SOVIET SENDS FASCISTS ULTIMATUM

FDR Urges Peace Effort

Through the Editor's Spectacles
By GEORGE

Cisco people, attending the revival services conducted by Gypsy Smith at Abilene, came away enchanted by the rare and simple charm of a great man. No gymnastic preacher is Smith, whose appeal is that of sweetness, purity and simple sincerity. He preaches as he lives, with the fervor of an earnest faith and with a captivating and quiet appeal that seems to get under one's skin. So said W. F. Walker who, with Mrs. Walker, and other Ciscoans, including the Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Cole of the First Methodist church, attended last night's services at the Abilene First Baptist church.

The smooth, melodious tenor of the aged Smith's voice, his typical English accent, and his flashes of wit which prove that the Irish do not have a monopoly on this quality, were especially attractive to Walker. The preacher is a Gypsy. He does his own solo singing. "You love the man at sight," said Walker. "He has a very definite charm and the most lovable personality you can imagine."

Other Ciscoans who attended included Mr. and Mrs. Walker's two daughters and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. LaRoque.

Gypsy Smith has been famous for many years—internationally famous. The opportunity to hear him now presented to Cisco people and others in the vicinity of Abilene is a rare one. It will probably never come again.

One of the biggest fish that has ever been caught on a fly rod at Lake Cisco was taken the other day by Forrest Wright. The bass weighed six and a half pounds and he put up a mighty battle. In the end, however, he surrendered and was baked and served to a number of guests by Mr. and Mrs. Wright the next evening. Conscious of the skepticism that fish stories always arouse, even among friends, Forrest kept the big fish captive in a tub beside the house for a day so that the evidence might tell its own story. But even at that, said he, the "big one got away."

Sargent, who resigned to take a position with an oil company in San Antonio.

CLAIM FRENCH FASCISTS ARM FOR CONFLICT

Cabinet Meets While Claim Made Soviet Is Stirring War

PARIS, Oct. 14 (AP)—Premier Leon Blum's newspaper charged today that Francois de La Rocque had acquired rifles, machine guns, and bombs to arm rightist followers of his French fascist organization.

The cabinet met amid rightist charges that Russian communists are trying to provoke Franco-German strife.

The accusations followed the disclosure of the presence in Paris of Soviet Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff.

The Blum newspaper claimed that De LaRocque is preparing for a "putsch" to bring into power by violence "an ideal repugnant to the majority of the French people."

FRENCH REPLY TO NAZI INSULT PROTEST

PARIS, Oct. 14. (AP)—German's official protest that a French communist leader had insulted Adolf Hitler Tuesday night evoked counter charges from French leftists that the Reich had meddled in French internal affairs.

The communist party called Germany's action an intolerable intrusion and announced it would publish the full text of the speech by the party's secretary-general, Maurice Thorez, which German officials said contained remarks derogatory to Hitler.

The German protest, delivered orally by its charge d'affaires at Paris to a French foreign office official, led to fears Germany might seize the alleged insult as justification for not attending any future Locarno conference.

Farmers Urged To Sign Up For Terracing Work

Those who are unable to build terraces this season can run their rows on water levels at no extra expense and reduce water and wind erosion greatly. Contouring or water levelling the rows is no substitute for terracing but serves

QUICK ACTION UPON CHARGE IS DEMANDED

Blockade of Portugal To Halt Arms For Insurgents Asked

LONDON, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Soviet ambassador, in a personal visit to the British foreign office, demanded today that the international neutrality committee be summoned this week to act on Moscow's charges of fascist violation of the "hands off Spain" accord, informed sources said.

Ivan Maisky, Soviet ambassador, personally assumed charge of Russia's case against Italy, Germany, and Portugal, which the Soviet government has accused of sending military aid to the Spanish insurgents fighting against the socialist government.

From Moscow came word that Russia demanded the establishment of a virtual blockade of Portugal by the British and French navies to halt arms and supplies being sent to the insurgents.

