Politicians Are Taking Things Too Seriously

When the history of these times gets written, some cloistered scholar is going to have a terrible time figuring out why the politicians of this fair land got so much more frightened about the state of the nation than the plain people did.

We have heard enough calamity howling this summer to dress up the fall of Rome. A visitor from Mars, assuming that he was misguided enough to spend his time listening to the more frenzied campaign orators, would have supposed that Washington already lay in ruins, would have bones of Abraham Lincoln had been flung into the Sangamon river, and that the nationalization of women was going to be arranged just as soon as the registration cards could be made out.

Currently, for instance, we have Father Coughlin announcing solemnly that "1940 is the last general election we'll ever have unless the evils of modern capitalism are immediately eliminated."

Come, come now, father; isn't that taking in quite a lot of territory? The evils of capitalism are numerous and we've put up with them for quite a long time; must we really, to preserve our democracy, get rid of every last one of them in the next four years? Are things quite as bad as all that?

Suppose we don't get them all eliminated; what is going to happen to our general elections? How are we going to lose them? You must mean that someone is going to establish a dictatorship over us, don't you? Okay. Now listen, father:

This America for which you are so blithely predicting a dictatorship is a big country and it's awfully tough. There are a lot of rowdy people in it who don't like being pushed around. They're the people who shove autos through store windows at big conventions, and heave pop-bottles at umpires at ball games, and toss chairs into rings at wrestling matches, and step on the toes of traffic cops. They're the people who turn trucks upside down during "farm holiday" demonstrations, and take ball bats and sawed-off billiard cues out to the picket lines in strikes.

They're the people who turned out by the million to throw the Wilson administration out of office in 1920 and the Hoover administration out of office in 1932. They're the people who have a derisive "Oh, yeah?" for fakers and stuffed shirts.

The man who is going to establish a dictatorship over them had better come early and be prepared to stay late, because he is going to have his hands about as completely full as any human being in all history.

Times have been bad and we have a great many hard problems to solve. But things never have been and never will be quite so bad as some of our self-appointed saviors are trying to make out.

Ohio police are investigating charges that a mother beat her daughter with a frying pan. If she's an old-fashioned mother, what's unusual about that?

The American government probably would be glad to join the embargo on munitions if U. S. gangsters were included on the blacklist with Spain.

BECOMING A CHRISTIAN

Devotional Reading: II Corinthians 1:3-10

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of Advance

THE growth of the Christian church through persecution and martyrdom could find no more striking, direct, and colorful illustration than in the conversion of the Philippian jailer.

Because of the uproar that their unpopular religious teachings had aroused, Paul and Silas were arrested and thrust into prison after they had had "many stripes laid upon them," or, as we would say in modern terms, "severely flogged."

So intense was the zeal of the persecutors that they had the jailer make sure the prisoners could not escape. For his own protection as well as for the safe-keeping of his prisoners, the jailer not only thrust them into the inner prison, but made their feet fast in the stocks.

Could prisoners in such a plight find any occasion for light or rejoicing? Here, it would seem, was a circumstance that might have daunted the stoutest soul, but Paul and Silas, out of the joy and inspiration of their faith, were praying and singing hymns to God while their fellow prisoners listened.

SUDDENLY there came a great earthquake, in which the foundations were shaken, the doors opened, and everyone's bonds loosed. The jailer, roused from his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, was about to kill himself when Paul cried loudly, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here."

It was an amazing scene. Under Paul's example and influence, prisoners with every opportunity for escaping refused to run away. The jailer was so startled that he called for light, and fell down with trembling and fear before Paul and Silas, saying, "What must I do to be saved?"

He may have meant only what must he do to save himself from punishment by those in authority over him, or his question may have had a deeper meaning, for he could hardly have been in contact with Paul and Silas without knowing something of the salvation that they proclaimed. His strange experience may have given him a new understanding, and it may have been with sincere meaning and concern for his soul that he inquired about salvation.

At any rate, Paul interpreted the question in the larger way. There was no longer need of stocks and bonds and prisons to keep these prisoners. Bringing them into his house, the jailer washed their stripes and set food before them while upon him and all his household was performed the rite of baptism, the symbol of new life and new joy.

ALL truly vital Christian experience has some such beginning. It is with a new understanding that man discovers his soul's need, the reality of truth that he had not known before, and the power of God's grace giving him new convictions and a new will. This, however, is only a beginning.

In the verses of the lesson from the third chapter of Philipians, we have a suggestion of the true nature and goal of the Christian way. It is the way of that complete consecration and surrender in which the presence and power of Christ fill the heart, thrusting out ignorance and fear and self-will, and everything that keeps the soul of man in bondage.

WITH the apple season full upon us and the markets offering so many delicious varieties of apples at this time, try this unusual way of making apples and cake dough blend into a sublime whole.

