Plans are under way to take 250 to 300 people from Ranger and the transportation committee appointed for the purpose of canvassing the citizenship has already begun work and reports good success.

It was pointed out that inasmuch as almost everyone in Ranger intends visiting the Frontier Centennial during the celebration, it would be much better for everyone to make the trip on Ranger Day and thereby secure much publicity for Ranger.

Department Store Sales On Increase

AUSTIN, Tex.—Sales by Texas department stores during July were well above those of the like month last year and the seasonal decline from June to July was less than the average of the past several years, the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research has reported.

Records from 89 representative Texas establishments show an increase in July sales of 21.6 per cent over a year ago and a decline of 21.3 per cent from the preceding month. For the first seven months aggregate sales of these stores exceeded those of the corresponding period last year by 16.1 per cent.

A better showing than the average for the State in comparison with July, 1935, was made in the following cities: Beaumont, Corsicana, Dallas, Fort Worth, Galveston, San Antonio, and Temple.

"There was practically no change in the percentage of credit sales in relation to net sales, but the percentage of outstanding credit accounts collected during July was greater than it was in the corresponding month last year," the Bureau's report said.

Lack of Mules and Horses In Nation Also Hits Texas

Neglect to breed mares between 1925 and 1933 has left the United States with an excess of horses and mules over 10 years and not enough between 3 and 10 years of age. As a result, there will be a national shortage of about 175,000 horses and 325,000 mules when the 1937 work season opens up, according to information County Agricultural Agent Cook has just received from Wayne Dinsmore, Secretary of the Horse and Mule Association of America.

"Wanted—Stud Horses and Jackasses—the name of the new leaflet (No. 225) which gives complete information about the horses and mules in every state. Extra copies may be obtained free, from County Agent Cook. It is an interesting little leaflet, full of worthwhile information for every farmer.

Dinsmore's figures show that Texas will have to import about 8,500 work horses and approximately 47,900 work mules, from other states, for replacements alone before the 1937 work season starts; that is, colts raised in Texas in 1934 will fall short that number of equalling losses by death in 1936. This means that over $9,230,000 in cash will have to be paid out by Texas farmers, for work animals, many of which they might easily have raised.

Breeding is increasing, and it is estimated there will be about one million horse and mule colts foaled and raised this year, but death losses in 1936 will be around 1,200,000; so there will be much need for more good sires for some years to come.

Farmers who are interested may obtain a copy of this leaflet (No. 225) by leaving a request for it with the County Agricultural Agent.

CCC Enrollments To Be Accepted

There will be an enrollment for young men to attend the CCC camps during the first two weeks of October, in order to fill camps to their normal capacity for the winter.

Young men between the ages of 17 and 29 will be eligible, providing members of their family are now receiving relief in some form or other. However, only one boy who is physically fit for hard labor and who has been out of camp by honorable discharge for at least one year will be accepted from each family.

It will be necessary to furnish figures to the Government before September 15 showing the actual number available in each county, and those boys desiring to go are asked to call immediately on either their county welfare case worker or the Texas Relief Commission case worker in their respective counties. Those who have already made application and not been called are asked to call and advise the case workers if they still desire to go. Both white and colored persons will be listed at this time.

Young men who are members of Rural Resettlement families are eligible if they are not needed on the farm and meet other requirements. Those who wish to re-enlist are requested to bring their discharge papers with them, so that dates may be correct and no delay occasioned by any omissions. A certificate should be brought from a doctor showing that, after examination, the applicant is found free from all diseases which are contagious, and able to do manual labor without danger of injury to himself.

Even though one or more members of a family are working on a WPA project, and there is a boy available to enroll, he will be accepted.

Road To Championship Is Far From Sporting

Now that the Olympic Games victors have been duly cheered, bemedaled, and banqueted, it might be a good thing for us to devote a little time to the question, What does the amateur sports champion get out of it all, anyway?

He gets medals, of course, and headlines, and sometimes he is able to get a fair living out of it—as long as his legs hold up. But he generally has to pay a good deal for these things, and he must sometimes wonder if they are worth all they cost.

