Reds Forcing France Into War

WALKOUT FOR SYMPATHY OF SPAIN CALLED

Union Leaders Trying To End 'Hands Off' Policy in Revolt

PARIS, Sept. 7 (AP)—The principal airplane and automobile factories in the Paris area were shut down today by a communist call to 300,000 workers to strike for an hour to compel France to support the Spanish government in its civil war.

BATTLE IN STREETS OF SAN SEBASTIAN

Anarchist and socialist defenders of San Sebastian, with rebel columns almost at the city's gates, fought in the streets today, the anarchists seeking to fire the city.

BASQUE SEEK TO SURRENDER CITY

HENDAYE, France, Sept. 7 (AP)—Basque nationalists among the government forces at San Sebastian today were reported seeking to surrender the city to rebels, while communists and anarchists declared they would fight to the death.

France Moving To Disarmament In New Effort

PARIS, Sept. 7 (AP)—France moved today toward a new world disarmament effort, the cabinet drafting a national defense bill to provide an appropriation in 1937 of 4,200,000,000 francs to answer Germany's doubling of the universal conscription term and the ministers announcing that they would take the lead at the League of Nations meeting at Geneva this fall for a general convention on "limitation and controlled reduction of armaments."

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Keough of Dallas, and Miss Helen Keough of San Antonio, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Keough.

31 Scouts and Leaders Will Visit Centennial

Thirty-one scouts and leaders from Cisco today were expected to leave here early tomorrow morning for Dallas and Fort Worth to visit the Texas centennial and frontier centennial exhibitions on the American Express tour.

U. S. Drops Open Planes to Aid Comfort

Transparent covers like the one above provide both warmth and good vision in new fighting planes purchased by the United States. The cumbersome suits (below) worn in open cockpits handicap operation and do not ward off freezing when the temperature drops below 10 degrees above zero.

Bedford Transfers Students to Cisco

Addition of the Bedford district by group transfer today brought the total number of outlying districts transferring all pupils to the Cisco school system this summer to five, and the total number of districts transferring pupils here for any purpose to 10, it was announced by Superintendent R. N. Cluck, leaving for a belated vacation in Osage.

Additions for all purposes this summer included Bedford, Friendship, Reich, Shady Grove, and Central. Other districts which already were transferring all pupils here are Dothan and Sandy, Cottonwood, Bluff Branch, and Pleasant Hill send pupils here for high school purposes only.

Cluck said today that he expected an enrollment of between 1,500 and 1,600 pupils from the 1,700 scholastics next week.

The Cisco district will receive all state and county apportionments as well as all local revenues from districts which transfer all pupils here. In return the pupils will receive a nine-months school term in a Class A school system affiliated with the state department of education, transportation to the Cisco school, and more adequate equipment, and individual attention.

Joe Shackelford of Lubbock, visited his family over the week-end.

Enrollment For High School Due To Open Tuesday

Enrollment in Cisco high school will begin tomorrow morning when seniors report for registration, according to an announcement from Principal O. L. Stamey.

Juniors will register Wednesday, sophomores Thursday, and freshmen Friday.

Principal Stamey said that registration in the high school this week is not compulsory but urged all local students to enroll.

Grade school pupils will report Monday to the schools they attended last year. Pupils from other schools were asked to bring report and book cards.

Ciscoans Attend Funeral in Albany

Mrs. F. B. Cloud, of Albany, sister of the late J. M. Rockwell, died Saturday night and was buried this morning in Albany. Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Harrell attended the funeral.

'Will for Peace' Is Urged by Alf Landon

WICHITA, Kan., Sept. 7 (AP)—A "strong will for peace" was urged by Governor Alf Landon today as the nation's "main reliance in staying out of war." He said, "We can do much by intelligent legislation to lessen the danger of being drawn into war."

WORK CREWS ARE CLEARING AWAY WRECK

Trains Moving Along Main Line of T.-P. After Smashup

Two wrecking crews today were busy clearing away and removing the tangled mass of broken and twisted box cars, which resulted from the wreck of the Texas and Pacific freight No. 54, eastbound California fruit special, three miles west of Cisco shortly after noon Saturday.

The wreck, caused by a broken wheel on one of the cars, piled up 17 cars, most of them refrigerator cars containing oranges and grapes. One was a tank car.

The wreck tied up traffic on the main line until 5:15 Sunday morning when two wrecking crews completed turning the wrecked cars out of the way and relaying the rails so that a passenger train could pass.

