CAMP HOUSE BEING BUILT AT TOURIST PARK

Mayor Lee Jones, who is in charge of the Brady Tourist Camp ground, yesterday began construction of the camp house for the tourists. At a meeting of the board of directors of the Brady Chamber of Commerce, it had been decided to build the tourist camp 20x32 ft. in dimension, with closed ends on the east and west sides, and with the north and south sides screened in. Four doors on each the north and south sides, give access to the building, and while no partitions are to be placed for the present, the interior will be arranged so that it may be partitioned into eight sleeping compartments by the hanging up of blankets or quilts, thus providing accommodation for eight camping parties. The construction of the building is being financed by the Brady Chamber of Commerce.

The building is being located about the middle of the tourist park, convenient to shade trees, and upon an elevation that will protect it against water or flood under any ordinary circumstances.

The park is already becoming a popular place with tourists, and scarcely a night passes but what several parties are camped there. Incidentally the splendid bath house provided by the Brady Water & Light Works, and the Sneerly Swimming pool are serving to attract large numbers of citizens to the park each night, and combine to make this a most popular recreation and pleasure resort.

One of the next steps of the park commission will be to place posts directing tourists to the park. These posts are of most substantial construction, being of iron set in concrete base, and have been offered for use by F. R. Wulff.

Another planned improvement for the park, and one which will serve to add greatly to its popularity, is the erection of a band stand. The band boys view this with favor and promise to give some of their enjoyable concerts at the park during the summer months.

Death of W. F. Davis.
The death of W. F. Davis, one of Brady's oldest and best-known citizens, occurred Wednesday afternoon at 2:45 o'clock, aged 80 years, 7 months and 24 days. His passing away took place at the home of his son, George Davis, on the North side, and where he had been making his home, and was caused by heart failure, with old age as a contributory cause.

Mr. Davis, in the eighty years of his life, had enjoyed remarkable health, being active, and his eyesight being good and his hearing keen. Of late, however, he had been failing somewhat in strength, and last Monday was taken to his bed. Apparently he soon overcame his illness, was up and about Wednesday morning although a physician was called and advised him that he should return to his bed. His passing away came suddenly, and without warning.

Mr. Davis was born in Illinois, coming to Texas while still in his teens. After first locating in Fannin and Grayson county, where he engaged in stock-raising, he moved to Eastland county, and about twenty-two years ago, he and his family located in Brady. Since coming here, he had for a number of years, retired from active business pursuits. Mrs. Davis preceded him to the Great Beyond some ten years ago.

Mr. Davis has been a faithful member of the Church of Christ for about thirty years. He was a man of genial disposition, always having a cheery smile and a friendly greeting for his friends and acquaintances, and was highly thought of by everyone.

Funeral services were conducted yesterday morning at the Davis' residence, the Rev. L. D. Ferguson of Pear Valley, conducting, and interment was made in Brady cemetery.

Mr. Davis is survived by an only son, George Davis, and also by a step-son, J. M. Anderson, of this city, and a step-daughter, Mrs. J. T. Sanders of Anson, Texas. To them is extended the sympathy of all in their bereavement.

WOOL PRICES ARE HIGHER THAN 1921—DOUBLE LAST YEAR'S

San Angelo, May 20.—The Wool Growers' Central Storage Company of San Angelo will offer Monday approximately 250,000 pounds of long twelve-month wool of the 1922 production. This will be the first sealed bid sale in Texas this year, and more than twenty-five buyers, representing a score of Northern and Eastern houses, are expected to attend.

Wool on the sheep backs has been commanding from 40c to 42c a pound while some choice clips have been bringing 45c a pound, and many growers are reported to be holding for 65c a pound. Present prices are more than double last year's average of 18c to 20c a pound, but are far below the prices of 75c and 78c a pound paid in the spring of 1920, before the market broke May 29 and disappeared.

FORD ROUNDUP AT DALLAS DURBAR ONE BIG EVENT OF WEEK'S CELEBRATION

The Ford Round-Up, which was staged yesterday at the Southwest Durbar in Dallas, and which was one of the big events of the celebration brought thousands of Ford cars and their owners to that city. The interest in the event was made all the more intense by the offering of various prizes for Ford cars coming the longest distance, bringing the largest family, the prettiest baby, etc., to the Durbar.

G. A. Krueger was expected to enter the contest entering as the possessor of a 1915 model Ford in A1 condition, but failed to attend.

MAYHEW PRODUCE TO INSTALL COLD STORAGE PLANT

Mayhew Produce Co. has purchased a 20x100-ft. plot of ground, fronting on North Bridge street, and extending along the alley at the rear of the Commercial bank, Popular Dry Goods Co. and H. C. Samuel stores with the announced intention of using the same for the installation of a cold storage plant. The purchase includes the rock office building fronting on Bridge street, and adjoining on the west, the Mayhew Co.'s present quarters. This building, with a 20x60-ft. lot was purchased from Crothers, Newman & White, while the remaining 20x40-ft. parcel of land was purchased from J. E. Bell.

The plans of the company are to cover the entire lot with a substantial building, in which the office building is to be incorporated. The new plant will be one of the most modern obtainable anywhere, and will be up-to-the-minute in every respect. Three cold-storage rooms will be provided. The present office building will be used to house the machinery and plant equipment.

It is not the present intention of the company to manufacture ice for retail trade, but they will devote the entire plant to providing cold storage facilities for the products of their Brady house and also the three branch houses, which are located at Richland Springs, San Saba and Mason. Cold storage will also be provided for the trade, insofar as their capacity will permit.

The company will continue its business in all its branches as before at the same stand as at present located, and the new cold storage plant will merely be an adjunct to the business of the firm.

WEED CUTTING ON CIVIC ACTIVITIES PROGRAM

A general and thorough Weed-Cutting campaign is next on the program of civic activities. Dr. B. L. Craddock, city health officer, requests every citizen to join in the move, and urges the importance of letting the sunlight get to the ground. The excessive rains of a few weeks ago, resulting in the rapid springing up of weeds, leaves mud holes and an accumulation of scum and debris in many places, and these are favorite breeding places for mosquitoes, flies, snakes, insects and pests of various kinds.

Chop the weeds; give old Mother Earth a chance.

There are those who argue weeds are not unsanitary. (They have never been afflicted with hay-fever, no doubt). Even should that be the case, weeds tend to unsanitary conditions. A patch of weeds is an admirable hiding place for discarded tin cans, old shoes, broken bottles and what-not. Weeds give the impression of an uninspired, indifferent citizenship; one in which the spirit of civic attractiveness is either lacking or never has been awakened.

Therefore, cut the weeds! If you do, the chances are your neighbor will follow suit before the week is out, and his neighbor, and his neighbor's neighbor — it's an unending chain you'll start—and you'll feel better for having made the start.

The week of May 28th to June 3rd is officially designated as Weed-Cutting Week in Brady. That's next week!

DENTON C. I. A. AND NORTH TEXAS NORMAL PROVE REVELATION TO EDITORS

TEXAS GIRLS' WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY TO DEVELOP TALENTS—OVER 2,000 TAKING ADVANTAGE OF FACT—C. I. A. IS UNIQUE INSTITUTION.

Denton has often been designated the "Athens of North Texas," and the appellation is very appropriate, for Denton has two most wonderful educational institutions—the College of Industrial Arts and the North Texas State Normal. In addition, Denton's public schools are among the best in the state, from the kindergarten to the high school, and reflect the advantage of the environment of these two great schools. Denton, itself, is not a large city, but it is a clean city, morally and otherwise, from center to circumference. The 1920 census gives Denton a population of 7,626, but added to this are the 2,000 or more students enrolled in the two colleges. There are 2,400 students in the public schools.

As stated last week, the greeting with especially attractive and ornamental street lights. The editors and their wives were comfortably housed at Lowry and Capps hall, where a special rate of $1.75 per day for each person, including necessary meals, had been made by President Bralley of C. I. A. The entertainment program, which included luncheons, "Dutch" lunches, barbecues and banquets, crowded hard on the business sessions, and ran something like this:

Opening Day, Thursday—Business meeting; Luncheon at Lowry Hall, C. I. A.; Business meeting; Barbecue tractively decorated for the convention, and streamers of flags overhead, marked the route to the C. I. A. $135,000.00 auditorium, where the meetings of the association were held. Ore was at once impressed by the civic appearance of the city of Denton. There are three and a half miles of paved streets, and considerable more mileage of paved streets contracted. There are scores of new, modern and attractive homes in the various sections of the city, and the absence of uncared-for and neglected or ramshackle residences was most noticeable. Pride of ownership was manifested in the carefully mowed lawns, the stately shade trees, and the many beautiful flowers surrounding the homes. The main thoroughfares were illuminated and adjournment. Saturday—Final business meeting and adjournment.

To tell of all the wonders of C. I. A., one scarcely knows where to begin. As before stated, the editor and family are under great obligation to Misses Zenda Aschbacher and Cora Snider and their room-mates and class-mates for showing us over this wonderful institution and giving us an insight into its wonderful activities. They, like all the 1300 students enrolled, are enthusiastic over C. I. A. and believe it to be the only school for girls, and one can scarcely wonder at their enthusiasm. C. I. A. is indeed a wonderful school.

