REBELS PUSH STILL NEARER TO THEIR GOAL

The Madrid government fought with its back to the wall today, its existence gravely endangered by the relentless drive of the revolutionary forces toward Toledo. The rebel capital at Burgos predicted that Madrid would fall within three weeks, despite government resistance and optimistic announcements it was obvious the leftist defenders were being driven back slowly toward Madrid. The rebels were within 12 miles of Toledo. One report said their advance troops had entered the city and were fighting in the streets. The government's gravest danger was from the rebel plans to push eastward past Toledo and cut communications with the coast. If they are thus isolated the leftists have no choice but to surrender or fight to the end. The government was hard pressed on other fronts. There was heavy fighting in the Guadarrama Mountains north of Madrid.

PEEPING THRU The KNOTHOLE

Coach Baker Wright threw a big wet blanket over our hopes for this year—not the hopes for the Bulldogs but the hopes that we would again have the same ease in reporting games. Not that it is any picnic at best, but at times it is worse. We asked Wright at practice Monday afternoon if he had the numbers allotted to the various players yet. "No, I haven't," he said, and then threw the wet blanket. "In fact," he continued, "I would like to change the numbers for each game." What we are getting at is that it is hard enough to follow the team play-by-play after you have memorized about 20 or 30 numbers and the names that go with them and the positions in which they belong, but when the numbers are switched it makes it a pain in the neck, not only for the sports writers, but for the fans. And then, today, we picked up a paper and saw that Coach Weldon Chapman, who once coached the Cisco Lobos, but who now coaches the Lubbock Westerners, had worked out a system where all the even numbers were for players on the right side of the line and the odd numbers went to the left and the fullbacks had double numbers and the left halfbacks having numbers ending in 7 and the right halfbacks having numbers ending in 8 in order that everyone could tell just who everyone else was. There may be double-barreled psychology in both systems. Keep the numbers scrambled, like Eastland does, so no one will know who does 56 is and why, or number them so plainly that everyone knows. The scrambled system might keep your stars obscured for a play or two, but not for long, and the other system might point them

"Jinxed" Auto Goes to Owner

CLOVIS, N. M.—Like a bad penny, J. L. Ashby's "jinxed" automobile has turned up again. His light coupe, once "borrowed" by Clyde Barrow and Bonnie Parker, noted Texas desperadoes, was stolen July 29. But Ashby wasn't surprised, considering the run of hard luck he has had with it. He had wrecked it several times, and a number of things had been stolen from the car, including six radiator caps, three gearshift knobs, fender lights, a phonograph, an overcoat, a flashlight, a pair of gloves, all the tools, and a lady's purse, not to mention several tanks of gasoline. Ashby bought the car second hand from a cousin of Bonnie Parker's. When it was stolen he said, that considering his past bad luck with the car, it would be his fate to have the car found just before the insurance company was ready to pay off on his policy. Sure enough, the car has been found in Oklahoma—two weeks before he was due to receive a check for his loss.

Mrs. Stevens and other relatives sobbed at the verdict. The decision replied to a plea by District Attorney Will Parker to "send Stevens to the electric chair or turn him loose."

General Tax On Business Solon Idea On Pension

Business generally will have to share a reasonable tax for revenue for old age assistance in the opinion of Senator Wilbourne B. Collier, who will leave Eastland Thursday for the special session of the legislature starting Monday at Austin. Senator Collier stated, "I'm not going to vote a 'death penalty' on anybody." Pledging his efforts to aid in the passage of a tax bill for revenue for the pensions, Senator Collier said, "That ought to be our first consideration—to get the job done." In reference to removal of the living standard clause of the pension, Collier said, "I have certain ideas about correction of the old age pension itself." Many letters in protest to the living standard clause of the pension bill have been received by the Eastland district legislator recently. Most of the writers of the letters point out inequalities in payment of the assistance. Collier, at the time of the formation of the old age bill, endeavored to prevent enactment of the living standard clause.

Sheriff Foster Is Witness at Trial Of Ex-Eastlandite

Pat Martin, Stamford farmer, formerly of Eastland, went on trial Tuesday at Anson on a charge of theft of cattle. The charge grew out of the loss of two Jersey heifers from a farm of B. W. Thane east of Stamford September 23, 1935. Martin was a tenant on the Thane farm at that time. Principal witness for the state was Elmer Wright, brother-in-law of Martin, who pleaded guilty to a similar charge in the last term of 104th court and received a two-year penitentiary sentence. Wright has served 64 days of the term, and is out on furlough. His testimony was to the effect that Martin asked him to come to Samford and take two heifers to Eastland and pasture them at Wright's farm there; that he (Wright) did so on the night of September 23, 1935; and that he (Wright) understood the cattle belonged to his brother-in-law.