To be superlatively good at anything, you have to devote your life to it—whether it be athletics, music, crime detection, or the making of terra cotta busts. The champion has to work at his job everlastingly; he has to eat and sleep his calling, so to speak, between all performances.

There are callings in which the result is infinitely worth the price—and there are callings in which it is not.

A youngster who can swim, or run, or jump, or heave a 16-pound ball of lead faster and farther than anybody else does not get that way solely through the bounty of nature. He must have the gift to begin with, of course, but unless he works like a trooper to develop and perfect it, he will never get his picture in the papers.

This writer recently saw a junior swimming meet. A young lady of some 14 summers put on a truly marvelous display of aquatic prowess. People who watched her said: "Ah—there goes a future Olympic champion."

Well, that is what the young lady's mother thinks, too. She has thought so for a long time—and, as a result, this girl has averaged 2½ hours practice in the pool every day for several years.

Some day, possibly, she will be an Olympic champion, and we all know her name and her contours very well indeed; and we can only hope that she will then feel repaid for all those hours of practice.

Our own private hunch is that some day she will decide that she was sold down the river for the sake of a little fame; and when she makes that decision her dotting mother will not be a lady to be envied.

At any rate, this swimmer is a sample case—a cross-section, so to speak, of the amateur champion as a child. And the way she is driven to sport, as a slave is driven to the mines, is an indication that something is profoundly wrong with our whole conception of sport.

Sport is supposed to be a means of recreation, or relaxation. You go down to the corner to bowl, or out in the country to play golf, or over into the vacant lot to tuck into a bit of softball, because you get a kick out of it.

That's all sport is—except, of course, for the professionals. By glorifying the champions, we turn sport from fun into hard work. And it is the very champion whom we glorify who is apt to suffer most of all.

A western farmer was caught in the rain without an umbrella, and was he mad with glee.

March of Time Has Many Timely Topics This Month

Three dramatic episodes—the revolt of the Southern sharecroppers, the growth and development of the automobile trailer, and Albania, where Mussolini now holds the purse strings—are included in the new March of Time, which is an added feature at the Arcadia starting today.

March of Time has created a vivid picture of the American scene in its episode on sharecroppers, which was filmed throughout the South—mostly in Arkansas—during the recent strikes. Acting in it are Willie Sue Blagden and the Rev. Claude Williams, whose flogging made front-page news all over the country, Governor Futrell, and hundreds of planters and sharecroppers.

The film traces the causes of the economic unrest, points out the effects of the depression in King Cotton's domains, and shows the growth of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union. In presenting both sides of the problem it draws attention to the fact that pain to planters and sharecroppers alike is the crying need for basic economic change—lest the South's single crop system slowly but inevitably cause its economic collapse.

Few realize that today half a million Americans are living in trailers, half of them permanently. The episode on trailers shows their origin and the rapid growth of a lusty new industry as they caught the public's fancy. There are many scenes of booming trailer towns, where all the modern comforts are inexpensively supplied, and where even the shops are on wheels.

population will be living in trailers. Whether this be true or not, they offer today at least a temporary home to the half million who, paying neither rent nor property taxes, roll steadily across the nation's highways wagging their homes behind them.

Europe's only self-made sovereign, Zog the First, target for hundreds of wild hill tribesmen who have sworn to shoot him on sight, plays an important role in the episode on Albania. It will surprise most moviegoers to learn that, while Mussolini's right hand grabbed in Ethiopia, his left snatched the primest piece of colonial plunder left in Europe.

In addition to the March of Time, one of the most popular musical films ever made will be shown. The picture, "Dancing Lady," stars Clark Gable and Joan Crawford and is the film in which Fred Astaire, of the nimble feet, made his first screen appearance. A Paramount Pictorial and the usual reel of late news events complete the program which plays today and tomorrow.