As a rule, the flavor of apples is so delicate that it is lost when combined with cake dough—excepting always the great American apple pie.

Apple delights, too, are an exception, as you will agree, once you have tried the recipe. Visualize halves of apples, neatly fitted on top of crunchy cake dough, baked in muffin tins so that they hold their shape, juicy and topped with whipped cream!

Apple Delights for Six: Two cups flour, 1-2 teaspoons baking powder, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1-4 cup shortening, 1 cup milk, 1 egg, 6 ripe, firm apples.

If the apples used are witnessaps (usually the most juicy), bake them, halved, on a greased pan in the oven until they begin to soften. Most other varieties of apples will not need this pre-baking.

Now for directions: Mix and sift the flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in the shortening with a knife.

Add the milk and the beaten egg and mix well. Drop tablespoons of this batter into large, well-greased muffin tins. Fill them about one-half full.

This amount of batter is

Monday's Menu
BREAKFAST: Diced oranges and bananas, cereal, cream, crisp bacon, raisin muffins, milk, coffee.
LUNCHEON: Cream of pea soup, croutons, open tomato sandwiches, cookies, milk, tea.
DINNER: Broiled ham, shoestring potatoes, creamed onions, pear salad with chutney sauce dressing, apple delights, coffee.

enough for 12 apple delights, or two per person, serving six.

Now peel the apples, cut them in half crosswise, and take out the cores.

Put each half (using six apples) on top of the batter, cut side down, and fill the holes with sugar.

Bake in a hot oven 25 minutes until the apples are tender. At the end of that time the batter will be baked, too.

Serve warm with a spoonful of whipped cream on top of each delight.

The cake dough has a delicious consistency, neither biscuit nor pastry, and yet crunchy and delicate.

You can make half the amount by using three apples and half the batter recipe. If you use the largest-size muffin tin, you may find one delight per person enough.

This dessert will come out of the tins easily and be neat, round mounds topped by nicely browned fruit.

"Are Sin, Disease and Death Real?" is the subject of the lesson-sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, October 11.

The Golden Text is: "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you" (James 4:7,8). Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "When Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise, He said unto them, Give place: for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed Him to scorn. But when the people were put forth, He went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose" (Matthew 9:23-25).

The lesson-sermon includes also the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy: "Sin, sickness and death must disappear to give place to the facts which belong to immortal man. Learn this, O mortal, and earnestly seek the spiritual status of man, which is outside of all material selfhood" (page 476).

Eastland Mavericks Surprise By Holding Eagles to 26 Points

ABILENE, Oct. 10. — Eastland high school's under-rated Mavericks banged into the local pigskin park Friday afternoon and promptly started throwing things at our unsuspecting Eagles.

Tiny Tommy Samuels, the Maverick quarterback, threw strikes to his pass receivers. The Eastland line, topped by it husky Captain Jack Trantham, a tackle, threw the home ball carriers for losses. It looked suspiciously as if Johnny Kitchin, the adversary's tutor, had thrown Abilene a curve by the poor showing of his team in previous games. The net result was that a Dewey wrench was thrown into Dewey Mayhew's machinery for all of twenty minutes or more.

It took the domestics that long to score a touchdown, made possible by a generous break. The count was only 6 to 0 at the half, but the Abilenians got their bearings in the next two periods, and paraded to three more touches for a final majority of 26 to 0.

The game, Abilene's second straight victory in Oil Belt play, was viewed by a corporal's guard, consisting principally of two pep squads, two bands, relatives of the players, newspapermen and a radio staff.

A fumble by Daniels, Eastland back, eased the tension for the audience early in the second quarter. Fulback, Odell Herman chucked the loose ball on the Mavericks' fifteen yard stripe. From there the Eagles went to a touchdown, but the going was pretty rough.

on a wide swing between Eastland's right end and tackle, and lunged the final yard for the counter. Cumpton's boot for extra point was wide.

Eastland bounced back almost immediately with its only threat of the afternoon. The Mavs got started from midfield where Abilene's speedy J. D. Tidwell dropped the package when R. Taylor tackled his shirt tail on an end sweep.

Samuels, who weighs only 125, really does pitch the pelots, and has another year of competition in which to grow and improve, uncorrupted by the aerobics. He flipped to Garrison for six measures, then to Jones for nine and a first down. He hurled another completion down the fairway, good for eight yards and a first down on the Eagle eleven. Samuel kept chunking, but the next one was incomplete and then he had one intercepted by McAdams, Eagle wingman.

That ended the ball game to all practical purposes. Rounds three and four were merely a matter of the Eagle line's opening holes for Herman, and of Herman's running tanklike over the opposition when the line didn't open.

