POPE BLESSES ANTI-COMMUNIST WAR

Pupils Return to School

Through the Editor's Spectacles
By GEORGE

The people of this part of Texas today will agree enthusiastically with Boyce House's conception of the sweetest music in his poem "Texas Music," published in his recent little book of poetry, "Texas Rhythms." I received yesterday a copy of the little paper-bound volume, and this particular bit of blank verse—all of House's verse is blank and in a measure developed for the peculiar chanting rhythm that distinguishes the poetry of Walt Whitman—marked for attention.

I shall take the liberty of "lifting" the verses from the volume as follows:

Texas Music

The wash of the waves at Corpus Christi—rolling, endlessly rolling;

The half-rad sonnet of a mocking bird floating from a gray-silver thicket beside the crumbling Alamo;

And old as the bald, bold hill from which it rises, the lament of a lean wolf north of Uvalde; The bellow of the cattle as the lightning flickers west of the Pecos;

The blessing steam and the steady creaking of wells drilling through the night near Ranger—gas flares like living, livid plumes against the sky's black-purple;

The cornetist trilling and shrilling as the S. M. U. band sends the delicious lilt of "Coming around the Mountain" across the Dallas bridron on an wine-like autumn afternoon;

But, sweetest of all, the glad gurgle of the ground, thirsty for months, when the rain pelts and dashes and goes roaring down a rocky canyon between Pioneer and Cross Plains.

Nothing would be sweeter music to the ears of farmers and ranchers of this section now than such a sound. And from the appearance of the skies it looks as if Old Mother Nature is getting ready to play just such music.

Moisture Beneficial To Large Area

CLAIMS REDS HIT AT BASIS FOR CULTURE

Calls On Authorities To Halt Advances Of Red 'Evils'

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy, Sept. 14. (AP)—Pope Pius XI gave his blessings before the world today to military defense against the "mad" forces of communism, saying that communism menaced in Spain and elsewhere "the very foundations of all order, culture, and civilization."

He invoked the "special love born of mercy and compassion" for the Spanish persecutors of bishops and priests, and called on the constituted authorities of all nations "to oppose these great evils with every remedy and barrier possible."

The pope was weary from the ills of old age but determined to add his voice in setting forth issues of the civil war in Spain. Some days ago he was forced to illness to curtail his daily automobile rides about his villa at Castel Gandolfo.

Although reportedly gravely ill at that time, the 79-year-old Holy Father now has resumed his daily auto rides.

A Step Toward Fascism

THE state democratic convention at Fort Worth adopted a platform plank calling upon the state legislature to reverse its thrice-expressed refusal to ratify the child labor amendment to the national constitution, a reversal that would peril the traditional democratic principle of state's rights still further.

ends that were sought by proponents of federal control.

IT is difficult to understand, now, why the principle involved would justify opposition to federal control of the oil and gas industry and not justify opposition to the more serious issue of placing control of the employment of children under 18 years of age in the hands of federal authorities.

THE state of Texas has thrice refused to ratify. Over the past ten years the states of the United States have repeatedly given ratification a sufficient number of adverse votes to make its rejection a positive political fact.

Dislocating Advice: Make It Both Jaws
PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—If you must dislocate your jaw while yawning, it's better to dislocate both sides than just one.
Dr. E. A. Gummig evolved this dictum after treating two Pasadena citizens in as many days for dislocated jaws they acquired while yawning.
For instance, Elmo Smalley, 27, dislocated both sides, and it was practically no trick at all for Dr. Gummig to snap the Smalley jaw back in place at the emergency hospital. But the other yawner dislocated one side and had to be sent to the regular hospital.

THE WORLD WITH A FENCE

A New Novel by Marian Sims

SYNOPSIS: The difficulty of maintaining an impersonal attitude in front of her employer, Blake Thornton, has reduced Carol Torrance to desperation. It is obvious that they love each other, and each is too decent to permit the matter to rise above the surface—hasn't it?" she whispered. "To care—that much—for something is frightening. The more things you love, the greater your hostage to fortune. . . ."

His eyes were on her face. She looked white and tired and lifeless; a stranger would have thought her without charm or color. But her very exhaustion aroused in him an uncontrollable tenderness. "No," he said harshly. "Just being able to love that way—even if you lose the thing you love; even if you never possess it—is it worth all the suffering it entails?"

The air was vibrant, and the thing that filled them was a physical force, drawing them together. He thought desperately: You can't say it—you can't! And tried to summon a commonplace remark that would break the spell. But the spell was too strong upon him, and in the end it was his self-control that broke. He heard his own voice, shaken and almost inaudible.

"Oh, God, it's no use! I love you, Carol—I love you. . . ."

He realized suddenly, hearing what he said, that the words had set his spirit free. They heard the words together, throbbing in the air like the echo of a carillon, and then the torrent poured over them. She closed her eyes and heard the echo die away. He sat motionless, waiting for a word or sign, not daring to touch her until he knew she wished it.

She said at last: "No, it's no use. Because—I love you—too. . . ."

The words pulled him to his feet and he crossed to the couch and took her in his arms. After a second she lay motionless, and arm about his neck and her mouth against his.

He held her close, and revelled in the youth and resilience of her body. To love someone like this, he thought exultantly—someone who was young! Thirty-three years was not too long to wait. His mouth moved, gentle and lingering, over her mouth and eyes and throat.

