A bulletin just issued by the census bureau defining the 330 census districts, settles definitely that New Mexico shall comprise one district to be in charge of one district to be in charge of one supervisor to be appointed by the president. While the population of this district in 1890 was only 195,310, it will be one of the most populous districts in this census, as the average population of the districts is only about 220,000, and New Mexico will, next year, show a population of 400,000 and over. CONTEST NOTICE.

An Old Story, But It's True

There is but one place where the very best is always to be found; there is but one house that buys in car load lots; but one house that takes the cash discount on all goods bought; but one institution that owns its course, about furniture stores.

Ne do, really, carry the only complete line of all new furniture to be found in Portales.

True, we don't carry any second-hand goods, nor can we take old furniture in part payment for new goods, but we can sell you the new goods for just about the same price you would pay to second-hand dealers as the difference between the old and the new goods. We can save you money on furniture because we can buy it cheaper and carry it cheaper than small dealers. We want you to call whether you buy or not.

Do That Job of Painting, Do it Now

Why Hughes' Crescent Cottage Paint is Superior to all Others. It is a well established fact that of all known white pigments, pure carbonate of lead has the greatest body, or covering properties. It has been shown by actual experiment, that lead, if used alone, and subjected to exposure for any length of time will, from chemical action, become dry and chalky so that it may easily be rubbed off. Oxide of zinc forms a hard and durable coating, that is not affected by exposure in the same manner as lead, therefore a combination of the two form the most desirable and best known base for house paints. Hughes' Crescent Cottage paint is made from this formula and thinned with pure linseed oil with sufficient Japan dryer and standard coloring to meet requirements

"And whatever wheels you Crawling Stone ranchers may have in your heads on the subject of irrigation," returned McCloud, evenly, "I have no lack of esteem personally, Mr. Dun-ning, for you. I brought 100."

"Do you want to take charge here? I'm frank, sir; you understand this game and I don't."

"Suppose we look the situation over; meantime, all our supplies have to be brought across from the Y. What should you think, Mr. Dunning, of puting all the teams you can at that end

"Every man that can be spared from the river shall go at it. Come over here and look at our work and judge for yourself."

They rode to where the forces as sembled by Lance were throwing up the mattress that was about to be embankments and riprapping. There was hurried running to and fro, a vislent dragging about of willows, and a good deal of shouting. Dunning, with some excitement, watched McCloud's face to note the effect of the activity on him, but Me-Cloud's expression, naturally reserved, reflected nothing of his views on the subject. Dunning waved his hand at the lively scene. "They've been at it all night. How many would you take away, sir?"

"You might take them all away, as far as the river is concerned," said

"They are not doing anything, are they, but running around in a circle? And those fellows over there might as well be making mud pies as riprapping at that point. What we need there is a mattress and sandbagsand plenty of them. Bill," directed McCloud in an even tone of business as he turned to Dancing, "see how quick you can get your gangs over here with what sacks they can carry and walk fast. If you will put your won't last a great while the way the why my leghorns are eating their river is getting under it now." Dan-feathers off." cing wheeled like an elephant on his bronco and clattered away through the his surprise, started his men back for chicken-yard. "I want you to see | "Have you diagnosed the case?"

the wagons, and McCloud, dismounting, walked with him to the water's edge to plan the fight for what was left of the strip in front of the alfalfa fields. When Whispering Smith got back to the house he was in good humor. He joined Dicksie and Marion in the dining room, where they were drinking coffee. Afterward Dickste ordered horses saddled and the three rode to the river. Up and down the bank as far as they could see in the misty rain, men were moving slowly about -more men, it seemed to Dicksie, than she had ever seen together in her life. The confusion and the noise had disappeared. No one appeared to hurry, but every one had something to do, and, from the gange who with sledges were sinking "dead-men" among the trees to hold the cables of sunk, and the Japs who were diligently preparing to float and load it, to the men that were filling and wheeling the sandbags, no one appeared excited. McCloud joined the visitors for a few moments, and then went back to where Dancing and his men on lifelines were guiding the mattress to its resting place. In spite of the gloom of the rain, which Whispering Smith said was breaking, Dicksie rode back to the house in much better spirits with her two guests; and when they came from luncheon the sun, as Smith had predicted, was shining. "Oh, come out!" cried Dicksie, at the door. Marion had a letter to write and went upstairs, but Whispering Smith followed Dicksie. "Does everything you say come true?" she demanded as she stood in the sunshine. |

She was demure with light-heartedness and he looked at her approvingly. "I hope nothing I may say ever will come true unless it makes you happy," he answered, lightly, "It would be a shame if it did anything else."

She pointed two accusing fingers at him. "Do you know what you prommen on horses, Mr. Dunning, they can ised last night? You have forgotten help like everything. That bank already! You said you would tell me

"Let me talk with them." "Just what I should like, Come on!" mud. Lance Dunning, recovering from said Dicksie, leading the way to the

When the two reached the chicken house Dicksie examined the nest where she was setting the bantam hen. "This miserable hen will not set," she exclaimed in despair. "See here, Mr. Smith, she has left her nest again and is scratching around on the ground. Isn't it a shame? I've tied a cord around her leg so she couldn't run away, and she is hobbling around like a scrub pony."

"Perhaps the eggs are too warm," suggested her companion. "I have had great success in cases like this with powdered ice not using too much, of course; just shave the ice gently and rub it over the eggs one at a time; it will often result in refreshing the attention of the hen."

Dicksie looked grave. "Aren't you ashamed to make fun of me?" Whispering Smith seemed taken sback. "It is really serious business?" "Of course," Dicksie Ordered Horses Saddled and Rode to the River.

"Very good. Let me watch this hen for a few minutes and diagnose her. You go on to your other chickens. I'll stay here and think."

Dicksie went down through the yards. When she came back, Whispering Smith was sitting on a cracker box watching the bantam. The chicken was making desperate efforts to get off Dicksie's cord and join its companions in the runway. Smith was eying the bantam critically when Dicksie rejoined him. "Do you usualty," he asked, looking suddenly up, "have success in setting roosters?" "Now you are having fun with me

"No, by heaven! I am not."

"I have, and I have diagnosed it as case of mistaken identity."

"And misapplied energy, Miss Dicksie, you have tied up the wrong bird. This is not a bantam hen at all; this is a bantam rooster. Now that is my judgment. Compare him with the others. Notice how much darker his plumage is-it's the rooster," declared Whispering Smith, wiping the perplexity from his brow. "Don't feel bad, not at all. Cut him loose, Miss Dicksie-don't hesitate; do it on my responsibility. Now let's look at the

"Behaving like a lamb. It hasn't fallen much, but the pressure seems to be off the bank, if you know what that means?"

"You must be a magician! Things changed the minute you came!" "The last doctor usually gets credit for the cure, you know." "Oh, I know all about that. Don't you want to freshen up? Should you mind coming right to my room? Marion is in hers," explained Dicksie, "and I am never sure of Cousin Lance'she has so many boots."