Fire Threatens Entire Town; Six Buildings Burn

CUSHING, Okla., Sept. 7 (AP)—Six buildings were destroyed and the entire town endangered by fire today, the flames trapping Mrs. Ida Briley and her son, Josh Briley, in a hotel, forcing them to jump from the second story. The woman is suffering a back injury. The hotel, three restaurants and two bakeries were burned.

Retopping Bankhead Highway Under Way

PUTNAM, Sept. 7.—The Texas highway department has a large force of men and machinery at work retopping the Bankhead highway from Baird east. The contract was let some days ago and the work commenced this week and will be finished in about ten days. They are making a cushion by using a coarse gravel, spreading it about one-half inch after the road has been spread over with asphalt, and then the gravel is spread and rolled until it takes up all of the asphalt and leaves a nice smooth surface. This work was greatly needed as the road hasn't had anything done in the way of surfacing since 1927, or about nine years.

Repass to Deliver Keynote Address

FORT WORTH, Sept. 7 (AP)—The executive committee of the Texas democrats today announced that W. C. Repass of Houston had been chosen temporary chairman of the state convention and would deliver the keynote address.

Party Harmony Hinges Upon Child Labor Act

FORT WORTH, Sept. 7 (AP)—Fears were expressed here today as members of the state democratic executive committee met to canvass returns of the run-off primary that party harmony would be ruffled tomorrow in the state convention over a fight on the question of endorsing the child labor amendment.

Labor Day Here Quiet Affair With No Accidents

Cisco apparently had settled down to a quiet Labor Day celebration this afternoon, with no accidents reported at Graham's sanitarium. The police department said shortly after noon that it had had no reports of highway accidents and that no one had been arrested for either reckless driving or drunkenness. Most of the city's business houses including the First National Bank, remained open today, although a few firms took holiday. The chamber of commerce closed at noon. It was estimated last week that the nation's death toll from highway accidents for the Labor Day weekend probably would exceed 300.

UNIONISM WAR ADVICE GIVEN

Opinions of Nominees Clash Sharply

(By Associated Press) Counsel to organized labor in the war over industrial unionism came from President Roosevelt and Governor Landon, republican nominee, in addresses today. Landon expressed the hope that the breach between William Green, the American Federation head, and John Lewis, leader of 10 unions from the federation fold, be healed, saying: To be really effective the federation must be united. President Roosevelt said the industrial employment was proceeding rapidly and that government spending is responsible for keeping industry going. Frank Knox, the republican vice presidential nominee, said administration passed laws ostensibly in the interest of labor would mean that labor would be under the iron hand of the government.

Hurricane Reported Near Puerto Rico

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 7 (AP)—The weather bureau warned today that there are indications of a tropical disturbance off Puerto Rico and said: "Probably moving west northward, attended by gales over a small area. Caution advised vessels in path."

Ab Jenkins Breaks Two Speed Records

BOONEVILLE FLATS, Utah, Sept. 7 (AP)—Ab Jenkins broke two records with his "Mormon Meteor" here today, establishing 164.47 miles an hour for 500 kilometers, and 159.03 for 500 miles. He broke the record of George Eyston of London.

SCHOOL SUPERVISOR

PUTNAM, Sept. 7.—Miss Mary Yeager has been notified that she had been elected as supervisor of the Smith county schools for next year. She will resign her position in the Abilene schools and take charge of the new work immediately. She will supervise 35 rural schools in Smith county and will be located at Tyler.

BILL M'MAHON IS ELIMINATED BY FAIRCLOTH

17-Hole Match Today To Decide Winner Of Cisco Title

Houston Cole of Ranger and James Dixon of Abilene this afternoon were playing an 18-hole match to determine the championship of the 1936 invitation tournament of the Cisco Country club.

Cole advanced to the finals with victories over O. V. Cunningham, H. G. Agnew and James Phillips, while Dixon defeated Fred Bedford, J. T. Hammett and D. A. Harkrider.

Bill McMahon, defending champion, lost out in the first round Sunday morning. He succumbed to Gid Faircloth of Ranger, 4 and 2. McMahon previously won the long driving contest.

Second Flight

In the second flight Elmer Norris was playing H. S. Foy for the championship. O. T. Jarvis is meeting L. V. Simmonds in the finals of the third flight. F. B. Altman was to play either A. D. Starling or Lee Smith in the fourth finals, the latter match not having been completed at noon. Claude Wilson and R. L. Gannaway were playing fifth flight finals.

First round results in the first flight were:

Faircloth defeated McMahon, 4-2; James Phillips defeated Sam Brimberry, 1 up; Houston Cole defeated O. V. Cunningham, 7-6; H. G. Agnew defeated H. H. Vaughn, 1 up; D. A. Harkrider defeated Nick Nicholson (medalist), 1 up; W. A. (Jack) Phippen defeated Art McKinney, 3-1; J. T. Hammett defeated R. L. Thornton, 5-3; James Dixon defeated Fred Bedford, 3-2.

