FOR A UNITED CITY PORTALES

An "Experience Meeting" In Which There is Not a Single Discordant Note—Many Expressions of Good Will.

A Herald representative started out on the streets yesterday to begin an "experience meeting," and in the brief time he had to make the round, he had secured expressions from several representative men of the town as to their individual desire of a United Portales, which is indicative of the normal pulse of the town. It was not the scope of our purpose to get the hundreds of loyal citizens who at all times stand ready to lend their best efforts to any and everything which has in it the elements of hope for the betterment of Portales, but merely to get a "sample," some among those who have passed through the unpleasantness and bitterness of an unusually bitter city campaign, who could show by their words and are ready to prove by their acts that they can come out of a heated political wrangle with a wholesome frame of mind, and are ready, yes, they stand ready to seek every opportunity to promote the well-being of the town. Not that the Herald believed that a part of our citizenship had permitted themselves to become sour and unwholesome as a result of the above-mentioned strenuous event but that we believe that it is sometimes conducive to a more concerted effort to look within our ranks and feel the life-blood of great action. Like the celebrated Irishman who was asked if he could fight: "I don't know," he replied, "for I have never tried it." Now we know that Portales citizens can fight, and that manfully too, for what they conceive to be right, as they see it, but the spirit that we are now calling into action, is to realize that we have other faculties and responsibilities of citizenship which calls for a different kind of warfare, that of achieving victory in the development of our town and vicinity in spite of all the untoward circumstances which may appear on the surface. So in securing these expressions of good will we only had in mind a desire to manifest a fair "sample" of the spirit which pervades around and permeates through the woof of our citizenship. A sort of retrospection as it were, which would serve as an index to the chapters of heroic service which are to follow in the wake of a better and greater Portales.

The vision of things to be done may come a long time before the way of doing them appears clear. But shame to him who distrusts the vision.—Name withheld.

For a greater and better Portales, let's all pull together, if we can't see the same way.—T. M. Laster.

Why not reorganize the commercial club and go after bigger things. We have the country and why not let others see the good things that we have to show.—J. B. Sledge.

I am for a speedy completion of the public works now under construction and for anything that may be to the interest and upbuilding of Portales.—Sam J. Nixon.

Let us get busy now and turn our attention to the upbuilding of the town. It behooves all as citizens to make the present city administration a success.—W. O. Oldham.

I believe that the long desired opportunity for the building of a greater and better Portales has come and her citizens will unite in the one great effort.—W. H. Garrett.

I stand pledged to do anything that offers prosperity to Portales. If we will but use the forces which we have at hand we can take advantage of the era of prosperity which is at our door. J. B. Priddy.

Everyone should get busy and get in the band wagon and proclaim a "greater Portales!" as we are on the eve of a great boom. The time is ripe for action.—C. V. Harris.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand." "In union there is strength." "We must hang together or hang separately." With all my heart and soul I am in favor of uniting in every good effort for a greater Portales.—Edgar L. Young.

There is no way to make a town without some concerted movement among the people living in that town. Let there be a paid man to get up necessary data to let the world know we are on the earth.—India Humphrey.

With the brightest prospects before us that Portales has ever known, it seems to me to be an appropriate time for us to get to work pulling together for the common good, and make ours a town to meet with the great development of the surrounding country.—Ben Smith.

The city dads having adjusted everything to their satisfaction, and I hope to the satisfaction of the community, I suggest that we unite in assisting the New Board in making this a better and greater Portales. We are one large growing family; let us live in harmony.—T. J. Molinari.

Harmony is the key note to success; why should not Portales and her people be a success with the great prospects before us? Here's hoping that every man will bury his little hatchet and be a Portales builder instead of a Portales knocker.—L. R. Hough, D. D. S.

The slanderer would impair the influence of character: being too blind to discern the injury to himself; the knocker, with his hammers of envy and selfishness, impairs the growth of his town and applies the lash of poverty to his own back. Let us all lay aside the hammers and help each other to avoid the lash.—T. E. Mears.

"In union there is strength." This is the day for Portales—the day that her citizens should be united so as to act as one and take the advantages now offered them to convert our little town into a city. That our city may be known as the center of education and harmony and based on that moral plan which will invite the best class of people to locate with us. And to this end let us stand together and let peace and harmony prevail and every virtue cement us, and happiness and prosperity will be ours.—C. M. Compton.