Briefly stated, here are the facts concerning this school: Established nineteen years ago, it now can boast of a million and a quarter educational plant. The campus is about a mile from the city proper, is located on a plot of about ten acres, with artistically laid out grounds and magnificent shade trees. The faculty consists of about 110 teachers, and has thirty different vocational departments. President Bralley is an able educator; he is beloved by all the students, and, incidentally, with such consummate skill does he look after C. I. A. that one never hears of C. I. A. threatening to close its doors because of lack of funds, or kicking up a big political row because the state legislature has not amply provided for it. C. I. A. is the only state-supported college or university exclusively for the educating and training of the girls of Texas. It is the third-largest college of its kind in the U. S. Miss Estella G. Hefley, dean, has specialized for many years in college discipline for women. By her system, the students pledge themselves to make every effort to abide by rules and regulations, and the

BAND CONCERT NEXT FRIDAY AT M.E. TABERNACLE

Announcement is made that the Brady band will give a band concert on Friday night of next week, June 2nd, at the Methodist tabernacle. This will be the second of a series of concerts which the band boys plan to give during the summer, and the public is cordially invited to be present.

Lester Calloway of Brownwood will be present to direct the band, and there will be about 35 members participating in the concert. A program of eight numbers will be rendered.

The Brady band is one of the liveliest musical organizations of which Brady has ever been able to boast. The boys have made progress that is little short of wonderful, and their concerts and playing is always a source of pleasure to the citizens. As upon the previous occasion, the band boys will pay out of their own funds for the lights and use of the tabernacle—the concert is entirely free to the citizenship.

Camp Fire Girls on Hike—Band Boys Practicing Hard.
Melvin, Texas, May 21.
Editor Brady Standard:
We have had one week of beautiful weather which is helping everything. Little Miss Marie Triplett of Pasche was the guest of Miss Beulah Baker Sunday.
W. J. Sutton and little granddaughter, Mary Sue Dameron returned from Temple Saturday where Mary Sue had one of her tonsils removed. She has greatly improved and is doing fine.
Earl Hall came home from Callan where he has been working.
Miss Edna Whitely of Pasche was the guest of her cousin, Bertha Whitely Saturday, who returned home with her Sunday.
The Camp Fire girls went on a hike Thursday, took a swim for morning exercise, cooked their dinner in camp-fire style; they say they killed a real large snake. As it is girls I doubt it. Those who went were Misses Margaret Sutton, Norma Swank, Lucile and Bernice Gary, Beulah Baker, Vada Mae Sheffield, Ruby Johnson and their guardian, Miss LaRue Woods.
D. C. Middleton, Allen McDonald and wives, LaVada Wood, Lottin McDonald, D. C. and Elsie Middleton all spent last week on the Llano fishing.

Mr. Mason and family of Alpine were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sutton the latter part of the week.
Choir practice was well attended at church Sunday night.
E. A. Baze and family were in Brady Thursday.
James Norman was in Brady Tuesday on business.
Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morrow entertained the young people with a "42" party Thursday night. Each guest had a delightful time.
Misses Mildred and Juanita Townsend of Brady are the little guests of Mrs. Harry Driskell this week.
Gus Wahrmond and wife have moved back from Locker. We are glad to have them with us again.
G. W. Siler, son Will, Claude Williams and families, all made a fishing trip to San Saba Monday and returned with a nice lot of fruit and fish.
D. C. Middleton was in Doole Tuesday.
Misses Antionette and Lucile Kimbrough of Placid were back Tuesday on business.
Mrs. Sheridan of Brady is the guest of Mrs. E. A. Baze this week.
The Ladies Home Mission society met with Mrs. H. Driskell Monday. Quite a number were present. A very interesting lesson was discussed. They also planned for a bazaar this fall, of which will be means of raising funds for the M. E. church.
Clay Middleton of Doole is in town with a real sick baby who is under Dr. Beakley's treatment, and is doing nicely at present.
J. A. Maxwell of Brady is in town seeing after business this week.
Miss Vanda Lee Westbrook has been very sick the past few days.

improved crossbreeds. I had my old-time friend Mart L. indexed as a progressive farmer; for he was when I knew him and neither am I willing now to retrograde him to inferior ranks. And if Mart had fifty more years to experiment in hog improvement and would do it he would doubtless be as ardent an enthusiast in the production of improved breeds as I am in the matter. No more iron-bound creeds for me! But for myself and D. H. to settle the controversy by a wrestling match is ridiculously absurd. The only way to settle it is to raise better thoroughbred than I can crossbreeds. And it just can't be did!
Oh, what a pity that our disturbances between nations can not be settled by a wrestling match instead of resorting to slaughter of men and destruction of property. The point "A Citizen" made in my favor was when he asked the question if he might not be able to secure a superior kind of cane by mixing the kinds. Now listen! Here is the answer: If we take for granted and are positive sure that that is the very best kind there is in the world and that it cannot be surpassed by another; then we will not try to get any better. SAN ANGELO SHEEP MAN IS INDICTED ON 9 COUNTS FOR FORGERY
San Angelo, May 21.—With his estate valued by the court at $876,206.75 in friendly receivership, Geo. Richardson of San Angelo, for almost forty years a sheep man and wool commission merchant, and one of the most prominent figures in the Southwest, today furnished bonds totaling $4,500, pending trial on nine indictments charging forgery, which were returned here Friday by the Tom Green county grand jury.
Bonds were furnished at Richardson's 50,000-acre ranch in Sterling county, which regularly has supported from ten to twelve thousand sheep.
This property in February passed into the hands of Shaw Rives, local banker, who was appointed receiver when Richardson failed to obtain a $200,000 loan, was unable to meet his interest payments and taxes to satisfy a few small creditors who filed suit against him.
At the time Richardson had outstanding loans to sheep and goat raisers, totaling more than $115,000.
Most of them were overdue owing to the financial stringency and he was unable to collect without bringing financial ruin to men who for years had been his customers. This he declined to do.
In shearing sheep and selling the wool with most of the livestock, Receiver Rives hoped not only to pay all creditors but to leave Richardson an estate worth around $200,000. The receivership was the largest of its kind ever filed in this portion of West Texas.
No Worms in a Healthy Child
All children troubled with Worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

"Why, has Josephine made you mad?"
"No."
"Well, what's the matter, then?"

In my last letter I made mention of hop vines. Hops are grown here as a commercial crop. They do not plant the seeds. They set out the roots like you would set out berry vines. The vines grow to about fifteen feet in length. Freezing does not seem to stop their growing. The vines will sometimes freeze stiff and then thaw out and not seem to be any the worse for the experience. We planted ours by the west porch to shade our cooler. PROFITABLE DEAL IN FOXES

Treasury of the United States Benefited and the Value of the Breed Increased.

In the spring of 1921 the bureau of biological survey directed attention to the fact that the blue foxes on some of the Aleutian islands are deteriorating through inbreeding, and that there was a desire on the part of the natives and others to secure animals from the Pribilof islands for restocking purposes.

In order to assist in building up the blue fox industry of the Aleutians, where climatic conditions appear to be favorable, the introduction of new blood from the Pribilofs was accordingly undertaken by the bureau of fisheries, and eight live blue foxes were placed aboard the coast guard cutter Bear at St. George island September 15, 1921. One pair went to L. A. Lavigne, lessee of Unalga island; one pair to the Unalaska Native Brotherhood, lessees of Avatanak island, and two pairs to N. E. Belshandin, lessee of Kavaiga and other islands. The purchasers supplied shipping cases and transportation was at their risk.

All the foxes were received at Unalaska in good order and were promptly placed on the islands under lease to the various persons concerned. The price charged for each animal was $88.12, this being the average realized for Pribilof blue fox skins at the sale at St. Louis February 21, 1921. The amount received for the eight foxes was $704.96; $5 was allowed natives of the Pribilof islands for each fox secured, and the net proceeds, amounting to $694.96, were turned into the treasury of the United States.—

SOME MERIT IN SUGGESTION

World Would Certainly Be More Colorful if Woman Would Dress as This Article Desires.

"If some women are so anxious to dress like men why don't they imitate the masculine styles of a lovelier day and age than the present one?" asked an elderly artist the other day.

He pointed out the lack of beauty of the existent garb for man and then he recalled the silken dandies of Shakespeare's day.

"And wouldn't the women of today look nice in those attires?" he asked. "The imitation shirts and the stiff collars that the women flaunt set me crazy, let alone the cuffs and tortoise shell glasses, and now I even hear they're thinking of wearing bloomers and trousers."

"Well, let them revive the fashions of old when a tailor knew how to dress a man. Let them wear the silken knee-breeches and the silken coats, heaped high in the front with frilly stocks and fringed with lacy cuffs. And then—ah! the accompanying white silk stockings would be rather delightful. And that would solve the short-skirt controversy."

Calls Paderewski a Giant.

No one can ever realize how hard Paderewski worked for his results. Sometimes one hour of the great heroism of the pianist who practices six or seven hours a day. Time and again I have known Paderewski to keep on working until three and four in the morning, often working fourteen to sixteen hours a day.

