Success in raising poultry requires more than pure-bred or scientifically cross-bred stock. The poultry house is of equal importance. It must be right in design and it must be properly located. The poultry house effects the success in raising poultry in two ways: It has a direct effect in providing protection for the fowls and giving them every advantage which makes for good health and maximum 14 feet, patterned after a poultry house taying capacity; it has an indirect effect in placing the fowls under the control of the farmer, who is able to give them the attention which they require If the best results are to be obtained.

Without regard for the size or shape of the poultry house, there are two rules which should be followed: One of these is that the building should face the south or southeast. The other is that the north and northwest walls of the building should be carefully insulated against the wind. It is neither necessary or desirable that windows be | ered with a one-inch coat of lime morplaced in these walls. Generally tar made with very fine sand. This speaking, poultry houses are built too | material is softer than cement and is high. Domestic poultry requires very better for the poultry. There is so little weight on the henhouse floor that the ordinary solid concrete construction is not necessary. The foundation walls extend up 18 inches above grade and about 15 inches above the

The studding are connected with the top of the concrete wall by using sockets which are set in the concrete: After the inside wall board and the outside drop siding have been carried up the studs a short distance, about one inch of fresh cement mortar is placed in each of the spaces between studs and worked into the corners thoroughly, to prevent cracks through which the wind can blow and to seal the walls against poultry insects. Above the sills, the walls and roof are sealed both outside and inside and a layer of building paper is placed against the studs under both the wall board and the siding and against the rafters under both the wall board and the sheathing. The object is to make a dead-air space surrounding the inclosed space so that the temperature of the interior will be held as even as possible.

To facilitate ventilation and to get the benefit of the sunlight, the roof is each day in a dry, clean yard. The most satisfactory manner of keeping poultry in the summer time is to give them liberal range in an orchard or some other place where a variety of seeds may be planted at intervals to raise different commodities which the chickens can harvest themselves.

In the accompanying illustrations, a henhouse is shown which is snug and comfortable, offering the hens every possible inducement to lay eggs at close to five cents aplece while the snow is flying. The building is 36 by adopted by the members of the New York State poultry association.

It is built on a wall of concrete and has a good concrete floor, the idea being permanency and sanitation together with protection against rats and mice. After the concrete walls have been built, the ground is leveled inside and settled with water. The floor is placed above this, the concrete being in the proportion 1:3:5. Instead of using a rich cement mortar surface coat, the top of the floor may be cov-little headroom, but the excessive | given a long slope at the back and a height is necessary in order that the short dip in front, as is clearly shown attendant may work in comfort within in the perspective view. This also the building.

Sunlight is just as important in a poultry house as it is in a human habitation. Sunlight means health when other conditions are favorable. At the same time, hothouse conditions must be carefully guarded against. If a poultry house has too much glass in its walls, it will be too warm in the daytime, when the sun shines hot and the radiation of heat at night will be so rapid as to make the daily range of temperature too great for best conditions.

Ventilation is just as important as sunlight. Poultry, to do well, must have fresh air in abundance. However, the ventilating system must elimtnate strong drafts. Panels of thin cloth in the front wall of the building seem to serve the purpose best.

In addition to the poultry house, a good yard must be provided. There are weeks at a time, during the winter, when the poultry must be closely onfined within the house. However, the fowls should be given several hours over by a milk cart."

gives headroom for the attendant in the front part with a low roof at the back, which is appreciated in the winter time when there is not much heat from the sun. The front intake ventilators consist of window openings covered with very thin cotton. Cheesecloth is recommended as being thin enough to admit both air and light yet it is thick enough to prevent draft.

The inside of the house is divided into two rooms; the larger room is the general scratching shed and the smaller one is the nesting room. Both rooms are supplied with removable hen furniture, so that everything inside of the walls may be lifted off and carried out-of-doors for cleaning. Lice and mites are so troublesome in poultry houses that facilities for keeping the place clean are absolutely neces-

It is for this reason, also, that the inside of the poultry house is lined with wall board, which is cemented at the joints and the whole surface painted carefully with three coats of thin paint, thoroughly rubbed in to fill every crack and to cover every rough place that could possibly make a hiding place for vermin.

