Horses Are Finicky About Fitting of Shoes, Smyth Says

By United Press
CANTON, Ohio.—A fine racing horse, says W. A. Haddox, veteran blacksmith and authority on racehorse shoeing, is more finicky about the shoes he wears than a debutante going to her coming-out party.

"Give a spirited horse a shoe that is an ounce off-weight or a fraction of an inch too thick, and his chances of winning will be lost," Haddox said. "On the other hand, like human beings, horses have foot ailments that can be cured and the horse built into a winner by proper shoeing."

Haddox, one of the old school of smithys, refuses to let the production-manufactured shoe replace the hand-forged shoe. "Shoes for human beings can be turned out in factory lots," he said, "but when it comes to horses a shoe must be built to actual measurements of the hoof to be perfectly satisfactory for the horse to get all the speed available out of his muscles."

SPANKINGS DO GOOD

By United Press
WELLAND, Ont.—A flat strap and a good right arm has accomplished "wonders" in disciplinary action in Weeland County, according to Magistrate J. C. Massie. He said that out of 800 cases in which spanking was imposed in lieu of imprisonment, there have been only four "repeaters."

A Detroit housewife was flogged for revealing secrets. This sort of thing has to stop or none of our women will be safe.

Preferential Vote Is Not Popular In Many States

BY GORDON K. SHEARER
AUSTIN—Experience of states that have tried a preferential primary election ballot seems to be against that form of voting, now being discussed by Texas political leaders.

Some variation of the present system under which a majority of all votes cast is necessary for nomination, likely, will be proposed at the State Democratic Convention in Fort Worth on Sept. 8. Eleven states have tried the preferential ballot. Maryland alone retains it. As indicated by the name the ballot is one by which voters express their preference rather than a single choice.

Various methods are used to determine the preference. Typical is the preferential ballot designed by James W. Bucklin of Colorado. Upon it the voter notes his first choice, his second choice and as many third choices as he desires.

If no candidate has a majority of first choice ballots, second choices are added. If no candidate has a majority of the combined first and second choices, third choices are added. If a majority still is lacking the highest plurality wins.

The Maryland plan is slightly different. The primary election is followed by a state convention. The delegation from each county is instructed to vote for the first choice nominee as shown by county returns. If he fails to win the convention nomination, the county then casts its vote for its second choice and so on.

Present Texas election law calls for nomination by a majority of all votes cast. It results in a seemingly contradictory bit of arithmetic. For instance, Gov. James V. Allred has approximately 58,000 more votes in the last Democratic primary than the total cast for his four opponents. The majority vote is computed by adding all the votes and dividing by two rather than by adding the votes of all opposing candidates and comparing with that of the leader. Rejection of the preferential ballot in 10 states is attributed to difficulty in getting voters to mark the ballot properly. Some seemed unable to understand its intricacies; others insisted on singling out their favorite candidate by refusing to vote for any other.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
JUDITH HOWARD, engaged to STEPHEN FOWLER for four years, breaks the engagement because Stephen is unwilling to try her and let her continue in her job. Judith is encouraged in this move by her friend, ROSE BENT.

Lonely and unhappy, Judith waits a while and steps in front of an approaching automobile. To her surprise, the driver brakes and strikes a fire hydrant. He is injured and taken to a hospital. Judith, feeling remorseful, goes also.

At the hospital young DR. HARRIS tells her the motorist's injuries are not serious. Dr. Harris drives Judith home.

GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER VII
 It's safest to assume he takes me for a fool," Judith warned. "Aloud she gave him the nod of her apartment."

"Good!" exclaimed the young man. "I was afraid it would cause the hospital than that!"

Released his foot from the accelerator, and Judith watched the meter needle hover between 25 and 25. "I'm a very careful driver," Harris added with a smile. "I don't believe in speed—especially with a girl like you in the car."

Suddenly his manner changed. "Voice lost its bantering lightness here, Miss Howard," said you caused this accident because you weren't looking where you were going."

"I puzzle me that a pretty woman should be out walking alone—hatless—with her head even when she crossed the street. Something was troubling you. Would you want to tell me about it?"

"Yes..."

"Nothing wrong at home?"

"Judith shook her head. 'I live in the apartment.'"

"When it has to be a love affair," he turned to her with a smile.