Of course, only a physical giant could have accomplished this, and indeed such was Paderewski. His endurance and strength were enormous. When I was playing with him at Erard's he insisted upon having a chair that was especially heavy.

This very physical power gave Paderewski an enormous range of tone color possibilities. Indeed, if it had not been for his enormous endurance he could never have accomplished the work which gave him a seat at the peace conference as the foremost citizen of Poland.—

Petroleum Statistics.

The American Petroleum Institute's analysis of official petroleum statistics for December, 1921, shows an excess of domestic production and imports over indicated total consumption, including exports amounting to 14,087,539 barrels for the month, or at the annual rate of 165,899,505 barrels. In December, 1920, there was an excess of production over consumption of 7,113,051 barrels. In November, 1921, there was an excess of production over consumption amounting to 9,801,908 barrels.

Exports totaled 5,791,007 barrels in December, 1921; 5,657,469 barrels in November, and 7,922,608 barrels in December, 1920.

New Cape Breton Salt Bed.

The first rock salt deposit ever found in Cape Breton has been made near Whycoomagh, Victoria county, where a thin upper vein of a salt bed has been pierced at a depth of 120 feet below the ground's surface. A number of natural springs rich in salt have also been discovered and a company of Cape Breton has been incorporated for the purpose of developing the salt production industry in the district.

Immense Demand for Furs.

Several hundred thousand pelts, including polar, grizzly and black bear skins, coyotes, buffalo, silver, red, cross fox skins, muskrat, beaver, sable, mink, were received by a fur company at Montreal to be sold at its winter sale. Shipments were received from all parts of Canada, as well as from Russia, Labrador, United States and Patagonia.

TO OUR ICE CUSTOMERS

The following prices for Ice will govern until further notice, for delivery within the city limits in cut quantities of 12½, 25, 50 and 100 pounds. Cash 80c per Cwt.

We have discontinued the use of coupon books, but instead are using strips containing ten coupons each, in denominations of 12½, 25, and 50-lbs., which will enable customers to buy small quantities.

For one strip, 12½ lb. coupons, 125-lbs. of Ice	95c
Three strips, 375-lbs. of Ice	$2.70
Six strips, 750-lbs. of Ice	$5.25
For one strip, 25-lb. coupons, 250-lbs. of Ice	$1.85
Three strips, 750-lbs. of Ice	$5.25
Six strips, 1500-lbs. of Ice	$10.00
For one strip, 50-lb. coupons, 500-lbs. of Ice	$3.50
Three strips, 1500-lbs. of Ice	$10.00
Six strips, 3000-lbs. of Ice	$19.50
One block, at one delivery, per cwt.	65c
Three blocks, at one delivery	60c
Seven blocks, at one delivery	55c

—AT THE PLATFORM:—

12½-lbs. of Ice	10c	One Block, per cwt.	55c
25-lbs. of Ice	15c	Three Blocks, per cwt.	50c
50-lbs. of Ice	30c	Seven Blocks, per cwt.	45c
100lbs. of Ice	60c	Fifteen Blocks, per cwt.	40c

It is our purpose to effect all the saving possible in both deliveries and clerical service, and accordingly give our customers the benefit of this saving. We want to give the very best service possible and will appreciate it if any inattention, discourtesies, or any complaints are brought to our attention. We do not want to sell Ice for cash where it is possible to avoid it, as it is impractical for delivery men with wet hands and clothes to make change, or charges. It is our disposition to reduce the price to the lowest possible minimum consistent with fair and reasonable business methods, and for the benefit of the country trade or those within the city limits who desire to avail themselves of it, we are making a price of 60c per hundred, as you will note from the above, at the factory, except 12½-lb. pieces, which will be 10c.

Assuring you of our high appreciation of your co-operation and of our desire to serve you well and with the hope of being able to maintain a continuation of your future valued patronage, we are,

Yours very truly,

Very Doubtful.

Tom McNeal was talking to Charley Sessions, in Topeka, about the doubtful voters.

"Lot of them!" said Sessions. "Yes," replied McNeal; "but they sort of remind me of a man I knew in Kansas who was running for sheriff. He traveled all over his county and tried to get votes. One day he came across a farmer and asked him to vote for him.

"Why, dodgast your measly hide! yelled the farmer; I wouldn't vote for you for anything if you was the last man on earth! I'd poison myself before I'd vote for you for anything!"

"If that is the case," said the candidate, "I'll just mark you down as doubtful!"

From Wayside Tales.

"A fool," said the professor to the student who asked a catch question, "can ask things a wise man can't answer."

"Is that the reason," asked a student in the back row, "why I flunked last term in this subject?"

HONEST INJUN.

All West Texans who entered the Ford Round-Up at the Dallas Durbar this week, are supposed to have had their steeds properly marked and branded. Mavericks aren't safe, even in Ford round-ups.

FARMERS' LUNCHEON CLUBS.

The following very interesting item appeared recently in Farm Life: "Farmers around Muncie, Ind., are beginning to be regular swells. They meet once a month—five or more of them from each of the twelve townships in the county—at one of the hotels, where they have a good feed and talk things over. In case of emergency they call a special meeting. You can imagine that what they decide upon 'goes' in Delaware county. Farmers might do that in other counties." The suggestion offered is worthy of more than passing consideration. It really is worth while. Some farmers may hold that the program is a little expensive as to both time and money, but if it were carried out loyally for a year there is little doubt but that all of the luncheon club members would benefit more than enough to make up for the outlay.—Temple Telegram.

TWENTIETH CENTURY FUN AWAY BACK IN 528 A. D. BASIS OF COMEDY SCREAM

To take a 20th Century Connecticut Yankee, with 20th Century ideas and inventions, and set him right down in the middle of King Arthur's court in Great Britain, away back in the year 528 A. D., requires some imagination and knowledge of ancient history. But that is what the celebrated Mark Twain did when he wrote the book, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and when the story was dramatized for film production, it made a comedy farce that is a scream. So everyone agreed who saw the picture either Monday or Tuesday night at the Lyric theatre.

Imagine motor-cycles and Ford cars, modern machine shops and the like installed right in the midst of the armored knights, court attendants, tournaments and other settings that were part and parcel of King Arthur's time. And dynamite and six-shooters and lariats when stacked up against armored coats and lances, make the latter look like two-bits.

Not the least of the clever ideas in the presentation of this remarkable picture were the titles, written in modern slang, but nevertheless in keeping with the language of the court—that, in itself, was decidedly clever.

The "Connecticut Yankee" is one of the season's big hits, and deservedly so. It is being shown in the leading theatres everywhere, and has served as one of the biggest drawing cards. Brady theatre-goers have every reason to appreciate the splendid class of pictures being presented at the Lyric theatre.

PROGRESSIVE TEXAS TOWNS.

New High for Chillicothe. Chillicothe, May 13.—Ground was broken Friday for the $60,000 high school building. Construction will begin at once. The building will be ready for occupancy by Sept. 1. The laboratory and other high school equipment will be taken from the building used this year to complete the equipment of the new school.

When finished Chillicothe will have one of the most up-to-date high schools in the West.

According to the 1920 census, Chillicothe has a population of 1,351.

SHORT SERMONS FOR ECONOMIC SINNERS.
By the Economic Evangelist.

THE BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION.

Let us suppose that, eliminating dwellings built with insurance money to replace others destroyed by fire and other causes, about 500,000 dwellings will be built in the United States this year.

And let us suppose also that 235,000 of those will be built by or for owners who are to occupy them as homes.

A good per cent of the 265,000 which are built to rent will be only partly paid for in cash by the owners.

A considerable number of them will represent investments that are partially borrowed money.

And only a small percentage of those built to be occupied by the owners as homes will be paid for in cash.

A considerable amount of money, therefore, must be available for mortgages to make the building of these homes possible.

Where is this money to come from? As a matter of fact, it comes as a rule from various sources—individuals, trust companies, savings banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations and others—but chiefly it comes from the savings of the people through one or another of these channels.

And the part paid in cash by the owner comes as a rule from his own savings.

If you expect to own a home at some future time you must begin to save toward that end, for you must put some cash into it at the start.

And the larger amount of cash you have the less chance there will be of your having to pay more for your home than it cost.

If you have from 40 to 50 per cent of the money in cash you will have no difficulty in building your own home for its approximate cost.

But when you fall much below that you must pay a profit to somebody who is putting up the difference.

That's business and is as it should be.

For somebody must supply the money for the difference between the cost of your home and the amount of cash you have saved, and money is not available from ordinary channels for more than 50 or 60 per cent of that cost.

When money comes from other than the ordinary channels it must be paid a profit.

And you who buy the home must pay that profit.

It is to your advantage, therefore, to save first as much as possible.

And as you are saving to buy a home the most natural thing to do is to save your savings while you are accumulating them would be to put them into the "ordinary channels" which supply the 50 or 60 per cent of the cost of other homes.

I have already pointed out the usefulness of saving banks and the duty to carry life insurance.

I want to speak now of a group of institutions which devote ALL of the funds they handle to supplying money for first mortgages on homes.

