The World's Too Small for Racial Enmity

Those three reporters who are racing around the globe may not realize it, but they are handing the world a neat little object lesson on the folly of jealous nationalism. Using ordinary, commercial means of transportation, they expect to circle the globe in three weeks or less. That measures the shrinkage of the earth in this modern era. It shows just how closely the races of man have been jammed together by twentieth century science.
 In a world grown as small as that—a world which you can completely circle in less time than you could have crossed the Atlantic a century ago—it ought to be clear to the blindest that men are under a greater compulsion than ever before to get along with one another, to cooperate, to substitute harmony for discord.

Yet the trend has been all the other way, ever since the war. A policy of isolation has been followed in almost every great capital.

Nation after nation has tried to pull down the blinds and pretend that it could work out its own salvation without regard for what its neighbors did—just as if neighbors were still as far away as they were at the time of the Napoleonic wars.

That policy may have been all right a century ago. It is far from all right now. For an odd thing about technological improvement is that when you invent a new machine, you are compelled to use it, whether you want to or not.

Inventing machines that have made the earth shrink to a tenth of its old size, men are forced to use them. They have to live in this new, smaller world, where their neighbors are next door instead of miles across the prairie. To try to live as if nothing had been changed is folly.

This effort to swim against the current has created an unbearable tension; a tension that is reflected in armament races, in surlly dictatorships, in declining standards of living, in mass regimentation, in the fear and suspicion that make people take it for granted that there will be a new world war before 1940.

Fortunately, it is not too late to change. There are signs, at last, that the nations are beginning to come to their senses.

Within the last two weeks, America, England, and France have joined forces to stabilize the world's monetary system and revive world trade. Smaller nations have followed suit; now Italy has joined in the game. The current war, at least, seems to be coming to an end.

Nor is that all. The French government is taking action to lower its tariff walls and has offered to suppress the import quotas which strangle trade in its cradle.

There is at least a chance that it will get enough cooperation from the other powers to make world recovery real and thereby to drive away the shadow of approaching war.

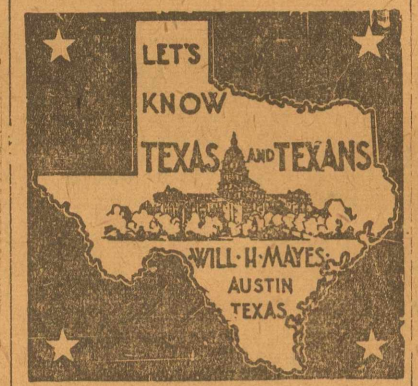

Something of the kind is in the cards, certainly. A world that can be circumnavigated in 21 days is a world in which people must get along with one another or perish miserably.

France, seeking to cement its ties with Poland, is trying to think of something concrete to offer.

Q. What was Noah Smithwick's trade or profession? D. G.

A. He followed many pursuits; was a blacksmith, locksmith, school teacher, ranger, builder of mills and gins, and an adventurous trader. In his late life he dictated to his daughter a story of his Texas experiences and observations, which give a vivid picture of early Texas life.

Q. Was Bowie ever in business in San Antonio? J. S.

A. He was in business there in 1828, and probably until 1831, when he started with 10 men for the Presidio San Saba in search of the reputed "Lost Gold Mine." They encountered a band of 164 Indians and killed 62 of them with a loss of only one man. It was in 1831 that he married Ursula Veramendi, a daughter of Vice Governor Veramendi of San Antonio, the wife and two children dying of cholera in Saltillo in 1833.

Q. Who were the first group from out of Texas to join the revolution against Mexico? W. A. B.

A. The "New Orleans Grays" under command of Captain Robert C. Morris, who reached Texas, November 21, 1835.

Q. For whom was the town of Lockhart, Caldwell county, named? O. R.

A. A number of the first Poles to come to Texas, who settled first at Panna Maria, moved to Bandera in February, 1855.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
 NEA Service Staff Correspondent
 NEW YORK—President Roosevelt's campaign speeches may not be changing any votes, but they certainly do make the colonels, captains, and corporals in his ranks feel mighty good. The president's big push was what the boys and the girls had been waiting for. After his first admittedly political blast at Syracuse, they thought... he was just so grand that they ran around with wide grins and happy laughter. Most of them cherish the theory that their man is showing himself to be a political slicker, a man of glittering words, a scheming trickster with few scruples and one whose radio speeches must be heavily discounted. Republican effort to undermine Roosevelt's effectiveness by increasing popular distrust of him is taking the form of indications from C. O. P. sources, of stressing various alleged "slippery" episodes of the campaign.