His ball carrying was 90 percent of the home offense, and the chunky fellow made every one of the 20 points made in the last half. The Eagles clubbed their way 43 and 51 yards to counters in the third inning, and 64 paces in the fourth. He made them from the ten, five, and one yard lines. Eastland had all its attack wrapped up in the aerial. The visitors lost more ground than they made running, but Samuels and Woods made seven of their twenty one passes count for 88 yards. The two passes hurled by Abilene fell incomplete, but the land forces romped for 345 yards.

In addition to Trantham and Samuels, the Mavs presented good players in Garrison, end; Jim Taylor, guard; and R. Taylor, center. The whole Eagle line exhibited power, but little enthusiasm.

Legionnaires and the Story of Their World War Experiences

CLAIBORNE S. ELDRIDGE
Machinist Mate, 1st Class
U. S. Naval Aviation
A. E. F.

"There is no doubt but that the U. S. Naval Aviation Forces, little mentioned in history, did their part and did it well, in the winning of the war."

CLAIBORNE SHERWOOD ELDRIDGE

Editor's Note—This is the 24th of a series of biographies as written by B. H. Peacock, past commander of Carl Barnes Post No. 69, covering the World War experiences of members of the local Legion post.

The jinx of the figure 13 seemed like an omen of good fortune for Sailor Eldridge. For no permanent ill-effects marked his tour of duty either at home or abroad, and the vast and useful experience in connection with "going places and doing things" no doubt gave him a world wide vision that he probably never would have otherwise received.

On December 13, 1917, Eldridge was one of a party of 13 who had enlisted in the U. S. Naval Aviation, and who were entraining at San Antonio for the naval base at Pensacola. Upon arriving, the 13 sailors were assigned to Company No. 13 in Barracks No. 13. In the space of only a few days, Eldridge and several of his buddies had qualified in the ground school by passing the examination on aviation motors, and was transferred immediately to Philadelphia awaiting orders to sail.

January 5, 1918, found the group shipping out of New York on the H. M. S. St. Paul for foreign duty. The mystic number 13 again seemed to follow this sailor, for there were a total of 113 naval station mechanics aboard the ship as she steamed out of the harbor. On January 13, 1918, the ship dropped anchor in the harbor of Liverpool, England.

And, according to Eldridge, many more thirteens followed him in his experiences both at home and aboard. But let us retrace for a sort of peep-in at his early life.

He was born October 21, 1891, in a family of five sisters and two brothers on a farm near Lone Grove, in Llano County, Texas. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Eldridge, looked toward the proper development and education of their children, so it was only natural that young Claiborne should become receptive to his parents' program of training. He attended grammar school at old Grandview; spent two years in high school at Gorman, and pursued further his education from 1907 to 1910 at Hankins Normal College in the same city.

The inclinations of young Eldridge turned in the direction of the teaching profession, so the years from 1911 to December 11, 1917, were spent in the school room; first at the Grayson school near Trent, Texas; later near the city of Houston, and the remaining three years at New Hope, Texas.

A decision which was consummated on December 11, 1917, proved a fateful one in the life of this young professor. For on that day, his resignation was handed to his board of trustees in order that he might entrain for the city of Austin and volunteer, if possible, in the aviation branch of the army. Some 6,000 men, according to Eldridge, were ahead of him awaiting examination, so the possibility of immediate enlistment seemed a hopeless one. Being bent on getting into the service as soon as possible, he went to San Antonio, where he was accepted in the aviation branch of the U. S. Navy. And thus it was that the jinx of the lucky 13 followed him from San Antonio; thence to Pensacola, Florida; on to Philadelphia; New York; and, finally, on January 13, 1918, to the great city of Liverpool, England.

"On the 14th," stated Eldridge, "we entrained at Liverpool for Southampton on the southern coast of England. The entire route through southern England presented one of the most beautiful pictures that I have ever seen. A continuous array of beautiful flowers and green hedges on both sides of the railway, while in the background the rolling hills and glades of varied colors and hues, interspersed now and then with an old castle, nestling in the estate of some of the English nobility, presented a scene that will long remain in my memory."

On January 15th, Eldridge and his buddies embarked for a trip across the Channel; landing at La Havre in France. In a short while transfers brought them to Bordeaux, and thence to Pauillac on the Gironde river. It was at Pauillac, which was situated about nineteen miles from the mouth of the river, that the American Navy command decided to build its leading aviation base. For it was off the coast from the Gironde river that the U-boats of the Imperial German Navy had been doing such havoc to allied navigation. In the short space of a few weeks a very imposing base of some twenty-four hangars and one hundred barracks had been built. An interesting sidelight into the experience of Eldridge while at Pauillac was the fact that his commanding officer during his first six weeks was none other than Capt. H. B. Cecil, who, the reader may recall, went to his death some short while ago with the crash of the ill-fated U. S. S. Shenandoah.

Pauillac was where General Napoleon had built his base hospital which served his army during the Napoleonic Wars of 1803-1815. Some of the buildings were still standing at the time the American aviation base was established, and were being used by the French as a German prison camp.