In this plan there are three outside doors for convenience in feeding the fowls and cleaning the house. The door to the west should be fitted with weather-strips and kept shut most of the time in winter.

LEMONS BRING OUT THE HIDDEN BEAUTY

What girl or woman hasn't heard of lemon juice to remove complexion blemishes; to bleach the skin and to bring out the roses, the freshness and the hidden beauty? But lemon juice alone is acid, therefore irritating, and should be mixed with orchard white this way. Strain through a fine cloth the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing about three ounces of orchard white, then shake well and you have a whole quarter pint of skin and complexion lotion at about the cost one usually pays for a small jar of ordinary cold cream. Be sure to strain the lemon juice so no pulp gets is often followed by pneumonia. Beinto the bottle, then this lotion will remain pure and fresh for months. When applied daily to the face, neck, arms and hands it should help to bleach, clear, smoothen and beautify

Any druggist will supply three ounces of orchard white at very little cost and the grocer has the lemons.

unknows, Roosevelt county is less of our young men that have first, 1917 and signed by the said William Perkins under the name of W C. Perkins, which gone to the front than we are of our dollars? These young men, for the most part, had no choice thirty, east of New Mexico meridian, New Mexbut to go, as a matter of fact they have been forced into a condition that is no more their duty to fill than it is that of any other individual in the county or state. They have gone to fight our fight, yours and mine, yet we are, apparently, sitting idly by and taking no account of the hardships they will pe called on to undergo. We are not even making any provision for their food and clothing. Apparently, we care nothing whether they have plenty or whether they starve in the trenches. Is this the American ideal of duty? Is it the Roosevelt county conception of American patriotism? While such appears the cold estimate that will of an attorney for collection and foreclosure be placed upon our failure to re- said indebtedness and secured by said lien of spond to the call of the country that has sheltered and protected of said deed of trust and the power contained therein, I, the undersigned substitute trustee in said deed of trust, will, on the guaranteed our liberty in the past and hopes to continue to guarantee it in the future, it does not, in reality reflect our real feelings. Our failure thus far to come forward at the call of our nation is due more to the fact that we have been accustomed to allow matters to drift with the tide and take whatever providence had in store for us. DR. J. S. PEARCE There is scarce y a man in the county who would not cheerfully go down into his pocket and give up twice the amount represented by a liberty bond and give it without grudge or hesitation to any soldier at the front, without hope of profit or repayment, if he knew him to be in need. The trouble is that we fail to appreciate the seriousaess of the condition. We have been accustomed to relying upon the goverment in all matters and the gra- D. D. By SAMUEL McCOY

This is a story of pioneer days in Indiana, when courageous frontiersmen fought the redskins and the wilderness and won vast territory

With a bound he reached the bank of the stream, leaped down beneath its friendly shelter, and ran on noiseedge, back toward the quarter from which the shot had come; if he were pursued, it would be better to let the chase pass him than to try to outdistance the Indian runners. At last he stopped and inch by inch crawled up to the top of the bank until he could lift his head with infinite caution and peer through the tufts of weeds. No sound broke the stillness. For an eternity of time he lay, clutching his rifle in readiness; but the only sound was the querulous calling of the little woodpecker, high overhead. He . waited .

Fifty yards away a twig snapped under a slow-moving foot. David scarcely breathed. A head rose above a fallen giant of the forest, and a crouching shadow flitted from tree to tree, nearer, nearer . . . David raised his rifle ever so little He saw the face of the dread hunter. peering with quick motions of the head from side to side, watchful as the brown water-snake. Nearer he came; the garb was that of an Indian.

the face a white man's! David was about to cry out with relief when the him, though they failed to pierce the sheltering covert, and with a sickening horror David recognized the face of Simon Girty, the renegade!