I mean the building and loan associations.

The underlying idea of the building and loan association is to use the funds of those who are saving for the purpose of building homes to lend to those who are ready to build or to buy homes.

But in practical fact in operation it performs the dual function of providing facilities for systematic savers for any purpose and of providing funds for the 50 or 60 per cent which home builders or purchasers are not prepared to pay.

If you are saving $10 a month toward building a home or for any other purpose, you could not put that money into a real estate mortgage.

If there are 99 others like you saving $10 a month, a man needing $1,000 to complete the amount required to build his home could not go to the entire 100 of you and borrow $10 from each.

But the building and loan association can collect $10 from each of the 100 and invest it in a real estate mortgage, by lending the entire amount to the man who needs the $1,000.

It performs the dual function of enabling you to invest your $10 in a real estate mortgage and of enabling the man who needs the $1,000 to borrow the $10 from each of the 100 persons.

Both of these services are highly important social services.

It is a service to you to make it possible to put such small amounts into real estate mortgages.

It is a service to home builders and to society to make this money available for real estate mortgages.

The building and loan association, therefore, is a savings and lending institution.

It is an investment and mortgage institution.

And when it is operated on sound principles and by honest men it is one of the most useful institutions in modern life for the promotion of both home owning and systematic savings.—(Copyright, 1922, by Fort Worth Star-Telegram.)

LOCAL BRIEFS.

Robert Tabor suffered a sprained ankle at the swimming pool the other night, when one of the swinging devices broke and let him fall to the bank.

Work on the new Gibbons building was begun in earnest this week, much of the brick being already at hand and unloaded, the foundations are being dug, and gravel for the same is being hauled. From the force at work, and from the good progress made, it would appear that Contractor E. E. Churchill expects to complete the building in record time.

The Queen Hotel is having some out-door sleeping quarters arranged on the gallery to the east of the second floor of the building, which promise to become deservedly popular with guests of the hotel during the summer months. The quarters will be covered over for protection from the weather, and will be screened in all around, thus providing ample ventilation and giving the sleepers advantage of every breath of air stirring. Some eight or ten beds will thus be provided.

The Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Taylor and son, Royston, plan to leave the early part of next week for Arlington, where they will make their home, while Pastor Taylor engages in evangelistic work among the Baptist churches. It is with great regret that members of the congregation see this family depart, and their feelings are shared by the citizenship of Brady in general. Bro. Taylor and his good wife have been very popular with all, and in their new field and in their new endeavors, they have the sincere good wishes of all for success. Bro. Taylor is assisting in the opening of the revival services which were begun yesterday at the local Baptist church by the Rev. Buren Sparks of New Mexico, and will also be present at the ordination services next Sunday at which time four deacons are to be ordained.

CARE OF BRADY CEMETERY SUBJECT OF MEETING

With the depletion of the city's cemetery funds, the caring of the local City of the Dead has devolved upon the citizens, and as a result a mass meeting, called at the instance of the cemetery committee of the Brady city council, was held Tuesday afternoon in the District court room, C. A. Trigg presiding as chairman. After a discussion of the subject, it was decided to appoint two committees, the one to request payment from citizens owning a lot or lots, and on which payments are past due; and another committee to solicit the contribution of funds for the employing of a caretaker from those having loved ones buried in the cemetery.

On the first-named committee were placed the following:

- Mrs. V. B. Deaton
- Mrs. Arthur Wood
- Leonard Wood.

On the second committee were named:

- Mrs. F. R. Wulff
- Mrs. Roy Wilkerson
- G. C. Kirk
- J. H. White.

The financing of the cemetery maintenance is a matter in which everyone should be interested, and no time should be lost in seeing that the cemetery is placed in good condition.

B. Whiteman, Bert Hughes, Claud Wood, N. G. Lyle, Jr., Otis Andrews; Mrs. J. F. Davis.

Following an interesting series of games, the hostesses served a delicious refreshment course of ice cream and cake.

The club meets on alternate weeks.

Bridge Club.

The Junior Bridge club met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. P. B. Melton as hostess, and with the following members present: Misses Norma and Lessie Samuel, Erin Yantis; Mesdames J. W. Ragsdale, Chas. Williams. Guests were Mrs. Dick Winters; Misses Mae Stobaugh, Willie Florence Yantis.

In the series of "Bridge," Miss Norma Samuel received prize for high score.

The hostess served an ice course.

The club meets next Wednesday afternoon with Miss Lessie Samuel.

Friday Forty-Two Club.

Mrs. Edd Broad was hostess on last Friday afternoon to the Friday Forty-Two club, and a delightful afternoon is reported by the following members present: Mesdames J. E. Shropshire, C. P. Gray, N. A. Collier, H. R. Hodges, N. G. Lyle, F. M. Rihards, A. B. Cox, W. J. Day. Guests were Mesdames Arthur Wood, Edwin Broad, C. A. Trigg; Misses Ruby Granger, Elzora Cunningham, Fannie Jones.

Following the usual series of "42," the hostess served a salad course.

The club meets tonight at the residence of N. G. Lyle, Jr., Mrs. Lyle and Miss Mozelle Glenn entertaining with a night party, at which the gentlemen will be invited guests.

Complimenting Mrs. Taylor.
Mrs. J. H. Taylor was honored on last Saturday with a Nine o'Clock Dinner, Mrs. F. W. Lazalier entertaining in compliment to her. Guests included Mesdames J. H. Ogden, J. B. Smith, W. J. Yantis, S. W. Hughes, and the honor guest. Each of the invited guests brought a remembrance as a token of their love for Mrs. Taylor who is soon to leave our midst.

The Lazalier home was prettily decorated for the occasion, the centerpiece on the dining table being a great bouquet of yellow buttercups while Dorothy Perkins roses were used in effective display in the living room.

The dinner proved a most delightful event, even though regrets were expressed over the approaching departure of the honor guest.

Cherry-McClure.

Of interest to a large circle of Brady friends is news of the marriage of Mr. R. B. McClure and Miss Julia Cherry, which was celebrated on Sunday, May 14th, at Houston. Mr. McClure has for many years been one of Brady's leading and popular business men, being the junior member of the grocery firm of Allen & McClure, but since the first of last November has been located at Mexia, where the firm is also operating a grocery store, and where he and his bride will make their home during the tenure of their store lease. Mrs. McClure, whose home was in Rockport, taught in the Brady schools last year, and won a large circle of friends by her charm of manner and winning personality. It was during her residence in Brady that she and Mr. McClure met, and first formed the attachment which culminated so happily for them.

Jolly Thirteen Club.
The "Jolly Thirteen" club met yesterday afternoon as guests of Mrs. Ira Mayhew. An enjoyable hour was spent in Progressive "42," with the following members taking part in the games: Mesdames J. B. Granville, N. A. Collier, Evans Adkins, W. D. Jordan, C. Crawford, Henry Tip-ton, T. Gray, Marion Rice; Miss Mozelle Glenn; and guests: Mesdames Duke Mann, Jack Keyser; Miss Mary Estelle Thompson.

At the close of the afternoon, the hostess served a delicious salad course.

Mrs. Wilson Jordan will entertain for the club on Wednesday afternoon of next week.

Novelty Dance.
The following invitations have been received:
Apron-Overall Dance
Brady

You are invited to attend the Apron-Overall Dance at the K. of P. Hall, on the evening of Friday, May 26, 1922, at eight-thirty. Ladies please wear aprons and gentlemen overalls. Prizes.

The novel dance has excited great interest among devotees of the terpsichorean art, and a large attendance is anticipated, the ladies attending being costumed in aprons, while the gentlemen will be dressed in overalls.

Prizes are to be awarded for the most charming young lady and to the ugliest man, (???) and as a result the girls have been mighty busy designing especially fetching aprons. The boys are not finding it necessary to secure any make-up, as the judges believe they can make the award solely upon the individual's regular features.

Music for the occasion will be furnished by the Brady orchestra, with saxophone accompaniment by Mr. Thos. B. Smith, of Waco.

BRADY BOY SCOUTS TAKE SERIES FROM THE MENARD SCOUTS BASE BALL TEAM

The Brady Boy Scouts ball team played the final two games of baseball for the season with the Menard scouts on the latter's grounds, winning the first on Friday afternoon by a score of 9 to 6, and again winning on Saturday morning by a score of 10 to 6. J. D. Miller was the star mound artist for the locals, not only pitching the entire first game, but also part of the second game, in which he relieved Walter Adkins. The locals did some strong stick work, both Walter Adkins and Elton Bodenhamer getting three-base hits the latter timing his three-bagger when the bases were full, and not only scoring the three runners, but himself scoring on Miller's sacrifice.

The hospitality of the Menard Scouts was highly praised by the locals. The visiting scouts were treated to the show Friday night, and cared for in the homes of the Menard boys. Upon their start for the return to Brady Saturday noon, they were provided with lunches to eat enroute. Scoutmaster Clarence Snider was in charge of the local Boy Scouts on the trip. The early closing of the Scout baseball season is due to the close of school, and the engaging of members of the team in various occupations.