Just before the Republican convention was to go on record with a strong civil service plank, the president ordered thousands of additional postmasters under civil service.

Anticipating Republican attack on high taxes and national debt, he summoned Senator Pat Harrison from his Mississippi campaign to assure the nation that there would be no need of new taxes at the next session.

A. For Bird Lockhart a surveyor in Austin's colony, who owned the league of land upon which the town was started about 1846. The place was first called Lockhart Springs, but when Caldwell county was organized in 1848, it was made the county seat and Springs was dropped from the name.

Q. When did a colony of Poles settle a Bandera? B. K.

A. A number of the first Poles to come to Texas, who settled first at Panna Maria, moved to Bandera in February, 1855.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS—By Blosser Sport Glances. . . . .By Grayson

NEW YORK.—Carl Owen Hubbell stands astride the baseball world in as mighty a mold as any pitcher before him.

DISPASSIONATELY and slowly, Hubbell went over the Yankee hitters. Gehrig, he said, wouldn't make much trouble, because he was one of the batters who takes a cut at the ball from below Brooklyn bridge.

HOW quickly things can take a turn for the worse, as the aviator remarked to himself when the wings fell!

There was Hubbell pitching for the Giants and supposed to render the Yankees entirely impotent.

That skinny fellow is going to be either one of the finest pitchers, or a guy who can't stick around for two months, said McGraw.

SALUTE TO Love

by Rachel Mack

BEHOLD HERE TODAY KATE and CAROLINE MEED live on a run-down Blue Grass farm with their grandfather, MAJOR SAM MEED, and two old Negro servants, ALTHY and ZEKE.

Kate is engaged to MORGAN PRENTISS, but is neglected by him for EVE ELWELL, just home from college. Kate and Caroline start to Louisville with Zeke to deliver four hams ordered by a club.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER VI

WHEN the girls returned from the city on the 5 o'clock bus the Major was impatiently awaiting them.

It had been a shock to him, awaking that morning to hear Zeke excitedly phoning a Shelby garage concerning the injured car.

The old Negro had hardly hung up the phone before the Major had him cornered.

"Good Lord!" exclaimed the Major. "How did it happen?"

The Major jerked himself to a sitting posture. "You mean the girls were with you when it happened?"

"Yes, Major. They shore was. Dey meant to ask you could dey go. But bein' as how you come home las' night under de weather—"

The old gentleman sank back on his pillow with a chastened sigh. He inquired anxiously, "Was it a strange person that hit you, Zeke? Surely the girls didn't get into a car with a stranger?"

"Seem like dey did, Major Sam. It were Miss Kate's idee. She said how I was to stay an' look after de car while her an' her sister take dem hams to de club. But don't you worry, Major Sam. Dey was a right nice actin' white man all right. He pay fer de damages."

The old gentleman was dressed and pacing the porch when the girls returned. As they walked up through the woodland pasture to the house they could see him there. Some of the high spirits of the day fell away from them, for they knew that a "session" was unavoidable.

THEY went inside and waited until the old man was comfortably settled in his favorite chair. Then Kate said, "Well, Granddad, I can see Zeke's told you what happened this morning. We had a narrow escape but it all turned out beautifully."

Caroline took up the tale: "We got three of the hams there safely, but one was ruined. It was the only one that spilled out of the car. Did you ever hear of such good luck?"

The old man said, "It's good luck enough to have you girls safely out of it! And Zeke. Nobody hurt. Remarkable!"

"And the man who hit us gave me $50 to have the car repaired, Granddad," Kate said. She showed him the bills and then, at a wise look from Caroline, put them back into her purse.

The old gentleman was dressed and pacing the porch when the girls returned. As they walked up through the woodland pasture to the house they could see him there.

"Exhibit One!" she said, showing Caroline's new bank book with its neat entry. "And Exhibit Two!" unwrapping a flat

Judge Prentiss! Her skin prickled. The idea of being indebted to Morgan's kindly and successful father was too intolerable to contemplate.

"Yes," said Major Meed. "For two years now, I borrowed it to repair the tobacco barn after the big storm unroofed it."

Kate remarked, "The money belongs to Caroline now. I gave it to her. She's the one to say if you can have it."

CAROLINE said steadily, "Of course he can have it! We've got to pay our debts. The money's yours, Granddad. A gift from Kate and me. Easy come, easy go!"