On the instant, David lifted his rifle and fired full at the crouching figure.

From Girty's lips broke the roar of an infuriated animal; he staggered back with the impact of the shot, but he did not fall nor yet did he lift his weapon to his shoulder; and David saw that his shot had struck only the lock of Girty's rifle, rendering it useless but leaving the man unharmed. With a bellow of rage, Girty bounded and shouted like boys. Old "Wash" green skins, its crackling bundles of is all past now, David. It is the futoward him, swinging the broken Johnston leaned over and kissed her furs, hated the sight of the cheerful ture that is everything. And I know weapon like a club. There was no time to reload. David leaped to the top of the bank and braced himself for the onset. As the clubbed rifle of the outlaw rose above his head, David swung his own upward to meet it. They crashed together and splintered with a shock; and in the same second, flinging the broken stock away, the mighty arms of Simon Girty flung themselves around David.

With the strength of desperation, David strove to oppose the terrible sinews. Back and forth over the frozen grass the two men fought like beasts, heaving, struggling, stumbling over roots, locked in an embrace as dendly as that of the cougar. But it could not last long; David felt his strength ebbing under the terrific strain and his breath grew short and gasping; when suddenly the earth gave way beneath their feet and with a last despairing effort David twisted himself above as they toppled over the low bluff, and the fight was over. Girty, falling underneath, had struck his head upon a stone; and his arms relaxed their hold.

David stood up, panting.

Girty lay very still. But David knew that he must make sure that the man was dead before he could be safe himself. He felt in his girdle for his knife; but it had fallen out during the struggle. Clambering up the bank again, he saw it lying on the ground and us his fingers closed upon the handle he thought he heard a sob. He turned his head quickly.

"Toinette!"

The name burst from him in the completeness of his astonishment, in the revulsion of his despair, in his mighty joy, like the cry of the soul

Toinette was leaning against the log from behind which Girty had risen, exhausted by the effort she had made to free herself from the thongs that bound her feet and hands. A sob had come from lips drawn in utter weariness and despair.

He was beside her.

"Save yourself," she murmured faintly, "there are Indians coming!"

He kneeled and cut the thongs that bound her ankles and then those of her wrists. As she tried to stand, she swayed weakly and fainted. There was no time to lose; he lifted her limp form upon his shoulders and ran staggeringly in the direction of the troops. He could never overtake them-the marching column and the slow-moving wagons must be a mile away by now. He stumbled on with desperate exertion. He reached the winding creek ngain, laid down his unconscious burden and dashed the icy water in Toinette's face. Her great blue eyes, shadowed by dark circles of exhaustion, opened slowly, looked at him blankly. "Father, help me!" she cried, they reached Fort Harrison, on the He shook her by the shoulders, homeward journey. "Stand up! Try!" They found a place where the water gurgled over a stony bar, ankle-deep; crossed it and struggled up the bank on the farther side. As they reached less moccasins along the shelving the top there came to their ears the dreadful exultant yells of the Indians, three hundred yards behind. David put his arms around the girl's shoulders and they ran on with palsied limbs. They seemed to be struggling on in that mightmare where the feet are leaden and the pursuers fleet. Nearer and nearer came the fierce yelping.

At last David and Toinette stood still and looked at each other. David drew his knife. She nodded, silently praying him to deliver her with that swift death from the tortures of the savages. "Oh, God, not yet!" he crted; and drew her on in blind haste. Twice he shouted, with all the strength of his gasping lungs. Was it an echo, or an answering shout that came back? And then there came a burst of the sweetest music in the world: the cheers of a score of Harrison's men, crashing through the woods a hundred yards away. The chase was suddenly reversed. At the first shout of the backwoodsmen, the baffled Indians turned and fled. The rescuing party pursued them but a little way, firing vainly at the fleeing forms dodging among the tree trunks. glittering eyes were turned full toward Young Georgie, Croghan, Harrison's aid, was in command of the little squad. They had heard Girty's shot, fired at David, and a little later. David's shot; and had come back from the troops with all speed. Toinette had sunk to the ground, laughing and sobbing; they gathered around her with wild hurrahs, a torrent of eager

He hated the sight of the and his staff galloped up one by one ill-smelling store, with its heaps of face, stained with happy tears. "I'm old enough, my dear," he said.