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Good telephone service depends upon three things:

FIRST: A well built plant properly maintained.
SECOND: A thoroughly organized and efficient operating force in each department.

THIRD: Courtesy at all times to every patron from the switchboard as well as the cashier's window.

We have the plant and the organization, and it is our purpose that first class telephone service shall be rendered our patrons with a smile and not with a frown.

A FLYER IN AUGERS

WHO is that young lady?" John Ames asked; "the one with the grayhound," and both his tone and his eyes had lost their bored expression.

"She's a live producer," the captain of the "bell-hops" enthusiastically stated. "She comes into the hotel every Wednesday afternoon for tea and she tips like the rest of the family. Her brother's the cleanest sport in town."

"Who is she?" the black-haired John Ames repeated with a smile.

"It's Miss Greenwood," replied the mop-headed captain. "Say, sue's the sweetest looking that comes into the Tyler Avenue hotel. Her old man used to bring her when she was just a little kid; but he's dead. He was a good sport, too."

"Are the Greenwoods in business?" and Ames watched the attractive girl until she was lost in the maze of fashionable shoppers.

"I should say so some!" bragged the captain, who was intense in his local patriotism. "Greenwood Square Hole Auger company, half a million dollars. How do you like the town?"

"A little better," acknowledged Ames. "I think I shall stay a while."

Chapter II.

"Have you any square-hole augers?" asked Ames, in the leading hardware store.

"Greenwood or Diggins?" asked the languid clerk in return.

"Which is the better?" Ames interestedly inquired.

"Not much difference," said the clerk, examining a fingernail. "Diggins is a dollar cheaper, but it's lighter weight."

"I see," mused Ames. "Competitive proposition, eh? The Greenwood is manufactured here, I believe."

"Both," and the clerk looked wearily out of the window. "Would you like to look at them?"

"No, I think I'll take one of each," decided Ames. "You may send them around to the Tyler Avenue hotel," and he reached for his pocketbook. He pondered a moment. "Which is the larger concern?"

"Diggins," replied the clerk, yawning as he prepared to make out a sales slip.

Ames sat up with his two square-hole augers until 4 o'clock in the morning, and when he arose, he hunted up a patent lawyer.

Chapter III.

"Can't take on anything more just now," promptly decided President Diggins, of the Diggins Mortising Auger company, though he nevertheless cast another interested glance at the sketches Ames had made for him.

"There's nothing ails in competition like the addition of up-to-date devices," pleasantly urged Ames.

Diggins, who was a bony-faced man of forty-five, considered that argument gravely, as he did all gravely advanced suggestions.

"I'll admit that a machine like this, if it were practical, would be a good advertisement, but what we need is a dividend producer."

"That's what I consider this," argued Ames, taking a speculative survey of the office. It was severely furnished, and bore the marks of good business system and concentration. "A motor attachment for large boring would solve, what is now a difficult problem in heavy wooden construction. A feed wire can be cut in, by the electric light company, within never over half a block from any important work."

Diggins shook his head.

"It's tempting," he admitted, "but this company is concentrated on the manufacture of ordinary square-hole augers. In fact," and he smiled, "we'd like to manufacture them all."

"Competition very keen?" suggested Ames, now covertly intemperate on Diggins' hard lips.

"Pretty fierce," the man acknowledged, with vexation on his brow. "To tell the truth, there'll never be big money in the business for anyone, as long as there's two of us."

Ames reached for one of his pencil sketches, and elaborated a detail.

"Young Greenwood's new in the business, isn't he?" he observed.

"Father took him out of college three years ago, and died shortly afterwards," Diggins replied, again with that vexation on his brow. "By George, that young fellow holds on desperately!" added Diggins determinedly.

Ames smiled as he sketched.

"He might hold on indefinitely," he stated. "Sometimes these young fellows do."

"Offener they don't!" snapped Diggins. "Young Greenwood has qualities that are bound to get him in the end. He tries to make the auger business artistic. The old man had kid glove methods, but the young fellow's idiosyncratically extravagant, fancy labels and embossed stationery, and such things. Why, he even has a pigskin waste basket with a gold monogram, on his office. A fellow with such ideas can't be a practical business manager." Ames laughed.

"My fancy motor auger might appeal to him," he speculated.

"Not at the price you wanted to hold me up for," chuckled Diggins. "The Greenwood company will never pay royalty and a ten-thousand dollar bonus on an untried device, for which you haven't even a patent."

"The application I filed yesterday protects it," returned Ames easily. "I think I'll see him."

"Do!" urged Diggins. "Good Lord, I hope he takes it, and ties up some money in it. I might get him quicker."

Chapter IV.

John Ames smiled as he recognized the notorious pigskin waste basket with the gold monogram, and he smiled, too, as he inspected the immaculately groomed young Richard Greenwood, who wore a gardenia, and had a gold-mounted desk set in front of him.

"I have an improvement in square-hole boring machinery, which I should like to try out," began Ames, approaching Margaret Greenwood's brother with a far different proposition from the exaggerated one he had presented to Diggins.

"Sit down," invited young Greenwood, whose manners were pleasant and whose speech was suave. Also, he had an eager eye, which Ames rather liked.

"It's a motor auger," explained Ames lightly, laying down his sketches.

Young Greenwood looked over the drawings with quick comprehension, then he passed them back.

"It might be a thoroughly practical device, though it would have a restricted sale, as compared with our regular product," he commented. "However, the Greenwood company is not now in a position to take it up."

"I don't ask you to," responded Ames. "First of all, I'm curious to satisfy myself with its possibilities. All I would propose, just now, would be to experiment, in some out of the way corner of your shop, until I can prove the thing to be mechanically feasible. Then, if you like it, we can talk business."

Young Greenwood pondered the matter carefully, meanwhile inspecting the polished Ames with a growing cordiality.

"I think we might be able to arrange that," he decided.

Chapter V.

"Looks like a failure, Rick," said Ames, as they lunched in the busy grill room of the Tyler Avenue hotel. "I've worked three weeks with the blooming thing, and I can't seem to simplify it."

"I wouldn't give it up, John," urged young Greenwood. "I'd feel lonesome to see your corner unoccupied."

"Hello, Ames!" hailed a solid looking gray-haired man, with stern eyebrows, and a crisp mouth. "How are you, Greenwood?"

"How d'do, Cuspard," returned both Ames and Greenwood.

"Nice chap," commented Ames. "You don't buy your tool steel from him."

"I don't believe in feeding the enemy," laughed Greenwood.

"He's the biggest gun in the tool steel game, isn't he?"

"By all odds," replied Rick Greenwood. "He's worth about three millions. Hello, Walter!"

"Hello, boys!" greeted a thin man with a network of wrinkles between his eyes. He stopped on his way to his table, and shook hands heartily with Ames. "Great billiards you played with Tullingham last night. Glad to see you beat Hal. He's too cocky about his three-cushion game."

"Nice bunch of fellows on Diggins' board of directors," observed Greenwood, when Henderson had passed on. Cuspard and Walter and Tullingham are all men with heavy interests who can still enjoy life."

"Yes," agreed Ames with a smile, and hesitated for a moment. "I've formed a very agreeable acquaintance here, Rick. I chum with eight fine fellows, besides yourself, and they're all on Diggins' board of directors."

Greenwood looked at him with startled speculation.

"That's curious," he said, reflecting that Ames had been given access to the Greenwood factory for three weeks.

"Yes," again admitted Ames. "I've been learning all I can about the square-hole auger industry."

Again Greenwood studied him critically.

"I didn't know you were interested," he observed.

"I'm interested in all business problems," Ames told him. "It worries me to see a big commercial waste. Square-hole augers are a necessity. There's a constant sale for them, and nobody makes any money. That's wrong."

"By George, I didn't make the condition," said Greenwood earnestly. "When my father died, we were making money, but the moment I took hold of the business, Diggins began to cut prices."

"Naturally," laughed Ames. "He wanted the field to himself."

"He can't have it!" declared Greenwood sharply. "I met his reductions down to our present figure, and then I quit. Diggins cheapened his product a trifle, and went still lower; but I wouldn't do it."

"Good boy," approved Ames. "He's probably taken a lot of business from you."

"We've about held our own," asserted Greenwood, with little knots of muscles working in his jaw. "My father made the first square-hole auger, and I'll keep that business going with the same standard of quality the governor maintained. If we only turn out one auger a year, and I'll discount every bill as the governor always did."

Ames broke bread.

"You'll win," he prophesied. "Diggins is spending a barrel of money in advertising, and his agents are known as liberal entertainers. Rick, how much will you give me for riding you of the Diggins Mortising Auger company?"

"Where do you keep it?" laughed Greenwood. "Frankly, John, even if your offer were in earnest, I'd be embarrassed. I haven't drawn but one-fourth of my salary during the past year."

"If you had control of the Diggins company, I guess you could raise a few thousand, couldn't you?" smiled Ames, much as if he were still joking.

"Come out to dinner tonight and talk it over," invited Greenwood, laughing. "I have a mighty pretty sister I want you to meet."

"I accept with pleasure," replied John Ames, who for three weeks had awaited this invitation.

Chapter VI.