Horatio Alger In Hall Of Fame? Why Not?

Harvard University is about to commemorate the deeds of some 50 of its graduates in a hall of fame, and it has asked eight judges to vote on names.

Among the literary sons of Harvard, it is announced, four were approved unanimously—Oliver Wendell Holmes, James Russell Lowell, George Bancroft (no, not the movie actor), and Francis Parkman. But the interesting part, to us, is the fact that three of the judges voted for Horatio Alger.

Considered from the artistic standpoint, it is probable that there never was a worse novelist than Horatio Alger. It is hard to think of a literary fault that his work did not possess; his books weren't even interesting, to anyone beyond the grammar school level.

And yet Harvard might do a great deal worse than put his bust in its hall of fame. It is very doubtful if, among the 50 distinguished alumni whose names are finally agreed upon, there will be a single one who influenced the life of his time more profoundly than did this same Horatio Alger.

For Horatio Alger took the rags-to-riches myth, the log-cabin-to-the-White-House saga, and riveted it into the brains of whole generations of Americans. Over and over again he told that story—indeed, it was the only story he ever did tell, as far as this particular alumnus of the Alger school can recall.

His first chapter invariably dealt with a poor but deserving boy who was facing an unkind world with no assets but a stout heart and a habit of living right; the last chapter invariably showed this same lad marrying the banker's daughter, saving the family homestead, and establishing himself in a position of complete financial security—amid the plaudits of the multitude.

Over and over again Alger chanted this lay; and how many millions of young Americans lapped it up is beyond computation. But the lesson stuck. The Horatio Alger story became part of the American credo—in a sense, it was the American credo. It was what we all believed.

We carried it with us long after Horatio Alger had ceased to be anything more than a name. As a nation we came down through the great industrial development of the last half of the 19th century, through the years of tremendous immigration from Europe, through the passing of the frontier, through the era of trusts, down into the day of mass production, holding companies, technological unemployment, and super-corporations—still fondly believing that any poor boy who had a stout heart and lived right could wind up with a home on Long Island and three cars in his garage.

As an expression of our faith that America was the land of opportunity, as a reflection of our determination that democracy, if it meant anything, meant that man must be judged solely on the basis of his ability, his personality, and his achievements, this was a magnificent thing. But as a guide to an extraordinarily complex age, it fell short.

We have made a good deal of trouble for ourselves in the last decade or so by refusing to admit that life isn't quite so simple as Horatio Alger told us it was.

Just As We Were Beginning To Get Acquainted

In this column, answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. As evidence of good faith inquirers must give their names and addresses, but only their initials will be printed. Address inquiries to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.

Records Show the Fall of Meteorites

AUSTIN—Stars have fallen on Alabama, but meteorites are known to have fallen 38 times on Texas.

Dr. H. B. Stenzel, supervisor of the division of geology of the museum being established by the University of Texas, is gathering samples of the meteorite falls for permanent display. Twelve already are in possession of the university. Three more have been lent for display purpose. The university's largest weighs almost 26 pounds. Another weighing 20 pounds was found near LaGrange, Fayette County, 39 years ago. The largest, lent for centennial display, weight more than 200 pounds. It was found in 1850 on an Indian reservation on the upper Brazos River. A depression near Odessa is believed by scientists to have been caused by the largest meteor to strike within the state.

NEW YORK.—Despite his 3 and 2 defeat by Johnny Goodman in the Walker Cup matches, Hector Thomson, British amateur champion, is seen as a distinct threat in the American championship at Garden City, Sept. 14-19. Thomson is a remarkable shot-maker. "Garden City's extremely fast greens should be to Thomson's liking," says Ted Turner, professional at Pine Valley, where the young Britons were shut out, 9-0, in the team competition. "Thomson's hands seem so comfortable and secure when he places them on the shaft. Every move he makes shows poise. He is straight as a rule from hips to feet on the address. His swing is so smooth it conceals the power in it. He closes the club-face just a trifle as he comes through." The British rout in the Walker Cup play is attributed to everything from lack of time for practice to the weather.