A second note from Moscow to the international non-intervention committee was described as virtual ultimatum. Previously the soviet threatened to repudiate the neutrality agreement unless alleged German, Italian and Portuguese assistance to the Spanish insurgents ceased.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

The god of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do His will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in His sight through Jesus Christ.—Heb. xiii. 20, 21.

Blessed Healer! All our burdens lighten: Give us peace, we pray: Keep us near Thee, till the morn shall brighten And all mists and shadows flee away. —ANON.

Tribulation is the King's highway, and yet that highway is paved with love.—Macduff.

Threatening a Stripper Wells

The Cisco area, as a "stripper" oil well territory, is vitally interested in the arguments against increasing the taxes on crude oil production, as is under consideration at Austin where the Texas legislature is endeavoring to raise money to pay old-age assistance benefits. The Mid-Continent Oil and Gas association of Texas has just released some figures on the cost of oil production in Texas which positively refute the ignorant conception that an oil well is a mine of money that flows. These reveal that 83 per cent of the oil wells in Texas outside the flush east Texas field are "stripper" wells producing an average of only seven barrels daily. Of the 35,343 pumping wells in the state, 20,000 produce an average of only 3.8 barrels daily, while the average cost of producing a well pumping from 0.1 to 5.9 barrels daily is 99 cents per barrel, not including interest on investment.

ONE successful Cisco oil operator who operates large properties and has had long experience in the business said that if he made a 3 per cent return on his investment he considered he was doing extremely well. This statement contrasts sharply with the legislative idea of the oil business as expressed in its apparent readiness to burden the industry with new taxes rather than tackle the more difficult problem of tax equity whenever an emergency arises. Moreover, it reveals the extreme danger of tampering with so large and important a contribution to the state's economic welfare by threatening the small margin of profit by which the stripper wells are able to survive.

MOST of the stripper wells in the state are owned by small operators. The welfare of these operators is vital to the industry. To increase the difficulty of maintaining these properties as sound business ventures by piling more unfair taxes upon them is to strike at the prosperity of the state.

Retail Sales Up

RETAIL sales in Texas in 1935 were 33 per cent over the total of such sales during 1933, a summary published by the department of commerce reveals. In 1933, 67,914 stores reported total sales of $965,561,000 while in 1935 total sales of $1,238,036,000 were reported by 71,234 stores. This increase is in sharp contrast to the record of retail business in the state from 1929 to 1933, between which years a decrease of 53 per cent occurred. There was a 15 per cent increase in employees over the two-year period covered in the latest report while the payroll aggregate increased 25 per cent.

THESE statistics bear out the statement of President Roosevelt that the country has turned the prosperity corner. They are certainly hard to reconcile with the republican claims and "fairy tales" by which the leadership of that party has been endeavoring to frighten the American electorate into repudiating a leadership which has a clear record of achievement to redeem its pledges and justify its continuance in office.

OTHER OPINIONS

A Rail Service

TEXAS SCHOOL CHILDREN are now coming to the centennial exposition, the first group movements having got under way this week. Children from the panhandle district visited the exposition on Thursday and Friday of this week, and they are to be followed, in succession, by a district every two days until children from all the twenty-four districts have been to the celebration. Much was added this week to the conviction that the undertaking will meet with great success when the General Passenger Agents' association of Texas railroads agreed to fix a fare of one-half cent per mile for the school children. In this move the railroads of the state are both generous and wise. They probably will make no immediate profit, but they will be acquainting hundreds of thousands of children with rail transportation—many of them for the first time—and they deserve the gratitude of Texas for making possible the visits of many children who otherwise probably would not have been able to see the exposition. The cooperation of the railroads is very encouraging to those backing the movement, and they are to be congratulated on the spirit displayed. And now it is the responsibility of every community in the state to help insure as large an attendance of children as is possible. It is of great importance that every young Texan be given a chance to see the Southwest's first World's fair.—Texas Weekly.

Washington Daybook

By PRESTON GROVER

WASHINGTON — Which candidate, Landon or Roosevelt, is likely to reap most benefit from the part Senator Borah plays in this campaign? He said when he left the republican convention, disappointed over Landon's surprise telegram, that he had never bolted the ticket. Now, answering an inquiry by Senator Davis, Pennsylvania republican, Borah affirms that he has "not bolted."

