WIDOWS BY WIRE

By CLAUDINE SISSON

Two separate telephone companies, each striving for the business, entered the village of Milford at the same time. The inhabitants welcomed the agents, but at the same time saw the opportunity to get cheap communication with the outside world. The agent of one company reduced rates a fourth, but no one would sign a contract. The second agent went one-fourth better, but still no signers. There were twenty-two families that wanted telephones, and half a dozen farmers would follow suit, but all were waiting for Judge Wragg!

Judge Wragg was justice of the peace, and the big man of Milford. What he said went. In this instance, he advised the people to wait until he gave the word. The judge was sixty years old, but hale and hearty. He was a widower, and was always talking of getting married, and folks said that the reason he didn't marry was because he considered it too hard of McCulloch County. Office in work to ride around the country and do the preliminary courting.

The telephone agents soon made up their minds that they must do something special for the judge to get another subscriber. One of them finally offered him low rates, and then no rates at all, but the big man of the town thought the matter over for half a day and then replied:

"No, I guess not. Come to think of it, postal cards cost only a penny aplece, and if I want to hold communication with any one I can do it through the postoffice. A little slower, mebbe, but more satisfactory. In speaking through the telephone one is liable to make mistakes, but in writing it's different. No, I guess I don't care for a telephone. I hear they are always getting out of repair

"But we'll keep 'em in repair at our own expense," urged the agent.

"No, can't say as I do. Don't know but three or four men over there, and they don't amount to shucks."

Three days passed, and the agent who had made the last and best offer was in despair. He could have offered the judge graft, but he feared to do it. It had been tried by other men and brought them a bad turningdown.

"In the name of heaven, man, what is it you want?" he finally asked as he determined on a last effort. "Nothing 'tall, neighbor," he calmly

"I never take another man's word, even on the weather. Black and white's the thing. When you've got an agreement on paper folks is bound to stand by it."

"But I'm ready to make a legal agreement, and the company will back me. Write out whatever seems good

"Well, that's talking to the point," replied the judge, and the agent was asked to call the next day.

The man was only too glad to do so. He found an agreement that not only gave the judge the constant use a London hotel, when a strange young of a telephone for two years, with all man came up and said: repairs to be made with promptness and without expense to him, but it Dash?" was stated that he had the first call on the wire, and that he was not to rising. RING MERCHANDISE

Maybe This is a Fable But You Will Agree With Us it Might be True. We Have Seen Less Reasonable Things

A traveling salesman told us once that he knew a merchant who had a big chalk ring in the rear of his store. Whenever a salesman came to sell chair, beds, furniture or anything he handled, he took him back to the ring, grabbed his photographs and threw them in the air over the chalk ring. He then bought the articles whose photographs fell in the ring.

> Some merchants use the same plan without even providing the ring, but it is hard on the customer and will eventually be hard on the merchant. A successful merchant nowadays has to be continually on the watch for something new, something that is just coming out and which will please his customers. He has to watch the markets and the trade periodicals and when something comes out new be ready to nab it. No chalk ring merchandise for his. If he does, the other fellow gets his trade.

We claim to exercise judgment in the purchase of goods. We claim to know what the people want and get it, and sell it at prices that the people can afford to pay. If in need of anything in our lines we will be pleased to show you through and we know we can convince you if you are not certain.

BOOSTING TRADES DAY.

Committee Assures Success by Widespread Advertising.

Brady's big First Monday Trades and Sale day is certain to be known far and wide following the Trades Day committee's present line of efforts. Not only have circulars and cards announcing and advertising the day and occasion been sent to practically every horse and mule buyer, stockraiser and stockman within a radius of a hundred or more miles, but the committee has authorized the advertising of the sales day in the papers at Mason, Menard, San Saba, Llano, Junction, Brownwood, Eden and Paint Rock. The members are working hard for the success of the occasion and are leaving nothing undone. Buyers from the north and east have been communicated with and there is assurance that a goodly representation will be on hand to make things interesting. Also the committee has secured the services of an auctioneer for the occasion, and will be ready for those who want to dispose of their animals by knocking them down to the highest

For its part, The Standard will arrange a feast of bargains in every line of business for the occasion, and readers of The Standard should note well inducements made.