The ideal city is a clean city, clean politically, morally and physically. Partisan politics in municipal government is responsible in many instances for incompetent, corrupt and useless officials. Competent heads of departments having to do with the physical condition of the city will correct many of the ills that beget disease, crime and death. The location of public parks in

The Herald Editor Gives Interesting Glimpses of Life and Conditions As Observed En Route to Baltimore, Md.

WHAT I SAW IN KANSAS.

Few things are more interesting than observing how other people live, what they do and how they do it—especially if the other people happen to be much like ourselves. The Kansas people as a whole are typical westerners, not of the old ranchman, pioneer type, nor yet of the type of those farmers who followed in the wake of the ranchman-pioneers, but up-to-date westerners, discarding readily obsolete methods and machinery and seizing eagerly and readily everything that lends itself to the advancement of their particular calling or avocation. The Kansas is tied to nothing except his ambition to succeed and to everything that helps him to that end.

Happily Kansas people have outlived that generation of westerners who expect to get along without work. The farmer in Kansas really farms his land; and while he has the advantage of the New Mexico farmer in that the land has been under cultivation twenty to forty years and the altitude being lower and the seasons being more regular, the Kansas farmer has not a whit better land and not as good climate as the New Mexico farmer.

THE KANSAS FARMER.

I was interested to observe what the Kansas farmer raises and how he goes about it. Of course everyone knows that the chief crops are wheat and corn. But I was glad to see so much alfalfa growing without irrigation, also to see some few good orchards. The orchards are, however, for the most part old. I saw very few young orchards, the most of them having the appearance of being some twelve to fifteen years old. A noticeable feature of most all the farms—which on the whole are very like the farms of Central Texas except of course the soil is not so black and sticky as in Texas—is the hedge. The wind is terrific at times in Kansas and it has not been so very many years since the spring winds blew the wheat out of the ground and whipped the corn and vegetables to death. All this is changed now. The winds are not so strong as formerly, for one thing, and then everywhere, on all sides of almost every farm is the ubiquitous hedge of boisard which is the densest, hardest hedge to be found anywhere and which soon grows into fence posts that will last a life time. Along with the hedge nearly all the early settlers appear to have made friends with the cottonwood and to have planted these quick-growing western trees in large numbers. These also grow wild about the creeks and lagoons so that Kansas—which twenty or thirty years ago was a bald and sightless and almost treeless prairie—is now one great plantation, crossed and re-crossed by cottonwood trees and boisard hedges, where the wind is held in check and where the wheat and corn crops practically never fail.

THE CROPS.

Kansas farmers spare no pains to get their ground in good condition for their crops. In case of corn, some list their ground and plant down in the furrow, but most of them break deep then level and pulverize thoroughly and plant flat in the seed bed. But in either case, as soon as the corn is up, a harrow is put on it which serves as first cultivation and also levels the ground. They were harrowing the little corn which in most cases was just peering out of the ground as we passed through.

The methods of cultivating wheat will perhaps not interest our people, though I believe in time New Mexico will be a wheat county to a large extent. Another good crop which is growing more and more in favor with Kansas people is alfalfa and hogs. They were baling the first crop of alfalfa in some instances as we passed through on the 10th. In many cases, however, the hogs were seen taking care of the crop to good advantage. The nursery crop is another paying business with Kansas farmers, as the soil and the climate conspire to make trees healthy and vigorous.

Kansas farmers also make good money out of livestock. Nearly every farmer has a few livestock, including brood mares, hogs and cattle which he feeds, fattens and sells to good advantage. In all cases he handles only the best grade of stock.

Kansas farmers use draft horses or mules for farm work, having long since discarded the cheap fantail variety of horses now used in New Mexico and which are good for nothing, either to ride or to work.