Yes, she was pretty, John Ames admitted, as the stately Margaret swept across to him. She was more than pretty; she was stunningly beautiful.

She was an entertaining companion, a clever talker and a flattering listener; and they liked each other.

"Well, Rick, let's get down to business," suggested Ames, as the two

"How Did You Come to Buy That Thing, Rick?" He Asked.

young men walked into the library after dinner. "How about that $25,000?"

Young Greenwood's brow lost its boyish smoothness.

"What particular $25,000 do you mean?" he inquired, in the tone of one who has learned to regard that amount of money respectfully.

"The $25,000 for ridding you of the competition of the Diggins Mortising Auger company."

"You do that and I'll hand you the money so quick it'll scare you," promised Rick, laughing.

"Suppose you put that offer in writing," proposed Ames quietly.

"I believe you are in earnest!" declared Greenwood, surprised.

"Of course I am," answered Ames. "That's what you need, and we'll have it for you."

"Thanks," mocked Greenwood, returning to his opinion that the whole thing was a joke. "Just how will you bring this miracle about?"

"That would be telling," smiled Ames. "Will you write me that offer?"

"I think I'll have to humor you," laughed Rick, and, going to his desk wrote the letter.

When they returned to the music room, Ned Cross was there, a little light-complexioned fellow with a great fund of laughing good humor; and Margaret was chatting most gaily with him. Ames watched her with pleasure not unmixed with envy. No, she was not cold.

When Ames left that night, Margaret and he had become the best of friends.

"You'll come again," she cordially invited him.

"As often as I may," he laughed, thrilled as he looked into her eyes, and heard her voice; and yet, when they shook hands in parting—well, he was puzzled.

Chapter VII.

"From that report, I conclude that we are to again pass our dividends!" snapped J. E. Cuspard, his iron-gray eyebrows bristling.

"It is still necessary," acknowledged President Diggins, looking resentfully at his board of directors.

They seemed particularly unpleasant this afternoon.

"It has been necessary for nearly three years!" objected Walter Henderson, the thin director with the multiplicity of wrinkles between his eyes.

Diggins' hard-boned face became harder.

"As I have so often explained, we have been competing," he declared, again resentfully. "Until that is eliminated, we can scarcely show a profit."

"At present we show a deficit!" gruffly criticized big Hal Tullingham, who was an extensive coal operator, and was impatient of any moribund proposition.

"You can't conduct a campaign of this sort without heavy expense, and some loss," argued Diggins. "We've gradually monopolized the market, and, when we have finally shut out competition, we shall be able to pay fancy dividends."

"I don't believe it," again snapped Cuspard, rising, and jamming his hands in his trousers pockets. "Diggins, you started after young Greenwood's scalp two and a half years ago, and you've been promising us, every three months, that you'd have him out of the way by the next quarterly meeting. He's still making augers!"

"He's operating at a loss," retorted Diggins. "The end has to come some time, and we can stand the strain better than he. We have more capital."

"I object!" wheezed the asthmatic old president of the First National bank. "We have double his capitalization, but we haven't any more cash! It's my opinion we have less! We're in debt!"

"So is Greenwood!" growled Diggins.

"How do you know?" demanded Cuspard.

"It's impossible for him not to be," argued Diggins. "He's a wasteful young fellow, who spends money on such fool office embellishments as pigskin waste baskets with gold monograms!"

"If he's in debt, I don't know it!" wheezed the president of the First National. "The only paper of his that ever found itself through my place is checks, and none of them ever came back!"

J. E. Cuspard stood up again.

"Somebody's been making monkeys of us!" he declared, without being too specific. "I've been picking up my paper every morning for two years, to look for the bankruptcy of the Greenwood Square-Hole Auger company, and, by George, I believe we're going to beat them to it!"

"I believe it myself," snarled a weakened old director with three absurd hairs on his head. "Our concern's in a rotten condition! Why don't you consolidate with Greenwood?"

"There's no terms to be made with him," complained Diggins. "He has fool young notions of pride! He won't stand for any alterations in the name of his father's firm, nor would he share the management of the consolidation. When I found him so bullet-headed, I refused to talk any more with him."

A stolid looking fat director who had not yet taken part in the discussion, now spoke.

"Oh, h—!" he said.

"I've gone just far enough with this thing Diggins!" announced Cuspard angrily, and Diggins felt a chill wave in the room, for Cuspard was the principal stockholder. "I've heard so long that this fool college kid was tottering, that I'm going to find out about it! I move this meeting adjourn for one hour!"

"Second the motion!" wheezed the president of the First National.

Chapter VIII.

"Now, Ames, I'll take that share of stock," agreed Cuspard, popping into the lobby of the Tyler Avenue hotel.

"Here's your hundred dollars," "It's already assigned," replied Ames, producing the document in question. "I knew you'd be back after it."

Cuspard glanced hastily at the certificate and shoved it in his pocket.

"Come on," he said, and he led the way to his automobile. "Look here, Ames," he demanded, as they whirled down the street. "what's your interest in this?"

"Three-fold," explained Ames pleasantly, and with no hesitation. "First, I have an aversion, which amounts to a passion, to wasted business opportunities; second, I have developed a sincere admiration for Rick Greenwood; third, I'm to get $25,000 if the competition is removed from the square-hole auger business."

For the first time that day J. E. Cuspard laughed.

"That's rich," he admitted. "The boys will enjoy that when I tell them."

Young Richard Greenwood looked up in surprise as Cuspard and Ames plunked into his office.

"Young man I want to see your books," Cuspard demanded.

"What?" gasped young Greenwood, with a look from Cuspard to his friend Ames.

"I have a right to see them," asserted Cuspard crisply. "I'm a stockholder in this company, and he tossed down his certificate."

Greenwood glared at Ames with contracted brows.

"You've done this!" he angrily charged.

"I bet you," grinned Ames. "Business is business, Rick, and it's pretty cold-blooded."

"I'm in a hurry," interposed Cuspard. "The Diggins company's board of directors is waiting for certain information."

Young Greenwood, with little knots working in the muscles of his jaw, first rang for his bookkeeper, and then decided to go himself. He came in a moment later, with a huge armful of books, and slammed them on the desk, meanwhile glaring ferociously at John Ames.

"Help yourself!" he blurted.

"All right," accepted Cuspard with a chuckle, and coolly sat down at Greenwood's desk, while the young president of the Greenwood company went to the window and fiddled on the piano, and John Ames sat down, and smiled and smiled.

There was one thing about J. E. Cuspard. He knew a bookkeeper's book from cover to cover, with his eyes shut; and the way he sailed through the Greenwood ledger was a joy to the Greenwood bookkeeper, who had followed in, to hover over the process. She had streaks of gray in her hair, and she had kept those books like a set of engravings since the elder Greenwood had put them in her charge, twenty years before. Cuspard looked up once, to see her standing there.

"Yours?" he queried.

She nodded.

"They're great!" he told her, and went on with his job. Presently he looked up again. "Let me see your balance sheets of about this date, one, two, and three years ago," he directed.

"Yes, sir," she said with alacrity, for J. E. Cuspard was a nice man even though Greenwood didn't like him. She went to Rick to find out. "He wants to see the balance sheets," she whispered.

"All right, Mary, show them to him," he ordered, in a queer mixture of curtness for Cuspard, and affection for Mary.

Fifteen minutes later J. E. Cuspard folded a piece of paper, and stuck it in his pocket and stalked out of the door. John Ames, smiling serenely, strolled out after him; for the atmosphere of that office was too tense for a traitor.

Half an hour later J. E. Cuspard came back, followed by the serenely smiling John Ames. Cuspard threw a huge bunch of documents on the table.

"Would you like to have this junk?" he inquired of young Greenwood, who had risen, at his desk, to resent this second imposition.

"What is it?" blurted Greenwood, backing away from it.

"Eighty-five per cent of the stock of the Diggins Mortising Auger company," explained Cuspard. "The boys brought it with them to the meeting today, and I just went up to make a collection of it."

"I don't understand!" faltered the young president, seeking the eyes of John Ames; but that traitor was grinning out of the window on which Greenwood had drummed.

"Take it," urged Cuspard. "Consolidate—the concerns, run a bluff competition with them; do anything you please. We're busy men, and tired of fussing with it."

The blood began to come back to Rick's cheeks. He drew the certificates toward him.

"I don't understand," he again faltered.

"You'll get on by and by," chuckled Cuspard. "Young man, I want to congratulate you," and grasping Rick's limp hand, he shook it briskly.

"You've kept 90 per cent of your business, you don't owe a cent, and you're running a three-year-old automobile. Take that stock and give us ten year notes for it."

"I'm afraid I haven't capital to swing both companies," worried Greenwood.

"You can get all you want at the First National," advised Cuspard, looking around the room. "Where's that pigskin wastebasket with the gold monogram? Oh, yes, here it is. How did you come to buy that thing, Rick?"

"To express my attitude toward my father's business," Rick explained, smiling. "By the way, what about Diggins?"

"Oh, I'd give him a good job," decided Cuspard, as he went out of the door. "You better give Ames his twenty-five thousand."