Kate thought with a proud surge of love, "Caroline's a thoroughbred!" Then when her grandfather had concluded his formal little speech of thanks she said to the old gentleman urgently:

"And now tell us about the mortgage, Granddad. How are you struggling along with that?"

His face lost its recently acquired good cheer. He shrugged and lifted tired hands in a gesture of defeat.

"That struggle's over, baby Kate. Prentiss and Elwell had a telegram from Lexington two days ago sayin' the holder is foreclosing. That's why I went to town and got drunk yesterday, I reckon."

Kate said, "You poor old darling! Why didn't you tell us instead of trying to bear it all by yourself?"

"Of course we won't let them foreclose, Granddad! That's out of the question. We'll refinance. We'll apply to the government for one of those loans—"

The old man shook his head wearily. "I've tried that, honey. Prentiss and Elwell have done everything they could to work it for me that way. But the fact is, I ain't a good risk. The mortgage is too heavy and I'm not a good farmer any more. Since I lost my tenant a few years back, my crops haven't been worth the seeds, hardly. Zeke and I are both wearin' out, and the farm hands you hire nowadays don't take an interest. . . . No, not even Uncle Sam is goin' to finance a poor risk like old man Meed."

Kate and Caroline looked at each other incredulously. Caroline said in a queer voice, "You mean we've got to— to leave Meed Meadows, Granddad? Move out of our house?"

"He nodded, not looking at them. "Where will we go?" asked Kate, not flinching.

"We'll have shelter," he replied almost cheerfully. "The tenant house over on the Mount Hebron road. I've held on to that. It's got 20 acres to it. We can have a mighty fine garden there."

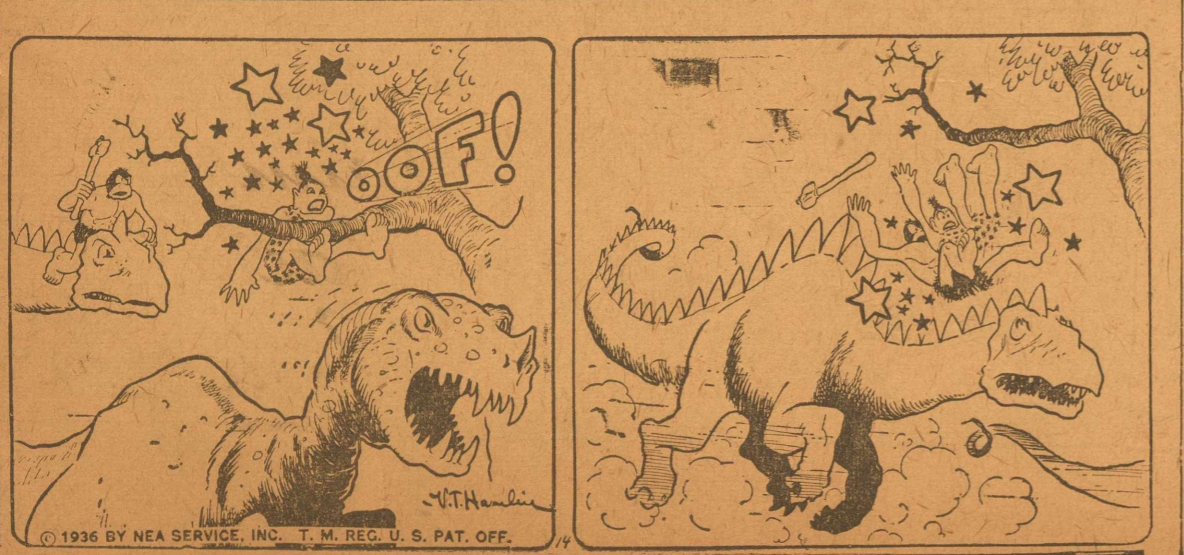

The tenant house! The girls were seeing it as they looked unbelievably at their grandfather. A stark little six-room house. Its porch sagging. Its upstairs windows resembling a pair of closed eyes in an unhappy face. Beside it a worn-out, untended orchard. Behind it a hideous, paint-peeled barn. Before it a broken picket fence, separating a weedy lawn from the pike. . . . Was that to be their home?

Such a case had not occurred. It was cited as an illustration of the limitations on extradition. Courts have held that under the federal statute a citizen is taken from one state to a demanding state as a fugitive. If he has not been in the state where the poison was taken, he is not a fugitive from that state. He may have avoided the state. He may have omitted to go there, but he cannot be said to have fled from it," was the quoted ruling.