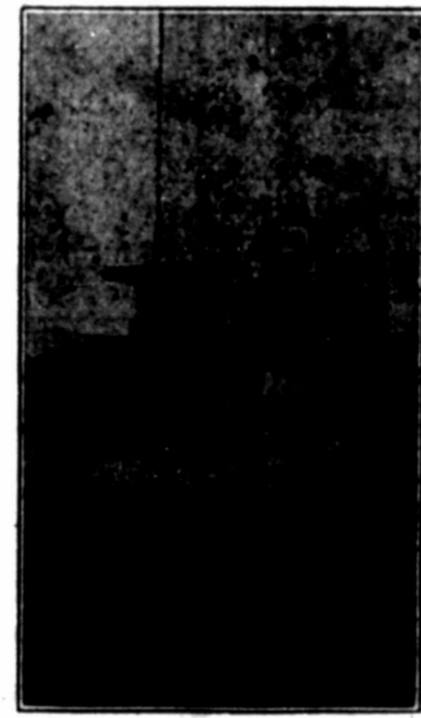

Considering the comparative newness of the country, one is impressed with the large number of railroads in Kansas which form a perfect net work over every part of the state.

There being no rivers of any consequence in the state and nothing which appears even fairly well akin to a mountain, there is little that can be called natural scenery. By its soil, its topography, its net-work of railroads, its wide-awake enterprising people and its already large number of live bustling towns and cities, Kansas is now and will continue to be more and more given over to the great farming, commercial and industrial features of our American life work.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

The new management of the Herald is making an earnest endeavor to get the subscription list of the paper in correct form, and has a bookkeeper employed whose special duty is to keep them straight after the proper corrections have been made in the books. In revising the list we have met with difficulties little known to the average reader and if any error is made in the statement of your account we would only be too glad to remedy it. In taking up the work of others it is of course out of the question that we should know of any special arrangements which may have been entered into by the former managers, but will be only too glad to rectify any and all mistakes of this character if they will but present the matter to us. It is nothing but fair to give us a chance to do the right thing in these matters, as it is but a small thing to ask. In the thousands of small items which form the life of the average newspaper man it is but natural that mistakes will occasionally be made in such matters, unintentional in most of them of course. Also, in the absence of an up-to-date mailing system by which the account of each subscriber is stamped each week on the margin of his paper, naturally the busy reader will overlook the fact that he has become in arrears to the paper, and it being a small item to him it is generally overlooked until his attention is called to it, which we never take pleasure in doing. But as these matters amount to no little in the aggregate forming a paper's list, it is necessary at times to take some method of letting the readers know how they stand on the books. In all such instances we are open to correction if a mistake is made, as the only point with us to get it right and then endeavor to keep it right. It is our purpose to install a practical mailing system in the very near future, when we hope many of these mistakes will be obviated. But in the meantime we would kindly ask our readers to make it a point within the next month or so to drop around to the office and give us a chance to get you right on our books, no matter whether the balance is in your favor or ours.

SANFORD DODGE TO APPEAR IN FAUST.

Read what the Abilene Daily News, March 27, 1910, says of Mr. Sanford Dodge's appearance in that city:

"For some weeks past Manager Saunderson of the Lyceum Theatre has been singing the praises of one Sanford Dodge, who was to appear on the stage of that playhouse. The praise was rich and there was plenty of it. For this reason certain parties were wont to look wise and say 'Press Agent.' But press agent or no press agent, these persons were present when the curtain went up on the first act of Friday night's bill and they were there when it dropped on the last act of Saturday night's bill. Let it be said right here that Mr. Saunderson sung praises in good cause and the parties who hinted press agent can't be found.

As the Gladiator, Mr. Dodge was great but as Mephisto he was superb. I have been fortunate enough to see Broadway favorites appear in the above roles, and I have written about them and placed wreaths on their brows, but when I did these things I had not seen Sanford Dodge. The late Richard Mansfield (may he rest in the peace he deserves) could not, renowned actor that he was, have given a truer portrayal of Shakespeare's immortal Jew, Shylock, in the Merchant of Venice. I have the right to say this because I have seen and studied the work of the greatest performer the world ever knew and I speak as one who knows.

Mention must be made of the excellent supporting company Mr. Dodge has gathered about him, and the excellent stage settings and electrical effects which in Faust were gorgeous."

PORTALES HAS AN EVEN BREAK.