She drew away and looked at him, seeing the physical details of his face. It was incredible now that his eyes had been like slate, or that his thin mouth had ever been straight and hard. His head was beautifully modelled, she realized, and the thinness of his face threw its bones into sharp relief. She sat up suddenly and pulled his head down to her breast, and he lay still and felt the quick strong beating of her heart.

They recovered finally a fragment of reason, and sat apart and looked with wonder at each other. She said unsteadily:

"Blake, that was insane. . . ."

Fear darkened his eyes for an instant. "Are you trying to tell me—you didn't mean it?"

"You know better than that. I told you because I couldn't help it. But—what can we do?"

He said simply: "Spend the rest of our lives together."

She could almost believe, hearing his words, that it was as simple as that. A mutual longing that would achieve a desired end. Almost—but not quite.

"My darling, that's not possible. I don't see why not." He sprang to his feet and began to pace the floor, driven by the new-found energy within him. "Unpleasantness first, yes. Tears and reproaches, maybe; but heaven knows they don't matter. If Irma's life and mine had been different I'd reproach myself; but I can't and won't."

Carol followed him with her eyes, and when she spoke her voice trembled between laughter and tears.

"Blake, my darling, think. What has Irma ever done to make you think she can be generous? I don't know much about her, but I'm afraid I know that much."

He said hotly: "Of course I'm willing to insist, if that's the only way. But I still don't believe it will be." He made an impatient gesture and came to her again.

"Don't think about it tonight; give me a chance to believe this."

He smiled at her, and saw the light and color in her face that had been drawn and tired. He felt a passionate longing to cherish and protect her; to put his own body and strength between her and the world. He fell back upon the only concrete gesture that occurred to him at the moment.

"It must be late," he said gently. "Hungry?"

"I hadn't thought." She felt a pang of shame that she had so completely forgotten Margery and Harry in the blinding light of her own happiness. "I believe I am."

"Fine. Let's go eat our way through a big dinner."

The knowledge of being thus loved and cherished was almost too much to bear. She laughed brokenly.

"I'll have to change clothes. These are a little the worse for wear."

His eyes were wistful. "May I wait, or shall I go away and come back?" He confessed with a smile: "I'm afraid to get for from you for fear I'll wake up!"

She hesitated only an instant. "Then stay. I won't be long." This is too much to ask of life, she thought. It's dangerous to be as happy as this; the gods will be jealous. . . .

She came back in a very few minutes, glowing and immaculate, with her short dark hair once more in order.

"Your turn next," she said simply, and smiled. "As the boy told the visiting bishop, 'you may use any of the towels.'"

When they were in the car he turned inquiringly. "Where to, lady?"

"The Merrimac grill?" His hand closed over hers. "What made you suggest that?"

"Idiot!" She laughed gently. "Don't you know, or do you just want to hear me say it?"

"I want to hear you say it." "All right. Because the first meal I ever ate with you was at the Merrimac."

Park Springs Save Cattle of Oklahoma

ENID, Okla., Sept. 14 (AP)—Historic government springs park here again has come to the rescue of cattlemen in this district.

Revel, who had just written that the park springs served as a water hole for herds of cattle driven across the strip from Texas to southern Kansas.

Recently officials have permitted drought-stricken farmers and cattlemen to haul water from the east end of the park where the spring waters of the lake empty into Boggy creek.

S. B. Reeves, street and park commissioner, said the practice would be continued as long as the springs delivered enough water to keep the lake full.

FULL SCHEDULE—OF CLASSES
MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP)—The professors must have helped draw up the 1936 football schedule for Kansas State college. Gridgers do not leave until Friday afternoon for most of their trips, and consequently miss only a half day of classes on Saturday afternoon. The only exception to this rule is one long trip scheduled each year for the team—but the long inter-sectional jaunt has been dropped from the 1936 card.
Registration of all unemployed persons on relief in Canada is scheduled to start September 1.

Observatory Crowds Boon to Landowners

PASADENA, Calif., Sept. 14 (AP)—The Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson observatory is proving a bonanza for the company which owns the land on which it is situated.
Until a year ago the observatory could be reached only by a steep, narrow toll road and visitors were comparatively few. Then Los Angeles county built a high gear road up the mountain.
The institution charges no admission, but the owners of the mountain top site are reaping a harvest in parking and other fees.

Sheep Counters Must Remain Wide Awake

TUCSON, Ariz., Sept. 14.—Counting sheep is usually considered a sleep producer, but forest rangers expect they will have to be very wide awake indeed if they succeed in the task assigned them in the Catalina mountains, near here.
They are attempting a count of wild, big horn sheep which stay in the most inaccessible heights. William Chester is in charge, assisted by James and Francis Knigge, two of the best mountain climbers the service could obtain. They expect to complete the count in six weeks.

Male Quail Sits-- But Under Protest

HERSHEY, Pa., Sept. 14 (AP)—A male quail went maternal near here and hatched a brood—but he did it under protest.
Early in the hatching period at the Hershey quail farm, the mother bird left her nest of 10 eggs and the father took her place, voluntarily at first.
Then he became tired of his job and tried to leave. But each time he made the effort, the mother bird drove him back to the nest.
Finally, eight of the 10 eggs hatched.
CHIEF WEEPS AT WORK!
LORAIN, O. (AP)—Police Chief Theodore Walker wept at his work for several days without knowing why. Then he opened the bottom drawer of his desk and discovered a box of old tear-gas shells. They had been there at least two years and the heat had melted the wax, allowing the gas to escape.