Rick walked over and shook John Ames by the hand. They stood there chuckling at each other like two fools.

Chapter IX.

Rick's Mummy was giving a "party" in honor of Rick's triumph. John Ames, still puzzled, watched Margaret in the midst of a group of her admirers, and suddenly realized why he had been puzzled; why there had never been between Margaret and himself the intense attraction which can ripen into love.

A dapper little friend of Ned Cross was introduced to her; and John saw the handshake which passed between them. He saw, too, the light in her eyes, which had never been in his own.

Queer he had not realized it before. This was Nature's eternal effort at readjustment. Something within the tall Margaret Greenwood, of which she was entirely unconscious, made it impossible for her to ever love a tall man; and something within the tall John Ames had made it impossible for him to love the beautiful and attractive Margaret Greenwood.

"I think I shall be going away tomorrow," he told her at the close of the evening.

"Oh, no!" she protested, genuinely pained. "We shall miss you. We've been such good friends!"

Again he felt the thrill of her voice and saw the fire beneath the chill of her eyes and noted the red fullness of her lips.

"I guess I'm doomed to be a wanderer," he lightly said, and shook hands with her in farewell.

His own hand came away willingly, but he was no longer needed!

FOURTH DEGREE

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

THERE was but little doubt in the mind of Thomas Byrnes, superintendent of police in New York city, that Louis Hanier had been murdered for the sake of the money that he was carrying with him at the time. The little Frenchman had been the proprietor of a cafe, and, having a fear of the banks of America, had the habit of carrying hundreds of dollars in his wallet until the opportunity presented itself of purchasing an international money order.

One morning he was found dead in the vestibule of his home, a .38 caliber bullet through his heart, and his pocketbook missing.

That was all Byrnes had to work upon, for there were no indications whatever of the persons who had committed the crime. The dispatch with which the matter had been handled, appeared to point to a professional criminal, so Byrnes gave orders that all the pawnshops in New York were to be closely watched, and reports made to him of the pawning of any .38 caliber revolvers.

Investigation of the dozen or more .38's pawned during the week which followed the Hanier shooting, showed that all but one of them had been pledged by persons who very evidently had no connection with the murder. The single exception was one Michael McGloin, whom the pawnbroker in question identified by means of his photograph in the Rouges' gallery. McGloin's gun had been pawned on the morning after the murder, and, while the police had little difficulty in locating the man himself, there was not a shred of evidence to connect him with the Hanier case, beyond the fact that he had been absent from home on the night of the shooting in the company of four of his boon companions.

Quietly, and without allowing a word of his intentions to leak out, Byrnes rounded up the quintet one at a time, none of them knowing that the others were being arrested. Each of them was lodged in a cell by himself and questioned closely as to his actions and his whereabouts at the time of the murder. In spite of the fact that Byrnes had definite information that the five men had been together, each of them told a different story, and each claimed to have been alone, at a considerable distance from the Hanier house.

"It's no use, inspector," said one of the policemen who had been working on the case about a week after the five men had been picked up, "you can't get a thing out of 'em. They know, all right, but you can't convict any of 'em without a confession—and we've tried everything, including the 'third degree.'"

"Very well," said Byrnes quietly, "we'll have to try the fourth degree."

"Fourth degree? What's that?" "Just a little way of getting at the truth when a man wants to hold out on you," was Byrnes' answer. "You think there's no doubt that McGloin's the man? Have him brought to this office tomorrow morning, promptly at ten o'clock."

At the time specified, McGloin, sulen and resentful at what he claimed was an illegal detention, walked into the inspector's office, alone. Had he been interested in such details, he might have noted that Byrnes was seated so that he could watch the window of his office which looked out upon a corridor, and also keep an eye upon the occupant of the only chair in the room, bolted to the floor in front of the desk. But McGloin wasn't worrying about such trifles. He was there to demand his release, and he told the inspector so in no measured terms.

"That's all right, McGloin," replied Byrnes. "Sit down a minute. I've several things to attend to," and he motioned to the chair, placed so that it too commanded a view of the corridor window. A moment later the office door opened and a man came in. Byrnes, watching the gunman closely, saw that he was barely able to suppress a start—for the visitor was the pawnbroker with whom McGloin had pledged his revolver. Without saying a word, the pawnbroker crossed the room, laid McGloin's gun on the inspector's desk and walked out.

"Next little boy," remarked Byrnes, picking up the revolver. "Ever see it before?"

"Never," growled McGloin. "I thought not," was the reply. "It's the gun that Hanier, the Frenchman, was shot with. We've finally got a line on that case, after working on it for over a month. Found a man who was a witness of the shooting—"

At this moment, by a prearranged signal, one of McGloin's partners was marched past the corridor window. "Yes," continued Byrnes, appearing not to notice the gunman's agitation, "and we've also found a man who was present"—at which the second of the quintet was ushered past the window—and two others who have confessed their part in the robbery but who claim that the man who fired the shot was . . .

"Stop it, for God's sake, chief!" cried the half-crazed man in the chair, his nerves shattered by the solitary confinement and the marshalling of evidence under his very eyes. "Stop it! I didn't mean to do it, but—I shot him!"

"Score one for the 'fourth degree,'" mused Byrnes.

BRADY TEAM OPENS BALL SEASON THIS AFTERNOON

To the lively air of peppy tunes played by Brady's brag band, the baseball season in Brady will be formally opened this afternoon at Dutton City park, when the Brady team will cross bats with the ball team from Fredericksburg. While these two teams matched no games last year, they are nevertheless old rivals and this afternoon's game is going to be chalked up as count one in settling the score between the two. The occasion is to be a sort of a semi-holiday in Brady, the Brady merchants being requested to close their stores for the game.

In anticipation of the big event, the locals have been putting in some hard practice work, have been showing up stronger every minute. With Robertson, last year's star pitcher on the mound, and a good bunch of the old stars in the game, and with the weak places stopped up by new additions, Brady may be expected to give the Fredericksburg Giants the game of their lives.

The following will be the probable line-up of the two teams:

Couldn't Paint An Angel

Two children were playing on a back porch. The mother, in an adjoining room, heard the remark: "Well, I can't make an angel out of you, but I'm going to make a devil!" The mother peeped out to see just how this was to be accomplished. To her horror she saw the younger child standing very still, completely undressed, while the older child was applying a complete coating of green paint.

Ford Car Has Many Refinements
Body and Mechanical Improvements Meet Public Approval

The Ford Motor Company, Detroit, has just made public a list of recent improvements in the mechanical features of Ford cars.

Asserting that Ford cars are better today than they ever have been before, the statement adds that fuel consumption is lower; the engine is even more efficient than formerly; improvements in the springs and steering apparatus insure easier riding and driving qualities; a new headlamp lens, which complies with all state laws, improves the road light; and that many other minor betterments have been made.

Ford pistons and connecting rods have been re-designed and are matched for weight before assembling into motors. This reduces vibration and gives the motor a quicker pick-up. The new pistons weigh three-quarters of a pound less than those formerly used. A highly polished crank shaft bearing surface also reduces wear and, added to the piston and connecting rod improvements, insures a smoother-running and better balanced motor. The material used in the Ford crankshaft and the care and precision in its manufacture make it second to none.

The new Ford carburetor gives increased acceleration. Though not radically different from the carburetor previously used, the new construction improves the all-round performance of the motor, giving it a quicker pick-up and a greater flexibility of action.

The wiring system has been completely re-designed, and while it costs more to install than the old system, is most efficient, proof of which is evidenced by the fact that it affords a fire insurance rate as low as the higher priced cars on the market.

Many other changes have been made: A 16" steering wheel is now standard equipment; Timken roller bearings are used in the front wheels; one-piece pressed steel running-board brackets insure body rigidity and eliminate vibration and body noises; a dash weather-trough prevents rain from reaching coil terminals or dash wiring; the steering mechanism has also been improved; and the tools supplied to purchasers of Ford cars have also been improved in quality. Another important improvement in the truck chassis is the adoption of cord tires as standard equipment on the rear wheels.

The change made some time ago in the seating arrangement of the Touring car has met with widespread approval. By lowering the seats and altering the seat backs, greater comfort was added.

It is pointed out that retail sales of a million cars and trucks yearly, and the consumption of raw and finished products at a cost of approximately one million dollars a day makes it possible to sell Fords at their present low prices and at the same time to produce a car of exceptionally high quality.

DENTON C. I. A. AND NORTH TEXAS NORMAL PROVE RELATION TO THE EDITORS

sult obtained is a revelation. Economy, simplicity, efficiency and sound social and educational standards are maintained, and the democratic spirit of living and working is evidenced by a prescribed uniform dress, by the absence of sororities, and by the fact that merit alone is the test for determining the standing of the student. A number of students earn a part of their expenses while attending the college, without sacrificing anything of social standing or popularity. Of the total postoffice receipts at Denton the past year, 34% were those at C. I. A. postal station. During the past year, $2,000,000 passed thru the college banking institution.

Most people have a very vague idea of the work done at C. I. A. They know that sewing and cooking is taught there, and home economics, and a few other subjects, including music, stenography and book-keeping. But none can imagine the range of the work at this college unless they see for themselves—and then, instead of the three or four hours spent in the visit, as by this editor, whole days and weeks would be required to make the inspection thorough.

