty-free liquor between 8 a. m. and 6 p. m.

Rear Admiral Says Battleship Is Still Backbone of Fleet

HOUSTON—The battleship, despite rapid developments of other implements of war, continues to be the backbone of a fleet, in the view of Rear Admiral E. B. Fenner, Boston, commandant of the Eighth Naval District.

Admiral Fenner, who visited Houston as representative of Secretary of Navy Claude G. Swanson to the annual meeting of the American Association of Port Authorities, said the United States must have battleship parity for adequate defense.

"I have been through three distinct periods of naval evolution," he said, "during which many said the battleship was an obsolete vessel."

"First, there was the torpedo boat. They said a torpedo boat was better than a battleship."

"Next, it was the submarine. The statement often was made that one submarine rendered one battleship helpless."

"Now it's the airplane. But the airplane is merely an adjunct to a fleet and nothing ever will replace the battleship because the navy needs the battleship's gunpower."

Admiral Fenner said that no fixed number of ships could defend adequately the United States' coastline if another nation developed greater strength.

"Everything in naval work is relative. Under the last treaty, the program of the United States provided for an adequate naval defense. However, it appears that Japan intends to obtain naval parity and have as many or more ships than we have."

"We cannot see why, under existing conditions, Japan needs as large a navy as the United States," he said.

The only limit to a "wide open" naval building race between nations, he said, is the length of each nation's "purse strings."

Perpetual Puzzles!

These puzzles we have married are disturbingly feminine. They sit across the table from us and smile riddles. They treat us like spoiled children, and yet like kings. They ferret out our secret poker games—and collect! They devastate our reasoned actions by a caprice... and we love it.

How do these wives of ours manage to keep so young, so attractive, so full of life? Well for one thing, they have learned that the advertising pages are their willing servants. Here they read of an appliance that turns mornings of drudgery into hours of leisure. There is a cosmetic blended to fit the skin like a glove. Or a new recipe to tempt your appetite.

Right now, your wife is busy with fall buying. And she lets the advertisements shoulder part of the task. They bring her good news about fall gowns and gloves, blankets, perhaps a fire screen, new slippers for you, a sweater for Junior.... She reads the advertisements carefully and they save her time, trouble, worry—and money.