But samples of his campaign utterances in Idaho tend to leave the impression he is following a course not far from that of 1932 when he did not bolt, but did not help Hoover.

The situation is different now, however, in that Mr. Borah must campaign for his own re-election. Then he stood on the sidelines entirely.

Material the "double-duty" political thinkers are studying seriously includes segments of a speech Borah made at Meridian, a little dairy town outside Boise, usually selected by the senator for one of his most important campaign speeches.

There he said, first, that he was against the reciprocal trade treaty program. That was in keeping with the republican platform (Borah insisted on that plank)

Seen Out For Self

New Deal ears must have pricked up when he said: "The problem of providing relief had to be met, the people had to be fed—of course President Roosevelt was justified in spending large sums of public money." But, Borah added:

"The republican party would have done the same thing if it had been in power and had known conditions." Then he whetted his audience's temper by commenting that he did not know "how much of the money that was spent was wasted."

Best information is: Borah will be out campaigning largely for himself. He finds ample reason to stay in Idaho.

Washington Watching

Idaho has one of the half dozen senatorial contests which Washington will watch closely election night. What happens to Borah is important news. Two recent developments have encouraged Idaho republicans, who are hopeful of Borah's re-election and less hopeful of giving Landon the state's electoral votes.

First: In the primary, Borah was opposed by Byron Defenbach, former state treasurer, who, when defeated, became a Townsend candidate for the senate. Now he has withdrawn, throwing his support to Borah. It infuriated democrats who had hoped he would split the republican vote, and delighted republicans who feared he might.

Second: The Idaho supreme

Proposed Amendments in Brief

(Editor's Note: Following is a summary of one of the six amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Texas and to be voted upon at the general election November 23.

S. J. R. No. 14

Proposal No. 5 to the state constitution known as S. J. R. No. 14 proposes to raise the salaries of certain constitutional officers, namely, the governor, attorney general, comptroller of public accounts, treasurer, commissioner of general land office, and secretary of state.

This amendment provides that the governor shall receive as compensation for his services an annual salary of twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars, as compared to the four thousand ($4,000) he now receives, and shall have the use and occupation of the governor's mansion, fixtures and furniture.

The salary of the attorney general would be fixed at ten thousand ($10,000) dollars as compared to the four thousand ($4,000) he now receives.

The comptroller of public accounts, the treasurer, and the commissioner of the general land office each hold office for a term of two years, reside at the capitol of the state during continuance in office, perform the duties required of them by law, and now receive a salary of twenty-five hundred ($2,500) dollars per year. This amendment would increase the salary of these officials from twenty-five hundred ($2,500) dollars to six thousand ($6,000) dollars annually.

The secretary of state is appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, and holds office during the term of the session of the governor. The present salary of the secretary of state is two thousand ($2,000) dollars per year and this amendment would provide for a salary of six thousand ($6,000) annually.

as a temporary aid until terraces can be built.

Running Terrace Lines

County Agent Cook and Assistant County Agent Barnhart have run terrace lines the last two weeks on the farms of K. F. Kirk and C. F. Poyner of Colony, D. W. Boone of Bullock, Idus S. Echols of Staff, F. M. Williams of Eastland, Abraham P. Key of Reagan, and C. C. McFadden of Dothan.

On Tuesday, October 20, pasture terrace lines will be run on the farm of Bruce Ebberhart of Rising Star.

Expecting N. Y. A. Help

Beginning November 1, two crews of N. Y. A. youths will be put to work in Eastland county running terrace and contour lines and doing other conservation work, according to the county agent. A full-time supervisor who works out of the county agent's office will have supervision over the work. All work done will follow rules and instructions recognized by the extension service as being sound.

Types of conservation work that can be done under the N. Y. A. project are terrace or contour line running and pasture demonstration work such as clearing, deadening timber, listing, contouring, fertilizing, sodding, reseeding, removing, cactus, and fencing modified grazing areas. Making and laying of sub-irrigation garden tile also will be done.