"When we first arrived in Pauillac," recalled Eldridge, "we were stationed in an old French laundry building. Among other things, it became our duty to do some excavation on the side of one of the nearby hills for the construction of a railway spur track. And you can imagine our surprise and astonishment when we uncovered a huge pit filled with human bones. The natives explained to us that this was the old burying ground for the dead from Napoleon's army that was encamped in this area some hundred or so years prior."

The capabilities of Sailor Eldridge were recognized shortly after arriving at Pauillac, when he was promoted from third to second class petty officer, and shortly to that of aviation mechanic, first class.

In April, 1918, Mr. Eldridge was transferred about some eighty miles distant to the Isle of Fromentine in the direction of St. Nazaire, where he was detailed to assist in the construction of a second U. S. Naval aviation base. In passing from Pauillac to Fromentine, the route led through the renowned and historic city of Chalons. It was here that Napoleon's army had its headquarters. History also records the fact that in ancient times, after the Franks had turned back the Huns in one of the decisive battles of the world's history, that the Treaty of Chalons was signed, and the tide of history was turned.

The Fromentine naval base was soon completed with twenty barracks and six hangars. "An so thorough was the vigilant watch of the American naval aviators, that the German depredations on allied shipping in and around the Bay of Biscay became almost negligible. Only one ship, the U. S. S. Covington, was lost during the entire eleven months (April, 1918, to March, 1919) that the bases were in operation. Although there was no menace after the armistice, the seven months of warfare could have done untold damage were it not for the watchful eye of the naval fliers.

"About six months after the sinking of the Covington," recalled Eldridge, "a buddy and I were walking one evening along the beach when we noted a life boat drifting in. Upon investigation we found it to have been one of the life boats of the Covington, and in it were found the skeletons of two sailors. The boat was soon dismantled by the sailors and the remains taken back as souvenirs to America. A small piece of the wreckage was secured by Eldridge, which has since been placed in a picture frame, and which has remained as a memento of the great war.

Only once during his tour of duty in France did Eldridge have occasion to contact any of his old friends or associates from home. It happened to be in France that Eldridge he accidentally ran across one of his old friends or associates home at Gorman, Texas—and who, by the way, was now a sergeant in the army.

On March 1, 1919, Eldridge and others at the base sailed for home, reaching Norfolk, Virginia, on March 28, Petty Officer Eldridge was honorably discharged from the service of his country, having served some seven months, fifteen of which were spent overseas.

And as to big moments, Eldridge had his in the submarine zone off the coast of Ireland," recalled Eldridge. "My most tense, or exciting moment, came when we were ordered to search for a submarine. I was on the deck, and I believe it or not, but every soldier and sailor on board was scared, for we were crossing at the time that a great deal of damage was being done by the German submarines."

"But my big moment was during my stay at the Isle of Fromentine, when I took advantage of an opportunity to fly over the submarine-infested Bay of Biscay with one of our naval aviators. Having had some experience in the air, the faint likelihood of witnessing the bombing of a submarine from the air (should the occasion permit) was an experience that I will always remember.

But the war was over. Mr. Eldridge returned to his home at Gorman, and entered the employ of the Gorman Home Refining Company. Thence again back to teaching; and again to the oil fields. On September 3, 1922, he became married to Miss Evelyn Mae Beaty of Carbon, Texas. The Eldridge family has been honored with two children, Billie, a daughter now 14; and June Frank, a boy now 3. Since 1922, Mr. Eldridge has taught in several of the schools of Eastland County, including the Eastland South Ward, and the principalship at Flatwood.

In 1934, the electorate of Eastland County saw fit to advance Prof. Eldridge to the office of County Superintendent of Public Instruction, with which position he is now associated.

At present a resident of the city of Eastland, he is counted one of its able and substantial citizens. He is a substantial member of both his church and lodge. The World War veterans of the Ranger American Legion post feel that in his membership, the post can enjoy the wisdom and counsel of one who thinks clearly and speaks the truth.

NEW TEAM

Frances Farmer, who has appeared in only two previous movies, has the leading feminine role opposite Bing Crosby in Paramount's musical film Sunday and Monday at the Arcadia Theatre, "Rhythm on the Range."

Development of a mechanical chicken picker is a cheerful note. We never did care for the taste of the Friends who arrange our blind dates. A Chicagoan says parents who want to cure their children of sucking their thumbs should teach them to dance. How about giving them saxophones?

A Shoe-Fitting Resolution Made By Josephs' Clerks

A fitting resolution has been adopted by each of the shoe fitters at Josephs', which is as follows: "Believing it the duty of every shoe man to sincerely serve the customer's interest, I hereby promise myself to increasing study of the art of fitting feet. I promise to keep alive in my heart the ideal of dispensing true comfort. I will never slip to the level of simply selling shoes.