And the men cheered again.

A dozen times she was obliged to tell the story of her captivity; a dozen times the men lifted David on their shoulders and cheered him to the echo. But through all the rejoicing and the thanksgiving, David's heart remained heavy; for the breach still seemed impossible to bridge. She, too, suffered; tormented by a debt of gratitude due one whose treason to his country must forever bar him from her love.

Treason? Why was it, then, that David seemed such a hero to all his comrades among the militiamen? Why had all of them received him into their hearts like a brother? Toinette struggled all through the day with the secret which she thought so horrible. Little by little, she came to the conclusion that David had managed in some way to win a pardon from Governor Harrison, before the trip to the Prophet's camp had been begun. She went back over the circumstances of that tragic meeting in Corydon, when she and Ike had confronted David and found the proofs of treachery upon him. What had happened after she had left that scene? Perhaps Ike had prevailed on David to renounce his allegiance to England. Perhaps, then, he had interceded with Governor Harrison in his friend's behalf. She pictured the stern young governor as saying that David's life must depend on his faithful service to the territory in the future. Ike had never spoken one word to her about David from that day on. Little by little, as she went over each point in her heart, a sense that she had been tricked out of her love grew on her, a sense that somehow she had cheated herself. In the sleepless hours of the night that followed, she felt her eyes smarting with tears. What could she do? What could she do? The whole world seemed against her!

She could not bring herself to voice her inward trouble to anyone, least of all to David. She watched him striding along, among his comrades, jesting with them as only men who have passed through death together can jest, and her torment almost maddened her. What a sorry tangle she had got herself into! What a little fool she had been! But David, too, she told herself, had been just as unreasonable. She caught glimpses of him when he thought himself unseen by her, and the flintlike set of his jaws convinced her that he was unendurable in his fixed resolve not to forget what had gone before. Why couldn't he be sensible and talk to her as if nothing had happened? As for herself, she would die before she begged his forgiveness. And so matters stood when her forget; but strove in vain! On the twenty-fifth of November they reached Corydon. Runners had gone on before with the news of victory; and the whole village came out to meet them as they neared the town; women ran among the men even as they marched and flung their arms around the necks of brothers, fathers, husbands, though some sought in vain for those who would never return, or threw themselves with weeping beside the bodies of those who lay upon the litters. But a hundred hearts were happy and thanked God; and happiest of all was a little old man, Patrice O'Bannon, who strained his daughter to his breast and kissed her again and i again with tears mingling with his kisses; for she had been brought back to him as from the grave.

The Poison Lingers.

David stayed behind in Vincennes, going back to his work at the trading house of Francois Vigo. But he stayed there only a week or two before his loneliness made existence without a Hoosiers and French who thronged the streets of the old capital, and loathed the wretched Piankeshaw Indians who slept in the doorway. Suddenly, one morning, he told old Vigo that he must leave; and the next day found him once more in Corydon, where Ike welcomed him with beaming face.

" Still the breach was open! It is so hard for young men and maidens to lay down their pride!

To Toinette the days were almost unbearable. David acted like a bear with a sore head, she thought. It was just what she might have expected, she told herself. It is perfectly silly to be so big and flinty, she was sure, David had never spoken ten words to her at any one time, since the day he had knocked everything into a cocked play." hat by telling her he loved her. People who loved each other didn't act as they did, she knew; why, whenever they had been together she felt as though something tremendous, something bigger than she was, was in the very air around and on the point of exploding. She didn't approve of explosions, still less of things, nameless forces, that were bigger than she was. When she had talked to David in the old days it was like talking to the heart steel, about which Mr. Livingston had written her father-that great throband which palpitated with fury and drove a boat from Pittsburgh to New | blue eyes smiled wanly through the Orleans in a month. It was no use teiling her father that she was afraid of something she couldn't name. If it was true that she had trembled from head to foot when she felt that the sparks which flashed back and forth from her steel and David's flint were dangerously near a powder mine somewhere inside her, that was her affair and she would have to drown it with her own contempt as best she might.