W. T. Wells, a Roswell capitalist, was in the city yesterday, having just returned from a hunting excursion to the breaks in the eastern part of the country, with Geo. Slaughter and others. In conversation with a Herald representative, Mr. Wells said that his city was thoroughly alive to the necessity of getting a railroad from the east through this country and that from his knowledge of the lay of the country in the matter of railroad construction, that "Portales had an even break of securing any road routed in the direction of Roswell and El Paso."

The grim monster death claimed another member of our family circle this week in the person of Bessie, the 16-year-old daughter of Sam D. Lowry. Miss Bessie had been a sufferer for some time past of appendicitis, though the matter of an operation was not considered absolutely essential to her recovery. I had a great deal of trouble from my back. There was a steady, dull ache through my joints and right side and stooping caused sharp twinges. I believe that my work was responsible for the trouble, as I am obliged to sit in a cramped position so much. THE HOUSE FLY A DEADLY PEST

Thousands of People Die Annually as a Result of Disease Spread Broadcast by the Common House Fly.

HOUSE FLY DEADLY.

When all things are taken into consideration, it will be seen that the common housefly is more deadly than the "unloaded" gun or the automobile. He is not always so quick in his deadly effects as some of the other menaces to life and health. But he is on the job eighteen hours a day and seven days of the week in the months when he is at his best and his worst. The weak-minded, careless neighbor who keeps an open garbage can may be the only ally the pest distributor has for blocks, but one ally is enough for him. He will breed by the million and his progeny will literally fill the air.

When the dog days come and the thousands of tons of rotting vegetation and spoiled fruit fill the atmosphere with the odors of decay we moderns begin to appreciate exactly what the fly plague that was sent upon the Egyptians in the days of Moses was like. They hang in masses on the walls of buildings, and gather in loathsome bunches about the filth scattered over the asphalt. Out in the rural districts swarms of them hang in clouds about the barns, outbuildings and milking pens. They drive the livestock in the fields half frantic as soon as the sun is a few hours high. Mixed and mingled with them is their small cousin, the stinging cow fly, that drives the thickest-skinned bovine bellowing to the shelter of the underbrush. Here and there in lonely farmhouses a case or two of typhoid fever makes its appearance. In a few weeks there are a dozen cases within a radius of a few miles.

Bad water and poor sanitation give the disease its start and the fly looks after its quick and sure distribution. So active has the Musca Domestica been in the spreading of this lingering and fatal disease that many scientists have seriously proposed that his name be changed to the more appropriate one of the "typhoid fly." Here and there in all the great cities hundreds of pure milk depots have been established, that the babies of the big towns may have a fair chance for life and health. In the meanwhile the fly, the actual contaminator of a great part of the milk supply, swarms unchecked.

The problem has been too big one to tackle off hand. It requires concerted action through a long term of years in order to accomplish anything. When the fly comes, when the hot days begin, all the diseases of infants begin to get beyond control. The death rate mounts in a long sweeping curve that continues to climb so long as the flies continue to breed unchecked by the frosts of early autumn. The heat is good for the fly and his load of parasites, but the two in combination are bad for the sweltering babies fighting for breath in the heavy air of the superheated tenements. Up from the blistering, festering street comes Musca Domestica laden with the seeds of infantile disease, and he hovers for an instant over the bottle of precious milk. He collides in midair with another of his brethren and the two fall gracefully into the fluid. They are fished out a few moments later, but they have had time to thoroughly infect every drop of the entire vessel.

FLY A DEADLY MENACE.
Thus does Musca Domestica play havoc with the health and the lives of the population of town and country. From July until late September the plague of flies, as venomous and deadly as the fly plague of Holy Writ hovers over the nation. The fear of the singing tail of the rattler and the dread of the whining song of the mosquito have been instilled into us, but as yet we have not learned to recognize the menace in the buzz of the winged pest of the street, the house and the stable. In every big city of the country they slay scores of people annually through their dropping the seeds of malignant and malarial fevers.

In the places where filth is the rule and not the exception scores of men, women and children become the victims of the most loathsome and dreaded of eye diseases, ophthalmia.