"May I unfailingly remember that a finely made shoe is meant to be the home of happy toes — that on my judgment and my responsibility rest the dispositions of the business success, perhaps the health and very life of those who sit before me at the fitting stool.

"I promise to keep uppermost in my mind the best love of my calling — which teaches that a short fit is the source of most ills, that feet and shoes are heir to. I would be worthy of the customer's trust, I would protect him from the lurking evils in 'The same size as before.' To his end I pledge my ceaseless effort to compensate for growth, for increased weight, and the elongation of the foot that comes from a busy day. I will not forget the Army last minimum of one such elongation clearance between tip and toe nor overlook the fact that dress last require more as they range from broad to narrow toes.

"Realizing that the customer's knowledge is usually confined to the elementary factors of size and width — and that he can know little of last differences for accommodating various types of feet. I will always help him or her to appreciate the reasons when a change in size or width seems necessary. I will explain the importance of proper measurement from heel to ball, of seeing that the large toe joint coincides exactly with the sharp turn of the arch, a position on which every other conformation of the shoe depends.

"Realizing that seven feet out of every ten have some form of foot trouble. I will be able to intelligently diagnose and suggest the proper appliance necessary to correct the trouble and give comfort to my customers to the best of my ability.

"If in any of my fittings, I should err, if my skill should prove too meager and my stock of sizes too few — I pray that my error be on the long side. It is better that the toes have too much freedom than that they be confined in the perspiration discomfort of a too short shoe."

Couple Is Easily Most Active at 70

By United Press
FORT WORTH — Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Dehn of Fort Worth could qualify in any contest for most active humans at 70 years of age.
Their favorite recreation is "dancing at night spots until the wee hours," both admit. Dehn, 73, a retired railroad worker, takes long walks for exercise, reads without glasses, eats what he likes and gave up chewing tobacco because it was his worst "vice."
The couple have been married 53 years and made fishing trips from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. He began working for the Texas and Pacific railway in Houston in 1877. Since then he has worked in Fort Worth, Marshall, Texarkana, Sherman and Denison.
Dehn mixes a neat mint julep, and his wife, 70, does all her own housework. During the world war she fed pies and cakes to hundreds of homesick soldiers bivouaced at Camp Bowie here.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS-By Blosser

In this column, answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. As evidence of good faith inquirers must give their names and addresses, but only their initials will be printed. Address inquiries to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.

Q. When was meat first canned in Texas? B. M.

A. Gail Borden had a plant in operation at Galveston in 1851 or 1852 for making canned "meat biscuit." There was also a meat canning plant at Jefferson before the Civil War.

Q. I think many Texans would be interested in having you tell them something of the life of J. J. Stubbs, who died recently at Wortham at the age of 89. F. F.

A. He was born in 1847, was brought to Texas in 1849 and when 8 years old worked in the Texas Pioneer office at Fairfield. In 1862, at 15, he was engaged in driving a six-ox cotton wagon to San Antonio to be sent on to Mexico to run the blockade established during the Civil War. He was active in the affairs of Freestone County all his life.

Q. When did Jefferson reach its greatest growth and to what was its decline attributed? B. G.

A. About 1870 it had a population of some 25,000 or 30,000, due to large river shipping on Red River and Cypress Bayou, steamboats reaching there from New Orleans and other points on the Mississippi and tributaries. Merchandise was distributed from there to many Texas points, from which shipments in turn were made through Jefferson. The decline was due to railroad competition and consequent falling off of river transportation.

Q. Which of the state parks drew the largest number of visitors during the summer of 1936? P. J.

A. For the three months ending September 1, McKenzie Park led with 237,000, Balmorhea was second with 27,000, and Bastrop third with 24,000. McKenzie Park, adjoining Lubbock, is the favorite swimming and golf resort of that city.

Q. Centennial Song Book

In the homes, in the schools, in public gatherings of all kinds, Texans are singing the best known typical songs of Texas—songs of range, songs of the Texas home, patriotic songs—songs every Texan should know and delight in singing.

Twenty-eight of the best songs sung in Texas have been carefully selected by published musicians, set to music, and published in a 36 page, 6 by 9 booklet on heavy coated paper with covers in colors. The booklet will be mailed postpaid for 25 cents. Send all orders to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.

Will H. Mayes, 2610 Salado Street, Austin, Texas. I enclose 25 cents in coins, securely wrapped, for a copy of the "Centennial Song Book."

Dallas County Tax Collections High

DALLAS—State and county taxes totaling $3,322,731.04, not including $1,200,000 in highway taxes, were collected in Dallas county during the budget year just ended.

How much of this total will be county revenue cannot be determined until the September tax report is compiled. County Tax Officer Ed Cobb said. Approximately 55 per cent will be county revenue.