"You were right," she told him quickly. "I was thinking of something else when I tried to cross the street."

"And that 'something else' was love, of course."

"Judith was astonished. 'How do you guess that?'"

"I wasn't much of a guess. Did you happen to make this tentative decision?"

"He didn't want to marry me," she started.

"I started Eden Harris for a while, but when he had taken her look at Judith's face he believed. 'I get it. You're a young woman who plans to take advantage of the fact that this year...'"

"You see, Steve and I've known each other for a long time. More than four years, to be exact. I—I thought that was a little extended for an engagement."

"I should think so! But what made this Steve so backward, I'd like to know."

Judith hesitated, then found herself continuing. "He didn't think he was making enough money to marry. I was willing to keep my job—wanted to, in fact. But Steve couldn't agree."

Harris did not answer for a moment. They drove with only the hum of the motor between them. Then: "When did all this happen?"

"I told him yesterday."

"Yesterday?" repeated the doctor in astonishment. "You were speaking of it in the past tense, and I had an idea that—"

"It should be in the past tense," Judith told him. "But that's what Steve can't believe. He tried to see me tonight. I went to a movie to get away from him. Then when I came home he was waiting in the doorway. I'd turned down the street again when this accident happened." She studied his profile, hoping that he would make some comment on what she'd told him. And when he offered none she could not refrain from asking, "Do you—well, do you think I was right, Doctor Harris?"

He thought a moment. "Yes, I'm sure you were. The conditions the past few years haven't been very conducive to young marriages. But when two people have been in love as long as you and this man it makes things—difficult, to say the least. Yes, I think you were right in wanting Steve to meet conditions as they are. Personally, I see no harm in a wife working out of the home, especially if she's healthy and competent. Of course, later on, she'll want a home and children. But by that time the husband is likely to be making enough to support her."

JUDITH sighed with relief. "You don't know how good it is to hear you say that."

Harris lapsed into silence, drove several blocks before he spoke again. And when he did release himself he had resumed his former manner. Reaching into his pocket, he drew out a pack of cigarettes. "Smoke?"

"Thanks." She accepted the light from his pocket, then raised her eyes to his, trying to match his mood. "Tell me, doctor, do you think time will cure me?"

"I don't know," he replied in mock professional manner. "Love is a curious disease. Time is the only treatment to which it responds—and you can't depend absolutely on that."

"But what was it Shakespeare said? 'Men have died... but not for love.' It's never fatal." Nevertheless Judith's borrowed cynicism refused to ring true.

"I wouldn't say never fatal. Rarely fatal is more accurate. You're very young and—as I think I've said before—very pretty. Other men are going to fall in love with you. A great many. I should think, now that you've given Steve the gate and the field is open. It's hard for you to believe now, but I think the chances are good that you'll run into someone you like better even than you liked Steve."

YES, Judith agreed silently, it was hard to believe. So difficult, in fact, that she did not believe it at all. Steve was the man she had loved first, and now she felt sure that he would be the only one, always and forever. Perhaps in time the hurt would quiet a little, and the wound heal. She would be like the soldier whose wound straightens him often, but whose memory does not recall the pain, the field of battle, or the swoon against the earth.

Suddenly her unhappy thoughts were interrupted by Eden Harris' jovial, "Well, I think this is your place, isn't it?"

Judith nodded. "Yes... and thanks so much for all your kindness."

"Now that you're safely home I'll admit that I could have reached here by a much shorter route. But I just had a hunch that you had some things on your chest, and that you'd feel better if you could get them off."

"You're a nice person," Judith smiled sincerely. "Thanks again, and there's no need for you to get out. But I would like to know the name of the man who drove the car tonight. I'll want to see how he's getting along."

"Francis Jarvis is his name. But you needn't worry about him. He'll be in his office tomorrow, as right as rain." As Judith opened the car door, Harris put out a restraining hand. "Not a word about whether you hope you'll see me again?"

Judith laughed. "I was never one to look up the rules. But doesn't Emily Post require that the lady be silent on that subject?"

"That may be. But there's nothing to prevent her showing it in her eyes."

Judith widened her eyes. "Well, what do they say?" she laughed. "I can't tell. Those are enigmatic eyes, Judith Howard. But I hope we'll see each other again."