It is to be remembered that wherever a fly gets one of his six feet he leaves a trail of germ life. The specks that mark his presence contain all the villainess of the germ laden sewers whence he has sucked his latest meal. This is the visitor we entertain in our homes during the summer months. This is the "harmless scavenger" that we allow to crawl over the food supply of the household, to trail through the butter, to flutter into the cream jar, to leave the specked evidence of his presence on meat and fruit and fish. Musca Domestica, the "manure fly," the "typhoid fly," comes from stables, cow barns, pig sties, heaps of rotting vegetables, dead animals, old mattresses and piles of decaying straw. He has been called the most formidable of all the enemies of the human race.—St. Louis Republic.

TILLAGE VERSUS IRRIGATION.

The lavish use of water is the direct cause of many serious irrigation difficulties. In fact, some of the most profitable and highly developed irrigation farming in this country owes its existence and prosperity to a scarcity of water supply. So long as a farmer has an abundance of water he almost invariably yields to the temptation to use it freely, even though he gets no increase in returns as a result. Where crop production is dependent on rainfall and particularly when the rainfall is barely sufficient, farmers soon learn the value of careful and thorough tillage both in preparing the land for a crop and later whenever intertillage is possible.

But the irrigation farmer with an adequate water supply is slow to appreciate the fact that thorough tillage methods abundantly repay their cost. In our new regions particularly the tendency to neglect tillage is pronounced. Weeds are usually not abundant, and one of the most obvious reasons for good tillage is lacking. The fact remains however that in irrigation farming good tillage pays whether the water supply is abundant or scanty. Excessive irrigation leaches the soil or fills it with water to the exclusion of air and consequently interferes with the activities of the micro-organisms upon which crop plants depend for their food supply.

Good tillage produces opposite results. A wet soil remains cold, while a well-tilled soil warms up quickly and favors plant growth. It is not sufficient to keep down weeds by cultivation. With intertilled crops cultivation should follow every irrigation and the land should be irrigated no more frequently than is absolutely necessary. This much is true even with abundant irrigation water. When the water is scanty there is the added advantage that it can be made vastly more effective if supplemented by tillage.

As a people we have much to learn in the way of water economy. With proper use the irrigation supply of the great majority of our irrigation districts could be used for much larger areas than it covers at present. A more judicious use of the supply would also in many cases result in larger yields to the acre and would permit the use of large areas now kept too wet for crop production through the excessive use of water on adjacent land. Of course no one who has a water right will part with any of it without a big compensation and this may be done in time but as it is we have splashed all together too much and have wasted our water in riotous irrigation.

THE CHANGES OF CLIMATE

For forty years or more the people of the west have been hearing theories about the climate changing in one way or another until everybody is muddled on the subject. The most of us know quite as little about it as ten decades ago and are quite uncertain as to a whole lot of things. We know in a general way that climate does change—that after almost countless years areas once watered become arid and the reverse, but this change is inconceivably slow. Man has a recorded history running back some ten thousand years. The irrigation ditches in the valley of the Nile along the Euphrates and in our own arid west tell the story of a climate that has changed, if at all, so little that the same methods of farming apply today as were necessary long before Abraham came out to the west from Ur of the Chaldees. Since men bore testimony on rock tablet and written scroll the lands where history has been written have had their heat and cold, their rainfall and drought, even as we find them today.

Climate changes in its main character, but so slowly that human history is too short a measuring rod with which to estimate the change. We are only beginning to appreciate the world-wide problem that the term climate presents. We know a few of the factors, such as distance from the ocean, height above sea level, latitude, mountains and a few more. These are some of the raw material out of which climate is made. And with these as a sort of warp, the world-interchange of winds interweaves the woof of a climate pattern that is moist or dry, hot or cold, and of practically even quantity, measured over a long period of years.

These winds that sweep year in and year out from the equator to the poles and vice-versa, flowing over and around obstructions such as mountain ranges, do not alter their general course. On them depends the rainfall of the lands they cross and our weather records, which are grown long enough to offer some valuable data show that the average rainfall for any place varies but little with the passing years. So then, broadly speaking, climate does not change unless some one of its great causative factors changes. If the Rockies were leveled or a mountain wall reared itself across the plains of Canada or if the land sank until the gulf washed the southern border of Colorado—any of these would result in a sharp, lasting change of climate.