Current ad valorem revenue for the budget year was $2,900,229.79, highway tax was $1,200,000, delinquent taxes totaled $348,650.84, and insolvent taxes were $10,816.29. Dallas county received only $150,000 from the highway tax, as the remainder was turned over to the State Comptroller for division among smaller counties.

September's campaign against delinquent taxes netted $46,384.49, second highest month of the year. January was top month for delinquent payments, with a total of $51,530.67.

Broken down, poll taxes for the year totaled $109,236, occupation taxes $17,970.98, beer and whisky licenses $93,985.97, and inheritance taxes $168,741.51.

The tax figures cannot be compared to budget estimates until the amount of county taxes is determined, Cobb said.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—WPA officials in Washington are chuckling over one little "boondoggle" which has already netted the government a profit of $2,000,000 above its cost, and may yield a great deal more. When the profit mounts a few more millions, they're going to do a little public chortling.

This "boondoggle" includes three projects for "white-collar" WPA workers, set up by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. One is for reviewing income tax returns, one for reviewing miscellaneous tax returns, and one for investigating liquor dealers.

Together, they've cost a little more than $3,000,000. And they've already collected more than $5,000,000 in taxes and made possible the assessment of $8,627,000 more, which the regular bureau administrators are moving to collect.

All WPA workers on the project were taken from relief rolls, but of course they were pretty carefully selected and 3185 of them were given a three-week training course, with a little more than 200 non-relief accountants and investigators to furnish guidance.

The point is, that the regular staff of the Bureau of Internal Revenue never has been big enough to compute through all the income tax reports. Usually the members check only the big ones. This WPA project made it possible to comb through a great many more, and the added tax revenue is the result. Incidentally, they found something more than 2000 who had overpaid their taxes and had refunds coming.

The liquor tax investigators worked by dropping in on saloons and taverns and suddenly testing the liquor on the spot. They made it tough for a lot of chiseling proprietors who were palming off bootleg stuff on unsuspecting customers who were satisfied with a legal-looking label.

These tax investigations were made not only in Washington, but in other places. The Texas tax board, for instance, set up a project to ferret out untaxed land. It seems that lots of land in Texas was surveyed in the early days only by the rudest means, like counting the revolutions of a wagon wheel as it traversed the land. Tax officials there believe that, as a result, perhaps 10 or 12 per cent of all Texas land is untaxed.

WPA project people were put to work on that, some 3600 of them, and already they've put on the tax duplicate land never listed there before. It is expected to bring Texas more than $300,000 annual revenue.

Virginia is sponsoring a similar project for digging up untaxed land, and in Pittsburgh, similarly employed WPA tax project workers actually found a $600,000 residue that had been overlooked by the assessors for 15 years. They found at least 100 unassessed buildings.

Some 800 former relief workers are doing this WPA job in Allegheny county.

MOST of the criticism of WPA "boondoggling" has been aimed at "white-collar" projects, and thus WPA officials in Washington are watching these "profitable" white-collar operations under WPA with considerable satisfaction, and counting on them as a potential source of defense ammunition when they have mounted to an even more impressive total. SALUTE TO Love

BY Rachel Mack

BEGIN HERE TODAY
MAJOR SAM MEED, kindly, indolent, lives on a run-down Blue Grass farm with his two orphaned granddaughters, CAROLINE MEED and KATHERINE MEED, called Kate. The Major wastes his money in drink.

Kate is engaged to MORGAN PREWITT, but when EVEL ELLWELL comes home from college, bringing a visitor, Morgan breaks a date with Kate to attend a party given by Eve. Kate forgives him, being much in love, and defends him when Caroline blames him.

The sisters plan to go to Louisville next day with old ZEKE, a family servant, to deliver four hams ordered from the Meed farm. Major Meed comes home intoxicated, having spent a much-needed $5 bill. The girls rely greatly on ALTHY, elderly Negro cook who is Zeke's wife.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER III

"It's all such a waste!" Caroline said. "Such a wicked waste!"

THAT night the Major was ill and delirious. Althy and Zeke helped the girls care for him in his big downstairs bedroom. The two servants would take turns at coming in from their cabin in the yard, anxious to help the old sinner in his extremity.

Caroline, about midnight, leaned her head against the wall and wept with weariness and vexation. "It's all such a waste!" she sobbed. "Such a wicked waste! He hasn't any health or strength to spare. He hasn't any money at all, hardly. And yet he spends it all going on sprees!"

Kate put a comforting hand on her sister's shoulder, turned suddenly. "What's he raving about now?" she asked.

They listened. The Major was no longer dashing up San Juan Hill with his Colonel. He had left the Spanish-American War behind. He had finished also with the World War in which he had lost his only son, the girls' father. He was now loudly declaiming about "the mortgage" and some "young upstart from the mountains" who was "about to get the farm." And then his voice died away and reason returned to his eyes.