N. Y. A. workers will not build terraces, only running the lines. Pasture work will be done on a limited scale where land owners wish to improve a reasonable acreage for demonstration purposes and are willing to furnish everything but the labor.

Montana Gridders Must Learn Rugby

BUTTE, Mont., Oct. 14. (AP)—Montana Mines football players have more to learn than the 11-man game this season.

Coach Charlie McAuliffe has tentatively scheduled a game with the Calgary, Alberta, rugby club team October 17, with one half of the contest to be played under rugby rules and the other half under American regulations.

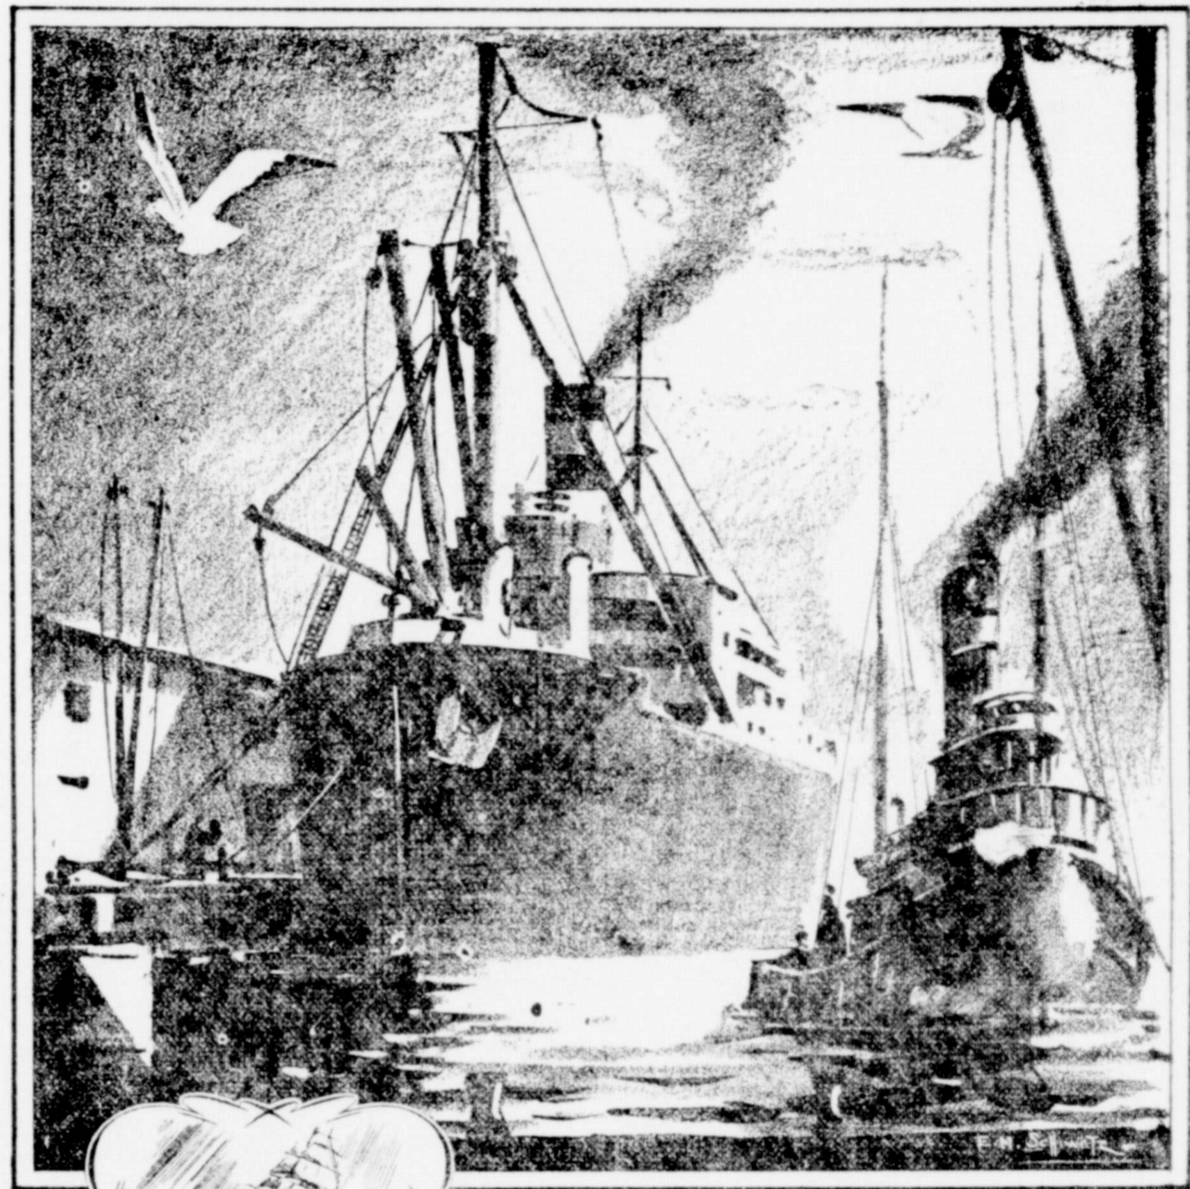

In the rugby game, each team uses 15 men with no time out for injuries.

Typically Texan is the story of the growth of the Texas ports

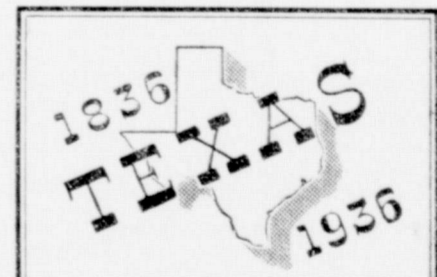

In 1836, the whole long Texas coastline was practically unknown to shipping. Now, wherever seamen gather, the ports of Texas are richly praised. The story of the building of the Texas ports is a story of far-sighted men, of projects broadly conceived and faithfully executed; a story of determination and the will to win; in short, a story typically Texan!

AS THE PORTS of Texas receive the praise of mariners, so Humble products are recommended by Texas motorists. Texans know that the Humble sign stands for this fundamental Humble policy: Humble motor fuels and Humble motor oils must be the best you can buy.

So Humble motor fuels and Humble motor oils are continuously improved; slight day-to-day improvements keep them always up to date—always a little ahead of the rest.

Try Humble Motor Fuels and Humble Motor Oils; test them the sure way—in your car. Stop today at a Humble Service Station or at a Humble dealer's; fill your tank with a Humble motor fuel, drain and refill with a Humble motor oil.