Second Round Results

Phillips defeated Faircloth, 5-4; Cole defeated Agnew, 1 up, 20 holes; Harkrider defeated Phippen, 4-3; Dixon defeated Hammett, 2-1.

Dr. Ball Speaker Upon Program At Medical Session

EASTLAND, Sept. 7.—Dr. D. Ball of Cisco, will lead a discussion at the fall meeting of the Northwest Texas Medical association here Tuesday, it was announced today by Dr. J. H. Caton, a member of the Eastland county committee on arrangements.

The arrangements committee, also composed of Dr. F. E. Clark of Cisco and Dr. Harry A. Logsdon of Ranger, expects an attendance of 100 from the 19 counties which form the district.

Morning speakers and their subjects will be as follows: Dr. L. H. Reeves of Fort Worth, "The Visiting Lecturers on Obstetrics and the Care of Children;" State Health Officer John W. Brown of Austin, "What the Country Health Unit Is and Its Relation to the State and County Society;" and Dr. H. R. Dudgeon of Waco, president of the State Medical society, "What We Can and Must Do to Avoid Socialized Medicine."

In the afternoon, Dr. R. L. Nelson of Wichita Falls, will discuss "Pyuria in Children;" Dr. A. L. Borchardt of Vernon, "Cervical Discharges and Their Treatment;" Dr. Charles H. Harris of Ft. Worth, "The Treatment of Acute Craniocerebral Injuries;" Dr. A. J. Schwenkenberg of Dallas, "Complications and Sequelae of Head Injuries;" Dr. William Rosenblatt of Wichita Falls, "Hypoglycemia;" and Dr. Tom B. Bond of Ft. Worth, "The Saturation Method of High Voltage Roentgen Therapy."

Discussions will be led by Dr. D. Bell of Cisco, Dr. Poe Lovett of Olney and Dr. Logsdon of Ranger.

People are receiving the fruit of a practical demonstration of the science and mechanics of railroad wreck clearing, demonstration is on a scale of considerable magnitude. The wreckage of 17 freight cars, most of them fruit cars, being gradually cleared by two wrecking crews with as many large machines pick up the cars bodily, setting them on trucks placed upon the derailed track or loading platforms on other cars for off is a source of wonder to the throngs who gather the scene. The methods to handle the wreckage are singly interesting to people of a flair for engineering and mechanics, and most of us have.

THE WORLD WITH A FENCE

A New Novel by Marian Sims

CHAPTER 29
INTIMATE MEAL

Carol took off her hat and took a glass of water. "I'm all through. Let's take a rest and enjoy it."

"I'll bring a steak over, and see how well you do that."

He ate ravenously, hardly stopping to talk. When they had cleared the table to make room for the Camembert and liqueurs, he gave a sigh of pleasure. The peace in his soul had deepened with the appeasement of an unaccustomed physical hunger.

"Tell me about your family," he begged. "I have an idea they're a swell lot."

"They are." She told him eagerly of Pat's talents and wit; of Jill's serenity and beauty; of Milly's sweetness and courage. And finally of Evan, who had been everything.

Blake's eyes were thoughtful. "I can't imagine anything better than a family like that. I was an only child, and my parents are dead."

He added abruptly: "I wish some of your family would come to visit you, so I could meet 'em."

"They probably will, when it's cooler. I wouldn't wish an apartment on them in this heat."

The thought occurred to both of them that he could hardly make the acquaintance of her family if the family did come. You couldn't explain this sort of friendship, nor could you explain away Irma. And in the fall they were thinking, Irma would be back—to replenish her wardrobe for Florida.

She pushed her chair back. Let's struggle. "That's a regular egg argument, and it's too thick about it." He got up and went to the bookshelves. "I look course not. Why should I?"

"I know. Looking at people's eyes is sort of like looking at some of my friends' eyes. In the end they compromised, and she washed them while he dried them and put them away. Then they came back and sat down and had another liqueur."

"Read the paper a while," Carol ordered. "There's a letter here from Jill and I want to see what's in it."

"Why on earth didn't you say so? The dinner could surely have waited that long."

"It didn't matter."

She wondered afterwards, if she could have been psychic about the letter. If she could have postponed it deliberately, in order to hold as long as possible an hour of contentment.

Jill detailed the family news first, conscientiously.