"So do I, really, Doctor Harris. 'And the way to manage it is for me to come and call on you, May I?'"

"Of course. Good night..."

Prize-winning Percheron stallion shown above is one of 83 pure-bred sires which cooperative groups of low-income farmers in Texas and Oklahoma have been enabled to buy through loans from the Resettlement Administration. The other photograph was taken at a cooperative thresher also bought with a loan for use of a group of low-income farmers whose fields were so small that they had been unable to obtain adequate service. More than 2,300 Texas and Oklahoma families are using such cooperative services established this summer by means of loans from Resettlement. In addition, individual farmers in these two states have used Resettlement loans to buy 16,932 milk cows, 17,288 horses, 20,111 head of poultry, and have also purchased $750,000 worth of farm machinery.

PROPONENT OF CROW EATING PLANS TO EXTEND CAMPAIGN

By United Press
OKLAHOMA CITY—Assistant Attorney General Jess Pullen, apostle of the theory that "a crow on every menu," plans to renew his culinary campaign against the pests this fall.

Pullen, for years, has been preaching that the crow should be made a table delicacy, to end the birds' menace to crops. He argues that if the crow were made a staple diet, the bird would soon diminish in numbers and gradually disappear.

In this column, answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. As evidence of good faith inquirers must give their names and addresses, but only their initials will be printed. Address inquiries to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.

State Game Laws Reflect Halt In Decline of Game

NEW YORK—State game laws for 1935-36 upland game bird hunting seasons compared with those of the 1934-35 period reflect an increase in the supply of some species reversing a general downward trend that has prevailed for 25 years, according to a survey by the More Game Birds Foundation.

Pheasants and quail, and to a lesser extent the wild turkey, appear to be the only species increasing nationally, the game law survey reveals. This, the Foundation believes, is probably traceable to success attending artificial propagation and stocking of these species.

Pheasant hunting seasons alone show an increase in number over 25 years ago. Twenty-seven states now provide open seasons on this introduced game bird, as compared with but eight states in the 1910-11 period. The total number of days in pheasant seasons has also increased from 475 to 506, as compared with 416 days 25 years ago.

Quail hunting seasons are provided in game laws of 33 states. Thirty-eight states permitted quail hunting in 1910-11. The total number of days in seasons has been increased from 1632 to 1658 in the current period. Twenty-five years ago, however, sportsmen enjoyed 2736 days of quail hunting.

Fifteen states permit wild turkey hunting, seasons showing an increase of from 836 to 845 days, as compared with 1998 shooting days in 1910-11.

State game laws provide 12 open seasons on prairie chickens, the same as a year ago, but 25 years ago 15 states had open seasons to talling 840 days as compared with but 13 days now. Seasons on these game birds continue to be curtailed with eight days being lopped off the total for the previous period.

Twenty-four states have open grouse hunting seasons, a loss of one state season over 1934-35 but a loss of 11 seasons over 25 years ago. Ten days have been cut off the total number of days in grouse hunting seasons which now total 1910-11, the survey showed.

BARTENDERS NEEDED

ALLIANCE, Nebr.—Labor union officials can't figure out whether there's a bartenders' shortage or more people, "bending elbows." To help relieve the help situation, the union resolved to open its ranks and receive male apprentices to the fine art of shaking up a drink.

Maine Crowds the Political Spotlight

WASHINGTON — As Maine goes, 'so goes the nation,' according to the old political adage, but the actual partisan advantage from the nation's only September election was a bitterly contested issue today as Maine prepared to go to the ballot box.
A study of the way Maine has gone in the last few decades revealed that the state's vote shows a trend on the part of the nation at large. Conclusiveness of the trend is, however, open to dispute.

Only once in this century has the state given its November electoral vote to a Democratic presidential nominee, but both in 1916 and in 1932 its September election results showed sufficient Democratic strength to point to election of Democratic presidents.
In 1812, Maine, due to the three-cornered split resulting from Theodore Roosevelt's third party candidacy, gave its electoral vote to Woodrow Wilson.

Maine, on September 14, will elect a United States Senator, three representatives and state and county officers. Bitterly contested partisan battles all along the line will have in them elements of state as well as national controversy. For example, the booted-about Passamaquoddy tidal harnessing project has split party lines.