The Wrong Murderer

By HUGH CLEVELY

SYNOPSIS: All Terence Mahony has done is to rescue two girls from Ambrose Lawson's gang of kidnapers, but now he finds himself in the unfortunate position of being suspected of the murder of Vincent Little, and Lawson is free and not suspected of anything. Ruth Fraser, one of the girls, has provided Terence an alibi, but she does not suspect that she was kidnapped by Scotland Yard officer, Lee-Ramsden, who now is trying to lead Terence off guard on a wrong scent.

Chapter 17 SUBTLE EVASIONS

Thus it happened that Inspector Kennedy arrived at Lee-Ramsden's house, Lee-Ramsden was absent. The Inspector was a patient man by nature; he sat and waited for nearly an hour. Then Lee-Ramsden returned. He greeted the Inspector genially but with an air of some surprise.

"From Scotland Yard, are you? You're not the man who came before. I suppose you've come about my ward," he said. "I don't think you need have troubled. I rang up the police some time ago telling them of her return and explaining the reason for her absence. I'm very sorry for having caused the police all this unnecessary bother, and if a contribution of twenty guineas to the Police Orphanage would be of any use, I shall be glad to send along a cheque."

"Thank you, sir," said the Inspector. "But I'd like to ask you a few questions all the same, if you don't mind."

"Not a bit," said Lee-Ramsden. "But you mustn't be disappointed if I don't know some of the answers."

"On the afternoon of your ward's disappearance, I understand that she was going shopping," went on the Inspector. "She left the house—and disappeared. Am I to understand that simply on the spur of the moment she went off down to her friend's house in Sussex without bothering to let anybody know, and without taking any luggage?"