It was well after midnight when the girls went upstairs to bed, but their desire to go to Louisville had not abated. They would be up at 5, they decided, in order to meet Zeke's 7 o'clock departure.

The morning routine was rushed through with a touch of excitement. The Major slept heavily while the rest of the household did the chores. A few minutes before 7 the sedan was ready to start, the girls seated in the back, Zeke at the wheel and the four carefully wrapped hams packed among them.

Kate said, "I think it's going to be a nice trip, Caroline."

"Meaning the weather?" asked her sister.

"That and everything," Kate answered. "Do you think, darling, there's any chance of my getting a new dress for the Dalton dance Thursday night? The old green organdie's a sickly mess."

Caroline said, "There's about as much chance of that, honey, as of my getting my senior year at the university."

Kate forgot the dress. "Poor old Cline! Would you really be willing to go back and finish after you've been out a year?"

"Would I?" whispered Caroline feelingly.

Kate said, "I didn't realize it meant so much to you... How much would it cost?"

CAROLINE answered promptly, "as if she'd thought it out long ago, 'I could do it on $500. Living in one of the co-operative cot-aged, I mean. If I could get my degree, maybe I could get a good job and help with the finances."

Kate said passionately, "Granddaddy ought to raise the money for you! I'm going to talk to him about it."

The conversation was not finished, for a most startling reason. They were emerging on the highway and Zeke was shifting gears; suddenly there was a roar, a crash of sound and an impact. The Meed sedan careened and turned completely over, landing miraculously, on its four wheels.

For a few moments there was a queer, heavy silence. Then a jumble of sounds, discordantly blended. A strange voice was cursing in a foreign language. Zeke was praying in a frightened, sing-song monotone. Kate was leaning over her still sister and calling frantically, "Are you hurt, Caroline? Are you? Are you?"

The owner of the profane voice got out of a big black sedan—the sedan that had struck the Meed car—and approached them. He jerked at the door. When he had gotten it open he pulled Zeke from the car and made him stand upright.

He shook the old Negro and said excitedly, "One of 'em's hurt! Gimme a hand here!" He spoke with a foreign accent.

Caroline opened her eyes and rubbed her head. "Where am I?" she asked, looking at her sister in bewilderment.

"Oh, darling!" Kate cried. "You can speak! We're on the state pike. Right by the big gate. Somebody ran into us. I think it only struck our fender, but it turned us over and around. Do you think something's broken, Caroline? Some of your bones, I mean?"

Caroline moaned, shifting her shoulders. "All of 'em," she answered with an effort at levity. "At least it feels it at way."

KATE laughed hysterically. Then she looked up to see the dark, heavy stranger peering at them. Afterward, trying to describe him to her grandfather, she said, "He had a snarled face and tattered clothes. He was chewing a cigar."

She said to this man now, "Get us out of here! Get us both out! There's something heavy on my foot!"

The dark foreigner got them out. He was efficient and rather dynamic. He worked rapidly. "We don't want a crowd gathering," he said, panting a little.

Over at the side of the road Zeke continued to pray, loudly and ardently, and to intersperse his petitions with the word "ham."

"What's he saying?" asked the stranger, jerking his thumb in Zeke's direction.

Kate explained. "We were taking some baked hams to a club restaurant in Louisville. They're due early this morning. Zeke's thanking God that we weren't killed and asking Him how we're going to get the hams there on time."

"Oh yeah," said the heavy man, chewing his cigar. "It is important? I mean, have you gotta get 'em there?"

Kate nodded, looking at him with aversion. She did not know who had been at fault in the accident. Probably Zeke, in coming out on the highway. She only knew they must get the baked hams to the Pemmick Club as they had contracted to do. She said decisively to her treacherous sister, "Let's stand here and haul somebody to pick up Zeke and the hams—"

"No!" said the dark stranger, making a quick decision. "Leave it to me. I'll take the old man and your stuff myself. I'll pay damages on your car, too. Stand over there by the gate while I look it over. Stand well back out of the road!"

The girls and Zeke obeyed. Kate whispered to Caroline, "So it was his fault! And he admits it! Pinch me if I'm dreaming."

WHILE they waited near the stone gate, the man made an expert investigation of the car he had damaged. He tried the motor, which, strange to say, still ran. He examined the lights, the windshield, the windows, the chassis. He used tools from his own car in the investigation. When he had finished he returned the tools to his car, wiped his hands on a flashy handkerchief from his coat pocket, and approached them.

Sensing Kate's leadership, he addressed her. "Fifty dollars will fix it up. The motor ain't hurt. You'll need a new fender and a few other little repairs." He drew a roll of bills from his pocket and skinned off the top one. Kate saw that it was actually $50, and thanked him.

A passing roadster slowed to a stop and the stranger waved it on. "No help needed!" he called. A truck, following immediately after, received the same information. To Kate he said confidentially, "No use dragging other people into this. It's our business. Yeah?"

