To Our Patrons:

We wish to thank you for the very liberal patronage that we have received from you in the past and for the mutual confidence that has existed between us up to the present time. But on account of the scarcity of money we are compelled to adopt a new method of doing business, which we propose to make equally beneficial to cur customers and to ourselves. This will enable us to sell you goods cheaper, and thereby save you money, Thanking you for past favors we solicit a continu ance of the same in the future.

Respectfully,

Occasionally farm animals are affected by rables, and in nearly all such cases the trouble is traceable to some rabid dog that has bitten the animals. Doubtless it would be impossible in the rural districts to enforce the muzzling of all canines. Perhaps it is not as necessary in the country as in the city. But in the cities at least the effect of muzzling has been very good, as well in the United States as in Europe. It is interesting to note the conflict over this ordinance in England. Several hundred cases of rables each year led the English authorities to look into the matter. They found evidences to prove that the disease was caused largely by rabid dogs biting other dogs and animals. Muzzling of all dogs was reported to be the only means of preventing the spread of the disease. Laws were passed making muzzling compulsory. The number of cases of rables in 1889 was 312. The law went into effect at the end of that year. In 1890 the number of cases had decreased to 129; the next year they fell to 79 and in 1892 decreased still further to 38. But the opposition to muzzling was so determined that the practice was discontinued. The result was annual sessions to consider matters of a steady increase of the disease during the following years. In 1893 there the sessions its interests will be lookwere 93 cases; in 1894, 248 cases; 1895, ed after by an executive committee, 672 cases. At this point the public which is also a committee on legislaalarm had become so great that muzzling was again enforced. The number of cases in 1896 were 438; in From November, 1899, to March 30, 1900, no case of rables was reported the disease had been exterminated in petitor of the hay crop. England. Impure Milk and Disease.

Bureau of Animal Industry we take the following: Frequently cow's milk is the only nourishment taken by infants and invalids, and it is these who are least able to withstand the ill efis increasing of rearing children on substitutes for mother's milk, and especially on cow's milk. When pure the latter has no superior for this purpose, particularly if its composition has been slightly altered to more nearly resemble human milk. Vital statistics show that about one-third of all deaths are of infants, and that a very large percentage of these die from diseases of the digestive tract. an improvement in the last thirty These diseases are said to be due principally to impure food. It is, therefore, reasonable to assert that the mortality of infants has a close now, the refining process being most relationship to the wholesomeness of marked in this breed. A communication from the Minne sots station says: Owing to the cold, wet season, the corn crop in Minnesota and surrounding states is ripening so late that a very serious shortage is threatened in home-grown seed for next year's planting. The experience of last year should be taken as a valuable lesson, and every bushel of the best ears of the best yielding varieties which ripen this season should be selected, thoroughly dried and carefully stored for use or sale for planting. The ears of first quality should be saved to grow in hills, or thinly in drills to produce grain; and those of second quality should be saved to plant thickly in drills for fodder or silage. There is always a good market for the second quality of Minnesota dent varieties to plant thickly for fodder corn, though at a less price than for corn suitable to grow for

There is a growing appreciation of the small varieties of northern dent corn to plant thickly for fodder. It is useful for wintering horses and sheep as well as for cattle. It is very easily grown, cleans the land of weeds for grain crops, and yields enormous quantities of food per acre. When grown thickly, corn does not bear ears, but the substance of the grain is largely distributed throughout the stems and leaves. It is much more valuable per ton as dry fodder or as ensilage than stover from which ears 1897, 151; in 1898, 17, and in 1899, 9. have been husked, or than fodder corn grown from the seed of the larger varieties. Seed corn for field grain should be taken southward rather than northward. Bringing the larger yielding varieties northward and adapting them to the new conditions should be left mainly to men who have experience in corn breeding. The corn belt has been and is now being nushed northward by the introduction and acclimating of varieties and especially by carefully breeding varieties already introduced. Corn breeders should use mostly those varieties already adapted to their locality. This good work should be continued, but in a conservative way, by those who are prepared for the work.

Change in Shire Type.

Now, as regards Shire horses. I think there has been quite as great years as in Clydesdales. The type of Shires that won at London show twenty years ago would have no chance by the organization of the Shire Horse Society and its annual shows, accompanied by veterinary inspection, but mere handful of progressive breeders who, to tell the truth, took their cue from the Scotch breeders and have been endeavoring all these years to remedy the defective limbs and feet and faulty hock action of the massive English horses. The average Shire breeder still maintains with remarksble persistency that the more bone and hair he can produce the better the animal, but this claim is by no means confirmed either by the show rings or the market, unless the animal possesses considerable quality and activity. It is frequently found that the extremely strong-boned, heavy-legged herse, whether Clyde or Shire, has a distinct element of softness in his composition, is phlegmatic in temperament and is neither so active nor so enduring as the horse with less hair and fine skin. How often have we seen big, rough horses that when three years old looked like sor, and when six looked like sixteen, if they happened to be alive. Such horses never have been and never can be popular in the United States -- Alex inder Galbraith.

> As the sultan is very fond of variety and will rarely consent to witness the same performance twice it is necessary to provide constant change. 'To do this one of the Stravolos is always traveling through the European capitals at the expense of his patron seeking novelties.

All of the sultan's actors must wear a certain uniform. They have a military organization. Angelo is a lieutenant; the violinist, Luigi, is a captain; the tenor, Nicola, is a general. The performances take place at no fixed sultan that he would like to see a show. Thus the company, like soldiers, must always be ready to march

Frequently the director of the orchestra, Aranda Pasha, will be noti fled in the middle of the night that he must come to the palace as quickly as possible. He learns on arriving that his majesty desires to hear "Un Ballo in Maschera," or some other opera. As the sultan's wish is a command, the opera begins within half an