NATURE of American golf architecture favors the home-grown. That and the lead-soled sand blasters to which the British are unaccustomed. "As a general thing British amateurs are too loose at the top of the stroke and don't get their hands through the ball at impact as crisply as the Americans do," explains Turner. "Thomson and Jack McLean are exceptions. "The other British players on this side get too much body and wrist into the shot. They rely heavily on rolling the wrists at impact, which is what we call 'pronation.' This calls for perfect timing. Rolling the wrists as you come into the ball lowers the factor of safety dangerously.

You are apt to pull the ball off line.

"MOST British amateurs hit the ball too quickly, as though afraid it will run away. Their fast, jerky swings are easily understood by anybody who has played in a typical Scottish gale. Those sudden gusts of wind are apt to rock you off your feet. "The rigorous nature of American golf architecture, with bottle-necked greens ringed by traps, breeds a race of sharpshooters. "Our heavily trapped greens place a premium on bunker play. Americans have to master all types of explosion shots. Yankee ingenuity simplified this problem by the origination of lead-soled sand blasters. The British didn't have these blasters when they arrived. They bought them soon after starting practice, but couldn't get the hang of them in so short a time."

ENGLISH amateurs can't take time off from their jobs to play golf as they do in this country. As Charley Lacey, the British-born Lakeville professional and Long Island Open champion, remarks, barring Thomson it would have been fairer to have matched the English Walker Cup team against a group of American week-end golfers. "As one-sided as the Walker Cup matches were, one must make allowances for the British because of their unfamiliarity with our larger ball," asserts Lacey. "Being larger, our ball is harder to control in a cross or head wind. It requires time to adjust your putting touch to the bigger ball. This, plus greens slower than those overseas, may explain why the British putted so weakly in the Walker Cup matches."

TRANS-PACIFIC FLIGHT

BEGIN HERE TODAY
KAY DUNN, pretty young nurse, is hired as a stewardess on Overland Airways and, the same day, meets TED GRAHAM, veteran pilot who flies the trans-Pacific route.

Kay is assigned to the western division of the service. MONTE BLAINE, apprentice pilot, pays her marked attentions. Monte is a dashing, romantic, but Kay is more interested in Ted. She and DICKIE, Ted's adopted 7-year-old son, become close friends.

Ted returns from a trip to the Orient and takes Kay to dinner. Later Ted asks Kay to marry him. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XII
TED talked on, presenting his views on what he called "this marriage business." He said, "You've got to plan for marriage, just as we planned, years and years, for the trans-Pacific flight. None of this heady, romantic stuff. You've got to build, stone on stone, to achieve something that will endure without mishap."

It was the most unromantic proposal of which she had ever heard. And this was Kay Dunn, who had wanted the man-of-her-heart to sweep her off her feet and say, "Kay, I adore you. I can't live without you!"

But when Ted had finished talking he sat there, waiting for her answer.

She simply gazed at his eyes and saw what she wanted to see. The touch of his hand was reassuring. His kiss, when she said, "Yes," welded her heart and mind.

But, even as she accepted him, she felt again the fear that had tormented her before. Was Ted asking her to marry him merely to make a home for Dickie? Her mind—but not her lips—asked the question, "Are you sure you love me or do you simply want a well-ordered life, a life like the charted course of the Flying Mariner?"

She did not say these things to Ted, because she knew that they would hurt. At the moment she could not doubt his sincerity.

"I do love you dearly," he repeated. "I've known it—for ever so long. There was a time when I fought against it. I didn't think it was fair to you."

"Ted, you dear!" Kay said, smugly closer to him. "You should never fight against loving a woman. When you do, you're lost!"

THEY sat there, looking out across the lights of the bay, each of them with the same thoughts—planning their future. For a long while neither spoke.

"Until death do us part," Kay murmured blissfully.

"And those are big words," Ted said, in his matter-of-fact way. "We'll have to get down to the business end of it. First, you'll have to give up your job, of course. Being the wife of Ted Graham, with a child going on 8, is a job big enough for a girl like you."

Kay sat up, a bit disturbed. She hadn't thought about leaving the air service. But of course Ted was right. The Overland line had rules against employing hostesses who were married.

"Dickie adores you," Ted said. "There'll be no trouble on that score."

"And I adore him," she said slowly.

"He'll be happier living at home, on the beach. I think we ought to send him to day school, and let him be with you as much as possible. I'm away for six weeks sometimes."

She smiled. "That's the penalty for being the wife of a pilot on the trans-Pacific flight," she said. "Just a sailor's wife!" he told her.