Here are a few of the various kinds of work we saw the students engaged in: 40 student teachers in the kindergarten, with numbers of Denton little folks having the time of their lives in the various plays; the study of photography; basketry; weaving with a loom; pottery; sculpturing; modeling; block stamping; wood-carving; linotyping and printing; drawing; painting; making of jewelry; carving of cameos; wood-turning; cabinet-making; art work in brass and metal; dress-making; cooking—these and innumerable other studies and work.

Any girl who has talent of any kind whatsoever, can find herself and is given opportunity to develop that talent to its highest degree in this wonderful college. To make the mere statement of the subjects, as in the above paragraph, gives no idea whatever of the completeness of the training. For example:

In the dress-making department, the students are taught not only to sew, but to design their own garments. The freshmen start with gingham dresses, and eventually work up to where they are enabled to design the most attractive and dainty of garments. They cut their own patterns, and make the dress complete. The cost varies from less than one dollar up to eight dollars, and possibly higher—but the garments thus produced could not be purchased at retail for less than five to ten times this cost.

Piano, voice, violin, public school music, reading or expression—no matter for what the pupil desires training, the opportunity is presented here.

Then in cooking, the training stops not alone in the careful instruction in this art, but is extended to the proper serving, as well. The students in home economics take turn about in keeping house for a stated period, and when a young man chooses a graduate from this department for his life's companion, he can rest assured he has selected one who is capable of being both a house-keeper and a home-maker. I was told that of all the graduates from C. I. A., who have married, with one single exception, none have sought or been granted a divorce. Some record, that.

There is a young lady at the college who is said to be a second Michael Angelo. In her skillful hands, a block of wood speedily becomes transformed into a beautiful carving. So great is her talent, that parties who have become interested in her, intend to send her to New York to complete her studies.

Among the exhibitions at the college was a bed room suit, including bedstead, dressing table and seat, art lamp, dressing set, and other pieces, all of which, with the exception of the bed springs, had been made by girl students. The window curtains even had been stamped in attractive design by the students, the pictures that adorned the walls were their handwork; the painting of the dresser set, and the weaving and metal work on the ornamental stand lamp, had all been done by the girls.

During our visit at the college, Miss Aschbacher was kept so busy showing us around, we had no opportunities to see her at her studies, but we did find Miss Snider at one time busy weaving an ornamental basket in the department where some of the most skillful creations of the girls were to be found. In this department were to be seen in the making, flower stands, cedar chests, tables and a hundred and one other things. Here also were the cleverest of miniature reproductions—a butcher shop, complete with fan, meat block, scales, quarters of beef, bologna sausage and what-not; a grocery store, with counters and shelving displaying cans of well-known brands of shortening, syrups, preserves and fruit. All done in microscopic miniature, and yet with such accuracy as to be instantly recognizable.

The May Day Fete on the great greensward Friday evening was a most picturesque and beautiful sight and illustrated in charming fashion the natural grace and beauty of our Texas girls. First was the great allegorical parade (it may not have been just that, but for want of better descriptive term, we will call it so) with gaily bedecked floats and horses, and with the girls attired in festive and gala dress. Among others, were the Texas Bluebonnets, easily distinguished by the blue bonnets worn by the girls. Miss Aschbacher was in this group, as prince, or was it, let us say, as Little Boy Blue.

First of all was the May-Pole dance, with two groups taking part, and to the rhythmic music of the C. I. A. orchestra, they wove the gay ribbons about the May poles. Then came the Greenwich Villagers, in their story-book costumes, and the bright colors, and the quaint actions and steps of the participants was a pleasure to behold. Following were the Folk dances and interpretive dances of various kinds. Not only were the visiting editors and their families present, but it appeared that all of Denton was there too, as well they might be.

There are many other things to relate, and upon these subjects we will touch but briefly. As may be imagined, the serving of meals for 1300 students is no small undertaking. C. I. A. has its own refrigerating plant; its own dairies and poultry yards (which incidentally give opportunity for the study of these subjects) its own greenhouses, etc. The students are served from spotless kitchens, where whole hams, and other large cuts of meat, are cooked at once, and where the coffee urn looks like it was built for an army. The loaves of bread are cut, thick, or thin, as may be desired, with a rotary bread slicer; the dishes are washed, scalded and dried by machinery, human hands not even touching them in the operation. Some system!

Then there's the new gymnasium and swimming pool. This pool is the third largest pool for women in the U. S. The water is sterilized by electrolysis, then is fed into the tank from the upper end, and eventually again passes through the electric treatment. The water through this method is used over and over five times. Quite naturally, this is a favorite spot for the students, especially on hot days or after a strenuous day. An exhibition was given here in saving the life of one drowning.

We might mention that after the May Day Fete, and while the editors were enjoying the banquet at Lowry hall, the girls, still in costume, marched around the building, carrying Japanese lanterns, and serenading the banqueters.

Before leaving the subject, I believe the readers would be interested in a brief description of the laundry rooms, for more reasons than one, as you will agree after reading this. Here are contained the most modern of equipment—electric tubs, electric driers and electric irons. Many students who do not feel able to have their laundry done (C. I. A. operates a full-equipped laundry) may use this equipment at their pleasure; others, who are able to pay for their laundry, nevertheless find the use of this department a source of great economy. Still others have dainty articles which they prefer to laundry themselves. In this work, they are carefully instructed. For instance a bath robe was shown. When brought to the laundry, it was quite soiled. The girls were instructed in the proper method of washing it; to stretch it while drying; to brush it so as to raise the nap once more, and, behold! one could not tell the bath robe from a new one.

A word as to the State Normal school. Another engagement prevented our visiting this school, but the Mrs. did, and enjoyed the hospitality to the fullest extent. Here is another wonderful school, and the handwork of the students is most remarkable. From the daintiest of work to the most strenuous is taught here, and the students are thoroughly prepared as teachers no matter in what direction their preference or talents lie. While not offering as many courses as C. I. A., it prepares the teachers for the most effective work in the school room, and prepares the teachers to leave behind the old methods and to adapt the school work more to the needs of every-day existence. The school has a record of having trained more teachers than any school of its kind in the South. The school has a splendid faculty under Dr. W. H. Bruce, but is cramped for room, and needs more ample facilities for its work. The delightful luncheon served here Friday noon was prepared by the domestic science department.

To paraphrase a popular expression, to close this article without paying tribute to Will C. Edwards, editor of the Denton Record & Chronicle, and H. F. Browder, secretary of the Denton Chamber of Commerce, would be to leave one of our chief debts unpaid. The Record & Chronicle is a splendid daily paper, and it covered the convention in truly metropolitan style. It has been a great factor in Denton's growth and development, and behind it all is the splendid personality and great executive genius of Mr. Edwards. Ably seconding every effort for Denton's upbuilding is Secretary Browder. They are a team to draw to.

der first placed Denton in nomination for the 1922 meeting at McAllen last year, everyone wondered what Denton had to offer in the way of attractions and entertainment when it possessed neither gulf, sea-port or water front. They stressed the fact that C. I. A. and the State Normal, and the entire citizenship of Denton was back of the request, and that they wanted to show the editors something they had never before seen—two of the greatest educational institutions in the South. With the smiling welcome to be extended by 2,000 charming Texas girls in view, the editors accepted the invitation—and if you have read this article and the one last week, you must know that our greatest expectations were fulfilled—and more. It is a pleasure to meet and mingle with a citizenship so united in purpose, without factions, all devoting their efforts to upbuilding their city. It must be wonderful to live in a town with that spirit, and Will Edwards and Frank Browder are to be congratulated. Also, they are deserving of the unstinted praise and heartfelt thanks of the press and the people for enabling us to get better acquainted with these two schools which offer so much, and can do so much for the girls and boys of Texas—the citizens of tomorrow.

MUSIC PUPILS RENDER DELIGHTFUL PROGRAM TUESDAY NIGHT M. E. CHURCH

Another delightful program, marking the close of the school year, was given on Tuesday night at the Methodist church by music pupils of Miss Pinkie Jones. The program of musical numbers was interspersed with two plays, the first entitled, "Brave Boys," in which Billie Bodenhamer, Milton Coalson, Gladys Calliham and Nance Marie Bauhof took part, and the second, "Waiting for the Doctor," played by nine girls and three boys, and which added greatly to the enjoyment of the audience.

In their various solo, duet and trio performances, each and every one of pupils did so exceptionally well as to be deserving of highest praise, and their splendid performances reflected credit in great degree upon their teacher, Miss Jones.

Taking part in the program were the following: Misses Ruh Maurine Evers, Gladys Calliham, Frances Evers, Vivian Samuelson, Mayfair Woolsey, Camie Helen Carrithers, Ruby Gray, Lenora Parker, Orvala Willbanks, Gladys Lindsey, Addie Mae Willbanks, Jewel Bodenhamer, Clara Taylor, Jewel Salter, Alice Hutschenreuter, Maurine Wolf, Mary Campbell, Master Milton Coalson.