And finally: "I don't suppose, after our talk Christmas, that you'll be surprised at this. Don and I are going to be married. Not till spring, but I wanted you to know it as soon as I'd made up my mind."

She dropped the letter and stared straight in front of her. Don and Jill, who was nothing but a baby, was going to marry Don? A Don who, just a year ago, had been shaken and desolate because he couldn't marry her?

Blake abandoned the pretense of reading. "What is it, Carol?" There was concern in his quiet voice.

"Jill's going to be married. . . . She tried to laugh, but the laugh caught in her throat. "I knew it was coming, but I hoped it wouldn't happen quite yet."

"Why?" He was looking steadily at her, wondering, perhaps, why she didn't react as most women did to the news of an imminent wedding.

"Because she seems such a child. Of course she's twenty-two. . . . Blake, she remembered suddenly, had been twenty-two when he married Irma.

He said expressionlessly: "That's pretty young; but not too young, I guess—for a girl. . . ."

"She isn't really too young," Carol admitted honestly. "And she always knows exactly what she wants and goes after it. She'll be happy, I think."

"Then it sounds like good news to me."

"It is—for Jill." She met his look and confessed: "My regret's entirely selfish. As long as she and Pat were at home my absence didn't make such a gap. Now Milly will be more alone."

His mouth twisted. "You've got a conscience, like I have—God help us both!"

He laid his hand on hers and she noticed for the first time how good his hands were: thin and straight; with broad palms and long sensitive fingers. She turned her own hand and gripped his.

"Well, he probably won't. We'll have to help ourselves—if we can."

He stood up and pulled her to her feet. "Come on and let's drive a while; it'll cool us off. Don't bother with a hat." He shrugged into his coat and went to open the door for her. She found the key and handed it to him.

"Put this in your pocket. I don't want to carry a bag."

He took the key and followed her with unsmiling eyes as she stepped past him into the hall. The thought pricked his mind that she ought not to be leading this lone wolf existence; she ought to be the one who was marrying and not her kid sister.

And in the same instant he knew that he had no business being so glad she wasn't.

They drove for an hour, and let the warm wind brush their faces and ruffle their hair. When they had stopped again at the Sherwood she made herself look at him and smile. He sat still, his face a blur in the dark.

"Don't bother to come in with me. It's been nicer than I can tell you."

He stirred. "It's been the best evening I've ever had," he said soberly, and gathered himself together. "Oh, here's your key. . . ."

He held it out carefully, and she took it without touching his fingers. The car moved reluctantly away in the night.

"And that," she said finally, under her breath, "will have to be all of that."

But the next morning, when Blake said in his usual pleasant voice: "There's a new man's tailoring shop opening next month—very swank," she knew she had been a conceited, romantic fool. There was no trace of self-consciousness in his voice or his manner. (Copyright, 1936, by Marian Sims)

Irma's return, tomorrow, places Blake in the familiar straight-jacket.

Eastland Delegates Off For Convention

EASTLAND, Sept. 7.—Eastland county delegates to the state democratic convention to be held in Fort Worth, will leave today for the convention city.

Over three hundred delegates to the state and district conventions were selected at the county democratic convention in Eastland.

The convention committee on resolutions went on stand as favoring the Moffett amendment to the state constitution, proposing to limit any one county from having more than seven state representatives.

Chapter 29
INTIMATE MEAL

Blake had found two glasses when Carol took off her hat. "I'm all through. Let's take out and enjoy it."

Blake sat on the couch and drank the electric fan whirred busily, meeting an evening breeze that came through the windows.

Blake said lazily: "Now that you've even pretended to work, I ought to put on my coat."

"No!" She rested her head on the couch and closed her eyes.

"Because it's the gesture, I suppose."

"I hate gestures, because they're not well—gestures."

"I do some of 'em," he insisted. "I do oil the machinery. I do the effect's disintegration. I do it's the disintegration making us slough them."

"That's a regular egg argument, and it's too thick about it." He got up and went to the bookshelves.

"If I look at course not. Why should I?"

"I don't know. Looking at people's minds is sort of like looking at some of my friends' when they married, just to see the living-room. Say this to me." He had set down his book and taken out the copy of "Wind." "I haven't seen you."

"Book brought Denis Ford back." "For Carol," he had said, "who deserves the world fence." Well, she hadn't, and never would; this hour with Blake was as good as she was likely to see. She could rest with Blake; they were united in their love.

"Isn't it?" she said, turned and looked at her, brown lifted, smiling quizzically. "You mustn't blame that book," he said.

"I stared at him in astonishment then laughed. "It's all I read my books, but I'll read if I want you reading."