Kay's complete confidence in Ted grew as they planned together for the future. "Do you like this house?" he asked. "Of course I'm quite used to it. It's like—my pipe."

"I adore every corner in it," Kay said. "I'll love this room more than any other because—you asked me to marry you here."

"Of course," he said, smiling. "Jerry will have to take up bachelor headquarters elsewhere!"

"I should hope so!" she said. "I wouldn't want him to be forever reminding you of the state of single-blessedness. You bachelors can be a case! You think you're free, and you're not."

TED laughed. "Poor Jerry. I've known him since the war. He was a bomber. I suppose—I suppose he'll be stepping off now, too. He always said, joking, 'I'll never marry as long as the boss doesn't.'"

"But we'll invite him to dinner lots!" she said. "Showing him what he's missing in overlooking wedding bliss!"

Suddenly Ted slapped his thigh. "What will we do with Kay?"

The words gave Kay another twinge of fear. Wasn't Ted even going to let her run the house? He was so capable and efficient, such an organizer, was he going to take over management of the kitchen, as well as everything else?

"I should think," Kay answered, "that it would be a good idea to keep Sato as a house boy to do all the atrocious things—like washing dishes. I'd infinitely prefer to do the cooking myself. I don't relish the thought of coming home to hear Sato say: 'Dinner ready. Pork and beans. Coffee fresh, made only day before yesterday.'"

"I would hate to lose him," Ted said, laughing. "After all, he's been with me 10 years."

KAY had the unhappy thought that Ted owned so much in life that he had acquired by habit! Impulsively she said, "You haven't any animals? No parrots that will say unspeakable things in a lady's hearing?"

Ted laughed. "Only a little mouse that comes out and watches me while I work on the typewriter. I've become attached to him!"

"How long has this attachment lasted?" she asked. "If he eats the curtains—"

She made the familiar gesture of cutting one's own neck. "And there's the budget—"

"Oh, we don't need to talk about that. We have an expert on budgets at the office. Besides, budgets are one of my hobbies. I love to make them. At the office mine are always fool-proof."

Kay said, "I see. You don't make out the rules of conduct for the flying personnel—the rules for their private lives?"

"Of course I do," he said, seriously. "Every one at the airport knew the stern discipline that was imposed on the pilots of Trans-Pacific Airways."

But suddenly he smiled and that smile reassured her. He said, "You know, planning our married life, I'd almost forgotten to mention the honeymoon!"

She said, "Ted!" And then a moment later, "I hope you're not the kind of man who will forget your first wedding anniversary!"

His eyes were glowing. "We'll make the trans-Pacific flight together. We'll be married here and embark on the Flying Mariner, my ship, for our honeymoon! Honolulu, Guam, Manila!"

Kay's eyes were glistening with tears. "Oh, Ted, you've made me so happy! I didn't dare to think about it—but I do want so dreadfully to take the Pacific flight with you! Think what it will mean to me—to us—in later years. Our honeymoon spent on the Mariner and in all those lovely places. It's your life, and it will be mine! You're wedded to the air. I'm wedded to the air. We'll be together out there—on the blue Pacific—under the stars! And I'll be so proud of you!"

"And I'll be so proud of you!" he said.

WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON.—It has become increasingly clear to political leaders of both major parties that there is really one big fighting issue in this campaign from a vote-getting standpoint—government spending.

That doesn't mean that most vital issues are not involved. It means that the Republicans now figure their best hope of victory lies in plugging away on the subjects of extravagance, waste, deficits, national debt, and taxes.

It also means that Democrats, recognizing this issue as a weak point in the New Deal armor, will fight back harder in this field than in any other.

It is now possible to simplify in their essential patterns the lines of argument the campaign orators and propagandists will take, as follows:

DEMOCRATIC: Skipper Roosevelt has brought the nation safely through its great crisis at relatively small cost. The few billions spent by the New Deal are far outweighed by the big boost in national income and the swing back toward prosperity.

It's a good thing to "spend a million dollars to save 10 millions." Deficit for the current fiscal year will be $2,097,000,000 as compared with $4,704,000,000 for 1935-36, showing that the hump of expenditures has passed and that the long-diverging curves of federal receipts and expenditures are definitely beginning to come together again.