Of these temporary alternations of wet and dry seasons is the most marked as we know no meteorologist tried to explain this the moisture belt. monsoons over the temperate zone, be explained only as a factor in the world-wide phenomenon of the atmosphere not influenced by man. We have all seen this, as where a locusts the course of a known certain which seem to have their share of and of others that been created on when it came to showers. All these can observe, but when explain them we are at seven.

Saturday the friends and

A more appropriate souvenir could not have been dispensed for the occasion and everyone was quite willing to take the flower and vote Mr. Austin their thanks for his thoughtfulness.

W. G. Standridge and family leave this week to seek a new home in Texas, their point of destination being Wichita Falls. In doing this, it was necessary that Mr. Standridge sever his connection with the newly elected city council of which he was a member and had been given the responsible position of city treasurer, much to the regret of the other members of the board and his many friends who had elected him to the position. Mr. Standridge is a good clean man and Portales can ill afford to give up such type of citizenship. The Herald wishes him prosperity in his new field of endeavor.

residence districts that will be easy of access to children daily, the condemnation of disease-breeding places, the rigid enforcement of the laws of cleanliness in alleys, back yards and streets are matters that in my opinion will raise the moral tone of the community, increase the happiness and good health of the citizens, and assist in creating a moral and clean town.—C. E. Worth.

Knocking and knockers to the rear, all to unite in some general plan of development and to forget that there is really but one class of people here, and they are boosters will do wonders for Portales within the next year.—Coe Howard.

The co-operation of the citizenship of Portales is demanded in the advancement and development of the city's interests.—A. A. Seay.

Since the election is over we should have no strife and we should, each and every one, unitedly, pull for the greater interests of Portales and country tributary thereto. Prospects were never better for any town in Eastern N. M. United interests will mean much to our town and country.—A. T. Monroe.

I consider the prospects for a better and greater Portales better than they have ever been before. And, personally, am well satisfied with the outlook.—G. W. Williamson.

My opinion is that Portales will make a better showing in the next twelve months than it has in the last ten years, and it hasn't been a back number during that time.—S. A. Morrison.

Believing that no town can prosper and acquire that station in commercial and educational existence to which it is entitled without the united efforts of all her citizens, it is the duty of each and all to work in harmony for everything that benefits our town and surrounding country.—G. L. Reese.

Portales, in matter of development, and by comparison, has been too long in the critical period of adolescence. If it is to put away childish things and become grown; our people must get or beget a spirit of civic pride and righteousness and they must become so imbued with that spirit that inaction, jealousy, envy, self-serving, all unrighteousness, will be forgotten. In the two several undertakings now pending, to-wit: the municipal improvements and the irrigation proposition the "die" is cast and it is "up" to our people to make, through and by means of them, a glorious success or a disastrous failure. I have both faith and hope that we will not fail. It is regrettable that the community may have recently given an exemplification of the ancient fable of the dog and the bone, but it appears now that the eminence of disaster or the imgrudence of foolishness, has had its proper reaction and that the community is restored to a normal sanity, alerted and quickened by the experience. I believe that now the community is resolved to continue in good works which course alone will enable the individuals thereof to reap a reasonable and well earned harvest from their long, and sometimes toilsome, sowing and tending.—W. E. Lindsey.

It is, as the immortal Jefferson once said, "a part of the American character to consider nothing as impossible"—we are required to invent and execute; to find means within ourselves, not to lean on others. In order for this harmonious spirit to become the potent creative force of bigger and better Portales, for it to achieve even a small part of its possibilities for those interested, we must start with ourselves. We must assume a positive and not a negative attitude. It is the moral and business coward who has no faith in things as they are, whose faith doesn't catch fire when he looks at the opportunities before us as a people. The average, normal citizen of Portales is one who cannot afford to go crawfish-like in face of her opportunities, only progressing as fast as he can go backwards! We can be a people of memories, some of them bitter, perchance, yet we can be a united force with a vision of what we may reasonably expect to accomplish.

BEN SMITH APPOINTED ALDERMAN AND TREASURER.

Ben Smith was appointed alderman and city treasurer to fill the vacant chair made by the resignation of W. G. Standridge, who leaves the city this week. As far as the Herald is concerned the appointment of Mr. Smith to this trust is highly satisfactory and we believe meets with the approval of the citizenship at large.