Accordingly, the little old gentleman. who was sincerely troubled by the evischursness came back into her eyes; Blackford, sound and strong again. Toinette when he stuck a cautious fin-

The tower of pride reared itself up again from its dust. Why must he ask her to humble herself still further, when she had already said so much? She was silent. He waited for her answer, but none came; and at last, he bowed gravely.

The Storm Breaks

Young Doctor Elliott, lying prone on his blanket on the hewn logs of the floor of Conrod's tavern, stirred uneasily in his sleep. Outside, the artillery of the last thunderstorm of the autumn rumbled and crashed above the steady rush of the rain. A hand fell upon the latch and the door burst open before get it until you say that you were the fury of the wind. Elliott woke to find the rain driving into his face. He was about to rise to close the door when the whole room was struck out of darkness by the dazzling blue of sheet lightning. It was gone as instantly as it came and the crash of thunder which accompanied it drowned his cry. In that single moment of the blinding flash he had seen, outlined against the shimmering sky, framed in the rectangle of the door, the dreadful figure of a crouching Indian, knife in hand.

His limbs froze in horror. The room was now as black as midnight, but his eyes ached with the impress of the lightning glare and the image that had been struck into them. Still in the pitch darkness he could see that sickening face—dark, evil, its bloodshot eyes peering malevolently into the

With the hoarse snarl of a wild beast, the Indian leaped at the figure in the doorway. They grappled. In the darkness Elliott heard their quick terrible breathing as they swayed in a struggle for life. A stool tripped them and they fell, rolling against him. Again the lightning flared and he saw the knife, dashed from the Indian's hand, lying beside him. The white man was beneath, his face hidden by the straining shoulders of the savage. Blindly Elliott seized the weapon and

The man beneath shook off the relaxed arms of the hideous intruder and rose unsteadily to his feet. Then he laughed aloud in the darkness.

"I can't see who you are, friend," he said, "but you've certainly saved me from a close call."

Elliott made no answer. He was sobbing weakly, his hand still clutching the blood-stained knife. From the upper room came the sound of volces and the tavernkeeper came hurriedly down the narrow ladder leading from the loft, followed by the awakened guests. Someone struck a flint; candles were lighted.

SUPERIOR IN MANY RESPECTS

Outdoor Affairs Can Be Maintained at Uniform Temperature Over Long Period-Ventilators Add to Efficiency.

Outdoor storage cellars or caves are excellent for the storage of many vegetables. They are particularly desirable on the farm, as they afford convenient and inexpensive storage facilities for surplus vegetable crops that otherwise might be lost. They possess all the advantages of the storage room in the basement and are superior in many respects. The outdoor storage cellar can be maintained at a uniform temperature over a long period. It is possible to keep the cellar cool and quickly to reduce the temperature of the stored product to the desired point for safe storage by opening the door during the night and closing it in the morning before the air becomes warm. All ventilators should likewise be kept tightly closed until the outside air is again cooler than that within the cellar, when they should be opened, unless the outside temperature is so low as to be dangerous. This safeguards the product and adds to the efficiency of the storage chamber. Vegetables can be more conveniently placed in such a cellar than in the storage room in the basement of a

When it is to be used for vegetables for the table the cellar should be accessible from the kitchen at all times. If apples or other fruits are to be stored in an outdoor storage cellar it is desirable to have a two-compartment cellar, one for vegetables and one for apples, with a ventilating apparatus in each com-Construction of Cellar.