Life of the Saint Of the Day

By REV. S. E. BYRNE

St. Zephyrinus, a native of Rome, succeeded Victor as Pope, in the year 202, in which year Severus raised the fifth most bloody persecution against the Church, which continued not for two years only, but until the death of that emperor in 211. Under this furious storm this holy pastor was the support and comfort of the distressed flock of Christ, and he suffered by charity and compassion what every confessor underwent. The triumphs of the martyrs were indeed his joy, but his heart received many deep wounds from the fall of apostates and heretics. It was also the sorrow of this Saint to see the fall of Tertullian, which seems to have owing partly to his pride. Eusebius tells us that his holy Pope exerted his zeal so strenuously against the blasphemous manner; but it was his glory that they called him the principal defender of Christ's divinity. St. Zephyrinus filled the pontifical chair seventeen years, dying in 219. He was buried in his own cemetery, on the 26th of August. He is, in some Martyrologies, styled a martyr, which title he might deserve by what he suffered in the persecution, though he perhaps did not die by the executioner.

CHAPTER XII
 THORNTON (ALIAS "STEPHEN") BLACK stared at his henchman contemptuously. Louis was babbling wildly again: "It wasn't no phony act, Steve. It was real, the way they talked. She didn't sound like the same girl. She's Molly Milford, sure as you live, only you don't know it."

"One of us is crazy," Black sneered, "and it's not me."
 "Louis happens to be right," Brent said suddenly. "She is Molly Milford."

Steve turned, suddenly, to Molly. "Make it snappy. And think up a good one."

"Sure," Molly said in a low, husky voice, lapsing into the language and tone she had counterfeited so successfully during her imprisonment. "I met this poor kid down town and she looked all in, and I said, 'Come on, ride home in my limousine and I'll dress you up swell for once in your life and I'll wear those rags you've got on and give my boy friend the laugh of his life. I—'"

"Molly!" Brent cried frantically. "What are you doing?"
 "Molly!" Steve Black mimicked. "Like hell she is. Well, sister, you probably did your best."
 "Can't you see she's acting?" Brent's agony was in his voice and eyes. "Molly," he pleaded, "you can't help me. You're throwing your life away for nothing. Don't you know the only thing that would make this fearful would be to know you were saved?"

"All right, Louis. Scramble our traps together," Steve commanded. "If it hadn't been for your damn dramatics we'd have gotten away a long time ago."

Molly, white-faced and weary, leaned closer against Brent's arm and felt it tighten spasmodically about her.

Just a little while to be together. Just a little time when they would be going on and on into a future enriched by love and happiness and useful living.

"Oh, Molly," Brent groaned, "why don't you tell them the truth?"

Louis came out of the bedroom with two bulging cases. One popped open suddenly, and an assortment of clothing spilled on the floor.

"What are you trying to do? Wipe up the floor with my clean shirts!" Steve asked angrily. He stooped and picked up some of the garments, still keeping a hand on his gun.

FROM the dark porch outside came a grim command: "Drop the artillery, Black. You, too, fellow. This machine gun's primed for action. It won't do you any good to take a wild shot into the darkness. Even rats like you can't slip through the circle of police around this place. As another precaution, we punctured your automobile tires. Take it easy. Your first move will be your last. All right, boys, go in and take 'em. They're all yours."

It seemed to Molly that the place was swarming with uniformed men, materializing before her eyes out of thin air. She flung her arms wildly about Brent. "Oh, Brent, we're not going to die. We're going to live!" He held her close. The next moment he felt a friendly hand on his shoulder.

"So you thought you could come up against a gang single-handed, young man?" Chief Donovan grinned. "At that," he continued, "you did a fine job of sleuthing. Let us right to the spot."

"But how?" Brent began, dazed.

"It's a long story," the detective replied. "We've had our eye on these fellows and were pretty sure Neise Ferguson was connected with them. We were fairly certain, too, that some of the same bunch had given us the tip that Ferguson pulled the bank job, also telling us when and where he could be found. But the reason why they were double-crossing him puzzled us. On top of that the Milford girl is found dead (beg pardon, Miss Milford), and then a young fellow brings us a picture of Leola Barlow and says she can't be found. Her picture was a dead ringer for Molly Milford and we were all mixed up."