When the road was clear again he said briskly, "Well, let's move the meat to my car and get goin'. I can't fool around."

This was done, but just as Zeke was about to step into the stranger's automobile, Kate surprised Caroline by saying, "I'd rather Zeke stayed here with our car. My sister and I will go into town with you and deliver the hams. Is your car all right?"

It appeared that it was. The luxurious big machine with an eastern license had suffered nothing but a loosened fender and broken headlights. Presently they were moving off.

For five miles, perhaps, no one spoke. Then the man said abruptly, "You'll have some spare parts stolen, I'm afraid, while the old man's telephoning."

A few more miles in silence, and Kate made a discovery. "Oh, dear!" she waited. "One ham's a wreck! Gravel's worked through where the paper's torn!"

"Cooked ham?" came an interested query from the front.

"Yes," answered Kate. "Can't you smell it? Slow baked."

Suddenly the man was looking back at them, a slender, shining line in his hand. "Cut me a hunk!" he commanded. "I haven't had time to eat since yesterday noon."

Kate took the knife, gingerly. She began to cut the ham. She knew the man had stolen their license plates. She was wondering what she should do.

"OUT OUR WAY" -- By Williams

An ideal windbreak for the northern great plains might include, the department suggested, beginning on the windward side, a row each of choke-cherry, Siberian pea-tree, green ash, boxelder, two rows of Chinese elm, one of boxelder, two of green ash, and one each of buffalobery and American plum.

A clean, cultivated strip at least 12 feet wide on each side should be included. Other trees might be used, providing the low growing trees are kept to the outside.

He says folks are very kindly disposed when, after this long pastorate, they still give evidence of such splendid loyalty.

He and Mrs. Johnson wish to thank their many friends for this token of appreciation. More than fifty participated in these gifts.

After the gifts had been examined Mrs. Simons took charge of the situation and put on a program of games and other amusements and then the crowd departed leaving their best wishes and hopes for the closing out of a happy and prosperous year.

Stadium Work Has Progressed Nicely
Work on the Bulldog stadium which has progressed nicely the past week, is expected to go forward even faster from here on out, it was stated yesterday by W. F. Wilson, architect in charge of the construction work.

A temporary shut-down order was scheduled for Friday while a new work form was being drawn up and approved, but this work progressed much faster than was anticipated and little, if any, delay is expected in the work on the stadium.

Seats are now being installed, and another week to 10 days should see this work about completed.

The work scheduled for the coming week includes erection of the light poles, completion of the track and erection of a temporary fence.

In the meantime, the grass on the field is growing slowly, due to the unusually cool weather, and it now appears that it will be next year before a good, even turf can be grown. The field, proper, is to be worked over again at the end of this season, with new sandy soil added to fill in places where the soil has sunk slightly during the recent rainy season.

Trainmen Urge Six Hour Day
FORT WORTH—A six-hour day for railroads was recommended as the solution to that industry's unemployment by J. A. Zanger of Chicago, Ill., vice president of the International Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

"Our big job," Zanger said during a recent visit here, "is to displace the basic 8-hour day with six hours if the jobless are to be put back to work. The shorter day would hike employment between 20 and 25 per cent."

Increased freight and passenger business has given many railroad workers jobs since Jan. 1, Zanger said. If put into effect, the federal pension law would retire five per cent of those now working, he added, giving their positions to younger men.

TRIBESMEN LIKE THEIR PHILCO, TOO!

These Maori tribesmen were caught by a photographer as they sat in front of their home in distant New Zealand, listening with rapt attention to the marvels of a radio program as brought to them by their all-wave Philco set. There are more than 40,000 Maoris living in New Zealand today, many of whom, like other primitive peoples, are making increased use of radio to bring them in close contact with the more advanced sections of the globe. Short wave radio is a two-way institution, and radio programs from the home of the Maoris and other far corners of the world are also greeted with intense interest by American listeners. The arm-chair traveler with a properly constructed and installed all-wave set can tune in on the Fiji Islands, the heart of Africa, or the metropolitan centers of Europe, Australia and South America; and can gain, from such listening a fuller understanding of the customs and languages of all lands, as well as the various forms of entertainment by different peoples.

ing was held, in which the Presbyterian Church U. S. held its sessions at the same time; one in the City Temple, and the other in the First Church. These two denominations constitute the largest bodies of Presbyterians in Texas. The first session, and all the popular evening sessions were held together. The joint meeting closed with a great banquet in the Scottish Rite Cathedral. Four or five hundred were present. Dr. Murdoch McLeod, of New York, and Dr. Sweet, of Louisville, were the principal speakers at this banquet.

At the U. S. A. Synod the Presbytery of Abilene was represented by Revs. L. B. Gray, H. G. Markley and R. A. Walker. Mr. L. J. McMillen was a delegate, but was kept from attending by illness.