"She got up abruptly, going to get out the lunch, and said:

"I've served the kitchen, and Blake then in her saw such a girl," he said. "Where the devil did she come to cook?"

"I'm an exponent of the theory. She says if you eat steak and make cream you can always get by."

"And logical. Some night

I'll bring a steak over, and see how well you do that."

He ate ravenously, hardly stopping to talk. When they had cleared the table to make room for the Camembert and liqueurs he gave a sigh of pleasure. The peace in his soul had deepened with the appeasement of an unaccustomed physical hunger.

She pushed her chair back. Let's get this table out of the way. I don't like to sit and view the remains."

He stood up, "I'm washing the dishes."

"The devil you are."

He led her to the couch and pushed her down, his hands strong and not too gentle on her shoulders. "Sit down, darn you!"

In the end they compromised, and she washed them while he dried them and put them away. Then they came back and sat down and had another liqueur.

"Read the paper a while," Carol ordered. "There's a letter here from Jill and I want to see what's in it."

Jill detailed the family news first, conscientiously.

And finally: "I don't suppose, after our talk Christmas, that you'll be surprised at this. Don and I are going to be married. Not till spring, but I wanted you to know it as soon as I'd made up my mind."

She dropped the letter and stared straight in front of her. Don and Jill, who was nothing but a baby, was going to marry Don. A Don who, just a year ago, had been shaken and desolate because he couldn't marry her!

Blake abandoned the pretense of reading. "What is it, Carol?"

There was concern in his quiet voice.

"Jill's going to be married..."

She tried to laugh, but the laugh

caught in her throat. "I knew it was coming, but I hoped it wouldn't happen quite yet."

"Why?" He was looking steadily at her, wondering, perhaps, why she didn't react as most women did to the news of an imminent wedding.

"Because she seems such a child. Of course she's twenty-two..."

Blake, she remembered suddenly, had been twenty-two when he married Irma.

He said expressionlessly: "That's pretty young; but not too young, I guess—for a girl..."

"She isn't really too young," Carol admitted honestly. "And she always knows exactly what she wants and goes after it. She'll be happy, I think."

"Then it sounds like good news to me."

"It is—for Jill." She met his look and confessed: "My regret's entirely selfish. As long as she and Pat were at home my absence didn't make such a gap. Now Milly will be more alone."

His mouth twisted. "You've got a conscience, like I have—God help us both!"

He laid his hand on hers and she noticed for the first time how good his hands were: thin and straight; with broad palms and long sensitive fingers. She turned her own hand and gripped his.

"Well, he probably won't. We'll have to help ourselves—if we can."

He stood up and pulled her to her feet. "Come on and let's drive a while; it'll cool us off. Don't bother with a hat." He shrugged into his coat and went to open the door for her. She found the key and handed it to him.

"Put this in your pocket. I don't want to carry a bag."

He took the key and followed her with unsmiling eyes as she stepped past him into the hall. The thought pricked his mind that she ought not to be leading this lone wolf existence; she ought to be the one who was marrying and not her kid sister.

And in the same instant he knew that he had no business being so glad she wasn't.

They drove for an hour, and let the warm wind brush their faces and rumple their hair. When they had stopped again at the Sherwood she made herself look at him and smile. He sat still, his face a blur in the dark.

"Don't bother to come in with me. It's been nicer than I can tell you."

He stirred. "It's been the best evening I've ever had," he said soberly, and gathered himself together. "Oh, here's your key..."

He held it out carefully, and she took it without touching his fingers. The car moved reluctantly away in the night.

"And that," she said finally, under her breath, "will have to be all of that."

But the next morning, when Blake said in his usual pleasant voice: "There's a new man's tailoring shop opening next month—very swank. They want an announcement," she knew she had been a conceited, romantic fool. There was no trace of self-consciousness in his voice or his manner.

Irma's return, tomorrow, places Blake in the familiar straight-jacket.

SHOW BAMBOO BRACELETS

PARIS. (AP)—Bracelets of natural bamboo, coiled snake-like around each wrist, were featured by Robert Piguet with a brown sports dress. The leather belt was fastened with a clasp composed of bamboo set on metal. Large rhinestone birds found resting places on coat and pocket lapels, in models from other houses.

Eastland Delegates Off For Convention

EASTLAND, Sept. 7.—Eastland county delegates to the state democratic convention to be held in Fort Worth, will leave today for the convention city.

Over three hundred delegates to the state and district conventions were selected at the county democratic convention in Eastland.

The convention committee on resolutions went on stand as favoring the Moffett amendment to the state constitution, proposing to limit any one county from having more than seven state representatives.