"This fellow—Jimmy was his name—said he was a former friend of the Barlow girl. He said she had a small mole back of one ear. We got suspicious and visited the undertakers, and the girl called Molly Milford had a mole back of one ear. We didn't give out any information. We wanted the gang to think we were hoodwinked."

"You see," the detective continued, "we figured they had managed the masquerade, though we didn't know how, and were planning to get in a ransom demand later. Then when you came to my office, Mr. Stuart, I had an idea you were on the right trail. Our boys had orders to keep you shadowed every moment. Two of them followed you, knew when you got the clothes you're wearing, when you bought that rattletrap car. But they almost lost you when you stopped a 'Fenchy's.' They figured you were staying for dinner and when they went in for hamburgers you got away. They searched more than an hour before they located your car. Then they phoned in for the other boys to rush out. That's all!"

BRENT grasped the detective's hand, and shook it warmly. "You're wonderful, Chief. You saved our lives."

"Guess we did at that," Chief Donovan said with a smile. "And you saved my reputation. I didn't have enough evidence to turn these fellows up until you came along. If you weren't such a good architect I'd put you in my force."

"Thanks, but this life is too exciting for me," Brent smiled. "I'd rather build houses."

"Kind of planning to build one of your own, aren't you?" the chief queried, his eyes twinkling. "We'll give you and Miss Milford a lift, Mr. Stuart. There're a half dozen cars around here."

"I'd like to go back in the rattletrap, if you don't mind," Molly said. "And I'll love every rattle."

"Some of us will be trailing you until we get out of these parts," Chief Donovan said. "Then, when we get to town, we'll break the news to Mr. Milford that his daughter has been found."

"All right, boys, if the bracelets are on, we'll load up."

Neither Black nor Louis glanced at Molly and Brent as they were hustled by, but Louis moaned when they were being loaded into the police car. "If you had only listened to me, Steve!"

Molly sat close to Brent as they bumped down the highway, across the bridge and into the city. Oh, it was good to be back among the lights, in a well-ordered routine. Back among houses that were homes. Back to the dear, dear commonplace of life!

She squeezed Brent's arm rapturously, and felt the answer, pressure of his hand on hers.

And now they had reached the grounds of the Milford estate. Cars were whirling by, turning into the drive. Already the news had spread.

"Nobody knows us in this car and these clothes," Molly whispered. "We're just people, aren't we?"

Brent stopped the car near the gate and took Molly into his arms. "Just people," he said. "It's surprising how they behave!"

A policeman sauntered up. "I've been sent here to clear traffic around here tonight. Suppose you young folks go off and find a park."

"Thank you, Officer," Brent said. He started the car and, to the policeman's amazement, the shabby car with its shabby occupants rattled gaily through the iron gate.

Brent said, "Before I turn you over to that crowd in there, darling, I want to ask you a question. Haven't I ever asked you to marry me?"

"No," Molly said, "but that doesn't matter. I'm going to."

Uniform Traffic Regulations Are Urged by Council

BOSTON, Aug. 26—Sidney J. Williams, director of the public safety division of the National Safety Council, Chicago, today told the bench and bar of the nation that legislation and court procedure were "at present the two weakest links in the whole chain of traffic accident prevention endeavor."

Williams, whose office directs the annual National Traffic Safety contest which this year enlisted 983 cities and 41 states in a drive to reduce street and highway traffic accidents, spoke before the insurance section of the American Bar Association convention.

"The handling of traffic cases in court," Williams said, "is a subject which we laymen approach with profound ignorance of legal technique, yet with an earnest conviction that something is rotten in Denmark."

"We know that strict enforcement of traffic laws generally can be counted upon to produce quick results. But progress will not continue unless enforcement is based upon careful traffic engineering studies and backed by a definite program of public education. In fact, we know that no one remedy—better engineering, better laws and enforcement, or the most elaborate educational system—will produce lasting results. The prevention program must be balanced with proper emphasis placed on each of these three phases. Such a program, continued year after year, unquestionably can reduce the traffic death rate at least 50 per cent."