As the root cellar must be weather proof, that is, capable of being kept free from moisture and free from frost, its type and construction vary with the geographical location. In the southern portion of the country the structure is usually entirely above ground and protected by only a few inches of sod and with straw, leaves, etc. In Northern sections outdoor storage cellars are made almost entirely below ground and covered with foot or two of earth.

apart, extending 7 or 8 feet above the surface of the ground, with a ridgepole placed on top of them. Against each side of the ridgepole a row of planks or puncheons is placed, with their opposite ends resting in a shallow trench 4 or 5 feet from the line of posts. The ends are boarded up, a door being provided in one end of the structure and the room covered with sod to a depth of 5 or 6 inches. A good type of outdoor storage cellar built along these lines is shown in the illustration. Storage in Regions of Severe Freezes.

This type of structure is preferable in many respects to the above-ground type, as it is easier to maintain the temperature at the proper point and its insulation is a comparatively easy matter.

Protection from freezing may be se cured with a simpler type of structure by making it entirely underground. In order to avoid steps down to the level of the floor, with the consequent extra labor in storing and removing the vegetables, a sidehill location is desir-

The excavation in the hill should be of the approximate size of the cellar, using the dirt for covering the roof and for banking the sides of the structure. A frame is erected by setting two rows of posts of uniform height in the bottom of the pit near the dirt walls and a third line of posts about 5 feet higher, through the center of the pit. These posts serve as supports for the planks or puncheons forming the room of the structure, as with the above-ground type of storage cellar already described. The door is placed at one end and a ventilator put in the roof. The whole structure with the exception of the portion occupied by the door is covered with dirt and sod. The thickness of the covering must be determined by the location; the colder the climate the thicker the covering. The dirt covering may be supplemented in winter by a layer of manure, straw, corn fodder, etc. Outdoor storage cellars usually are left with dirt floors, as a certain degree of moisture is desirable. These cellars may be made of concrete, brick, hollow tile, stone, or other material.

Outdoor Storage Cellar Built of Concrete.

The type of outdoor storage cellar described above, while low in first cost, is short lived, as the conditions in the cellar are favorable to the decay of wood. The concrete storage cellar, although rather high in first cost, as compared with wood, is a permanent structure.

For detailed information in reference to the mixing and handling of concrete, the reader is referred to Farmers' Bulletin 461, entitled "The

At first glance it would seem that the man living directly upon the improved road obtains the greatest benefits, but careful analysis proves that the greatest gain over present conditions is the man on the side road. With the limited road and bridge funds usually available in any township and the necessity of keeping the main highways at least in passable condition, little or nothing is left for working upon the less traveled roads. As repair expense practically ceases when permanent roads are built, the road and bridge funds formerly spent on main roads will be released for use upon the side roads.

Turn Feed Crops to Profit

The 1917 growing season is closed and every farmer may now take stock of the feed crops produced this year. Every bit of feed in this section may be turned into cash through use in the feed lot, by fattening or in wintering cattle and sheep. The farmer with surplus feed has opportunity to get live stock to eat

The astounding decrease in the world's supply of meat animals since the war started, has sent prices to the stars. The first week in October this year saw in Chicago the hiehest top prices on record for October on cattle, hogs, and sheep. For instance, the top price for hogs in Chicago in 1895 was $3.65, in 1905 $6.80, in 1911 $6.90, in $1915 $6.95, in 1916 $10.35, and this year $19.65.

With a total world shortage of meat animals of a million and a quarter head, there can be no serious slump in prices. And the demand for meat is increasing in the face of the decrease in supply. The matter of price is no longer considered; the consumer must have meat.

Every pound of feed, therefore, that will make more meat or will winter cattle and sheep, needs be taken into account. Every additional pound put on the steer, the hog, or the lamb adds to the nation's meat supply and will also give the farmer a price even for forage and straw, usually wasted.

It is the opportune time to take an inventory of the available food. Cattle and sheep are moving to market from pastures and the range and now while there is plenty to choose from, it is time to buy what stock is needed to eat all the surplus feed. Talk it over with the banker. - A. M. Hove.