REPUBLICAN: Roosevelt promises of decreasing deficits and early balanced budget are not to be taken seriously, because of failure to keep past promises of this sort. The New Deal has been a profligate carter of the public funds, diverting them to the sil-

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By NEA Service
MANY of us just couldn't get along without canned salmon and canned crabmeat. You can serve them in the routine ways so that they soon become a bore, or you can turn these foods into the basis for excellent and unusual meals.

Here are two tried-and-true recipes made with canned crabmeat.

Crabmeat Chops for Four
Two cups canned crabmeat, 1 cup thick white sauce, 1 teaspoon chopped parsley, 1-2 teaspoon chopped onion, 1-4 teaspoon pepper, dash of cayenne pepper, 1 egg, cracker crumbs.

First, the method of preparing the thick white sauce—Melt 2 tablespoons of butter or shortening in a hot frying pan and then add 1-3 cup of flour gradually. When it bubbles add 2-3 cup of hot milk at once and then 1-3 cup (making 1 cup in all) slowly, stirring constantly until smooth. Add 1-4 teaspoon salt and 1-8 teaspoon pepper. There's the thick white sauce.

Now, to this white sauce add all the ingredients in the list above except the egg and cracker crumbs. Cook together for a minute or two.

Cool the mixture.

Make 8 heaps of the crab mixture. Take each heap and form into a chop, dip into the beaten egg and then in the cracker crumbs and then fry in hot, deep fat.

Serve at once with tartar sauce. These "chops" are wonderful. Light and delicate. With them you can serve grilled potatoes or potato chips.

Tomorrow's Menu
BREAKFAST: Stewed prunes, cereal, cream, soft-cooked eggs, toast, milk, coffee.
LUNCHEON: Vegetable soup, celery, radishes, rice custard, milk, tea.
DINNER: Crabmeat chops, grilled potatoes, string bean salad with vinaigrette dressing, apple turn-overs, cheese, coffee.

Crab Ravigote for Four
One cup canned crabmeat (6 oz. can), 1 cup thick white sauce, 1 egg, 1 tablespoon capers, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1-2 teaspoon paprika, 1 pimento chopped, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 tablespoon green pepper chopped, 1 tablespoon minced parsley.

Make the white sauce following the first recipe.

Stir the crabmeat into it and add the seasonings and the beaten egg.

Stir in fold in the stiffly beaten egg white.

Pour this mixture into a greased casserole and cover the top with fried bread crumbs.

(This, by the way, is always a good idea for oven-prepared meat or fish dishes—frying the bread crumbs instead of merely using buttered crumbs. They are more crisp and taste delicious.)

Dust the top with paprika and bake 30 minutes in a moderate (350 degree) oven.

If the dish gets too brown on top, cover the casserole. Baked potatoes are delicious with Crab Ravigote.

Large Ballot Will Be Used After All

AUSTIN.—Texans will vote a Jumbo ballot, after all, on Nov. 3. First it was planned to shorten the ballot by using the names of candidates for president and vice president and omit the names of the presidential electors of the various political parties. Now it has been decided to use the names of the electors. An act permitting the smaller ballot was passed by the legislature several years ago, but the act never has been followed.

If it had been followed four years ago, Vice-president John Garner could not have run simultaneously for vice-president and for Congress, as he did. No name

Oil Well Spacing Plan Is Halted

AUSTIN.—A movement to have a state-wide oil well spacing rule that would make one well to 10 acres the standard has halted suddenly. Just why may never be known. About the state capital there is a rather general impression that the proponents decided they had better "lay off" the proposal.

A remark of Railroad Commission Chairman Ernest O. Thompson may have had something to do with it. He usually recalled what the state railroad commission did when "Brown vs. Humble" was the leading topic in Texas oil circles.

"Brown vs. Humble" was the litigation between Humble Oil & Refining Company and C. H. Brown et al. over well spacing. The State Supreme Court handed down a ruling which holders of large oil tracts hailed as being tantamount to saying that oil production must be allotted on an acreage basis. The railroad commission respectfully let the Supreme Court know that its ruling was not based on scientific fact if it went that far—that the commission believed that the more wells there are the greater will be total oil recovery.

Spacing rules now are based on fire hazard and danger of cratering of wells in areas with high gas pressure. Thompson explained that a wide spacing is generally tried first in a new field. Then, if conditions warrant, closer spacing is permitted. He said the commission has no power to order wide well spacing for any purpose but conservation and safety. Economy of having many acres to a well does not have weight in spacing rules.

At the same time the commission has taken a practical step to let oil operators know if it is good economics to continue drilling oil wells. Heretofore takings for a