"Some of the most vital parts of this whole safety program are in the hands of the bench and bar, but still it must be admitted that legislation and court procedure are at present the weakest links in the chain. Undoubtedly, this is because the law is essentially conservative. Engineers and educators can try new ideas more readily than can law-makers and judges. If that be the explanation, it is also a commentary on the adaptability of legal machinery to current problems. For one thing, it seems clear to us (traffic safety organizations) that all traffic cases in a community should be concentrated in one, or if necessary, more than one, court. The judge should feel secure in long tenure of office. Many cities are now doing this, but many are not."

Williams argued that uniform traffic laws and ordinances are needed in all states and cities and termed it "strange" that traffic safety campaigns had been waged "almost entirely by laymen."

the 5th Sunday of this month. Every body is invited.

Mrs. Annie Walker has had another sick spell. We are all hoping she is better.

The ladies of Mingus gave Mrs. Charley Mitchell a pounding on Tuesday at Mr. and Mrs. Gist's. Those present were: Mrs. C. Speegle, Merle Speegle; Mr. and Mrs. John Kerns, Frances Whitworth, Mrs. E. O. Sheffield, Mildred Sheffield, Mrs. J. C. Mitchell, Mrs. Lee Mitchell and two daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Mitchell and family, all of Ranger, Mrs. C. R. Boarden, Mrs. Lee Dwyer, Mrs. Mayo Minyard, Mrs. Standiford, Mrs. H. E. Calhoun, Mrs. Cantrell, Mrs. O. G. Custard, Mrs. A. C. Harman, Mrs. Awa Henderson, Mrs. C. W. Raglin, Mr. and Mrs. Tommie Choate, Mr. W. F. Bandy, Mrs. R. E. Kenney of Fort Worth. All enjoyed being together. A few sent presents, who were not present. Cake and ice cream was served.

Police blamed a series of auto accidents on a Detroit man's inferiority complex, but failed to question him.

The depression did, however, result in the discontinuance of certain types of thrift plans. Savings plans operated by companies in cooperation with banking institutions were affected by bank failures and by the unwillingness of banks to continue carrying unprofitable small accounts.

Thrift Plans In Wider Use Than They Were In 1929

WASHINGTON — The depression had no marked effect upon the participation of employees in thrift plans in business concerns, according to a survey recently completed by the National Industrial Conference Board.

The results of that survey, presented in a report entitled, "Savings Plans and Credit Unions in Industry," indicate that a slightly higher proportion of employees are contributing regularly under thrift plans than in 1929, when a previous survey was made by the board. The participating employees are also saving as much each week. In 1927, 29.6 per cent of participating employees set aside from $1 to $1.99 each week and 30.3 per cent saved from $2. to $2.99. In 1936 these proportions were 29.7 per cent and 30.5 per for a two weeks' vacation which will probably include a visit to Denver, Colo., as guests of Mrs. Peacock's brothers. When starting home they anticipate visits to the Centennial.

Harry Frauman, representative with Lorch Manufacturing Company, Dallas, visited Ranger business firms Tuesday.

The cooler climes for vacationing were chosen by Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Flewellen, who are just home from a highly interesting trip to Colorado and its many beautiful places visited by many each year. The lovely mountain drives beckon in all directions and even the most of the time was spent at Colorado Springs, time was taken for a drive to Cripple Creek, over the Rocky Mountain drive, Corley highway, and the Thompson canyon enroute to Estes Park. Cave of the Winds, beautiful Garden of the Gods and Seven Falls, are a close distance from Manitou and Colorado Springs, allowing more time for distant places such as Evergreen Mountains and Troutdale, thirty miles west of Denver. Coming home Mr. and Mrs. Flewellen paid a visit to Santa Fe, New Mexico, a city which has to offer many attractions, in addition to the delightfully cool weather, both days and nights.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. May, Doris and C. E. Jr., are due home within the next few days from a visit to Salt Lake City, Yellowstone Park and other favorite places. Travel news has been colorful this season, with many Rangerites registering many miles during their days out of town. The Centennials will continue to attract a host of visitors, especially as the days get cooler and more comfortable for visits to the city.

Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Harris of Gladewater are in Ranger for a visit with friends, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. Pleas A. Moore.