House minority clerk William Tyler Page, a student of political trends for a quarter of a century, said today that the Maine vote this month should show, however, the national trend.
"By and large as Maine goes so goes the country," said Page.
An inconclusive result, however, he said, would be election this month of a Democratic Senator and three Republican House members, or two or three Democratic House members and a Republican Senator.
"If figures should show that the usual Republican majority is not quite normal, it would indicate a close national election in November," Page added.
The state now has two Democratic representatives, one Republican, and two Republican senators. One of the latter, Senator Wallace H. White, is opposed by Louis J. Brann, Democratic and former governor, in the present election. One Democratic House member is not running for reelection, Rep. Edward C. Moran.

There were few people on the islands. His father was one of the negotiators of the treaty annexing the Territory of Hawaii to the United States, and was founder of the Honolulu Advertiser.

"Many families," says Thurston "formerly partial to Florida and California, now are coming to Honolulu. Nearly all of the hotels are expanding. There is a shortage of apartment houses, and a great building boom is on.

"The building boom is due to the increased buying power on the islands, made possible by the good sugar price and improved pineapple business that has come about under controlled production."

In addition to these factors, Thurston points out that the development of Pearl Harbor by the Navy Department into a major naval repair base and the building of an additional drydock big enough to handle the largest battleships, also is increasing the prosperity and expansion of the city.

Increased Diabetes Presents Problems

AUSTIN—The increasing incidence of diabetes presents a serious problem to the physician and the average citizen, according to Dr. John W. Brown, State Health Officer.

"Ordinary diabetes, that is diabetes mellitus, which is often referred to by many persons as a disease of the kidneys, is not a kidney disease, but a disease of the pancreas in which there is deficient production of insulin," Dr. Brown said, "and this mistaken idea that diabetes is a kidney disease probably results from the fact that the insulin deficiency causes large amounts of carbohydrates (sugars and starches) to pile up in the body. The result is that the patient drinks large amounts of water, and because of this large amount of urine containing sugar are passed.

"The pancreas is a vital organ located in the upper abdomen behind the stomach. It has a double function; it supplies the most powerful digestive juice in the body, known as the pancreatic juice, which it pours into the intestine through special ducts developed for the purpose; and it makes another substance, called insulin, which goes directly into the blood, and is essential for the use of sugar in the body.

"Obesity and heredity overshadow all other factors in the causation of diabetes. Most diabetics are fat. Not every fat person, of course, gets diabetes. Heredity seems to be the most important link in the chain of diabetes.

Facing The Issue

Pat O'Brien and Margaret Lindsay tell the story of a woman condemned by a gangster's lips who was redeemed in a G-Man's arms, in "Public Enemy's Wife," the Warner Bros. picture now at the Arcadia Theatre.

British Figuring Garbage Trucks May Aid Gas Raid

PORTSMOUTH, England—Secret experiments carried out during the past two months by a number of officials in Portsmouth have resulted in a scheme to deal with emergencies during an air raid.

They suggest that a fleet of 30 motor refuse-collectors already used by the Corporation can at once be transferred into a unit for dealing with gas and incendiary bombs.

The vehicles are each fitted with a powerful pumping apparatus for compressing the refuse collected into a small space. It has been found possible within a few seconds — by connecting the pumps after the watertight wagon has been filled with 1,500 gallons of water — to produce a 28-foot high spray from the roof of the vehicle.

Thus, it is hoped, by using a suitable neutralizing agent it would be possible to decontaminate an area filled with any non-persistent gas such as phosgene. It could be used, too, as a fire-fighting unit with a powerful jet, and also, by means of its channel-washing spray, for sweeping away from the streets and persistent gas such as mustard gas.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys
Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.
If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.
Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Student Publishes His Own Magazine

SWEETWATER, Tex. — Jim Boothe, young Schreiner Institute student, has spent his summer vacation as publisher, editor, printer and artist on his own literary magazine, "Portfolio."

Boothe has worked throughout the summer preparing the first of a series of "Portfolio" volumes. He collected the material, edited it, helped with the printing and carved the block engravings it carries. Contribution of prose and poetry came from many parts of the nation.

Next year the magazine will sponsor a short story contest, with the winning article to occupy a featured place in the edition. The first issue carried contributions by Grace Nell Crowell, poet laureate of Texas; Patrick More-