"It seems like it, doesn't it?" said Lee-Ramsden carelessly. "That's the story she told me."

"Do you believe that story?" asked Inspector Kennedy.

Lee-Ramsden smiled.

"My dear fellow, whether I believe the story or not is quite beside the point," he answered. "As Miss Fraser's guardian I keep a very careful eye on all her financial investments—she will come into a large fortune when she is twenty-one, you know. But so far as her personal behavior is concerned, she has complete liberty to please herself what she does."

A somewhat cynical old gentleman, thought Inspector Kennedy.

"Is your ward the kind of girl likely to indulge in . . . or—rash and impulsive actions?" asked the Inspector.

Lee-Ramsden smiled again.

"I wouldn't exactly call her a milk-and-water miss," he replied. "If she particularly wanted to do anything, I imagine she is the kind of person who would do it, and damn the consequences. I hope so. I hate timid people."

"And you think her story about staying with a friend in Sussex may not be the truth?" pursued the Inspector.

"I don't think about it at all. It doesn't concern me whether it's the truth or not," answered Lee-Ramsden. "And unless my ward has been up to something criminal, I don't see that it concerns you either. If you want to find out whether the story is true or not, why not ring up Miss Dowson's cottage and ask her?"

"We have already put through a telephone enquiry to the Harfield police," stated Inspector Kennedy. "They report that Miss Dowson left the cottage this morning and they don't know where she has gone. They also report that, so far as they are aware, Miss Dowson has not had any guest staying with her during the last few days."

"Really. That's most interesting. Then my ward has not been staying with Anne Dowson," commented Lee-Ramsden. "But even so, Inspector, I still don't see that the matter concerns you. I take it that you're not running a welfare department at Scotland Yard, or starting a bureau for supervising the conduct of young girls."

"Not exactly, sir," said Inspector Kennedy. "We're interested in your niece's movements because she claims that she was brought from Miss Dowson's cottage by a man named Mahony, whom we suspect of murdering Mr. Vincent Little."

"Suspect of . . ." Lee-Ramsden's manner had suddenly become quite serious. "What's this you're saying, Inspector?" he asked.

Inspector Kennedy told him briefly about the murder of Mr. Little. It seemed that Lee-Ramsden was greatly shocked by the news. Inspector Kennedy was very glad to see it. Now, perhaps, he would get a little real information.

"Are you acquainted with Terence Mahony, sir?" he asked.

"Only by hearsay," answered Lee-Ramsden. "I've heard my ward talking about him. She seems greatly taken with him. So far as I'm concerned, though I've never met him personally, I must confess that I'm a little prejudiced against him. He's a friend of young Ross, you know, and I never cared for that young man. I believe that he doped."

Here was real information at last. The Inspector's eyes glinted. He leaned forward eagerly.

"And what makes you believe that, sir?" he enquired.

Lee-Ramsden spread out his hands slightly.

"I don't know. Nothing very much, I suppose. Only I've knocked about the world a good bit in my time, and kept my eyes open, and there are signs by which one can often tell a dope addict."

"The eyes, and muscles of the face," suggested the Inspector.

"Yes," agreed Lee-Ramsden. "And a certain habit of boasting. I remember him telling me that he and a friend of his abroad had hit on the easiest and quickest way of making money ever invented. He wouldn't tell me what it was. Not that I was particularly interested."

"He and a friend of his abroad," echoed the Inspector. "He didn't mention the friend's name, I suppose?"

"No. But I imagine he meant Mahony. Mahony was in China at the time, and Ross was always saying what a fine fellow he was," answered Lee-Ramsden.

The Inspector asked no more questions; he departed in a very thoughtful mood. Lee-Ramsden watched him go with a smile of satisfaction. His thoughts were disturbed by the entry of Mullins the butler.

"Miss Ruth just rang up, sir," he announced. "I didn't disturb you because you were busy in bringing a friend, a Mr. Mahony, to lunch."

"Bringing Mr. Mahony to lunch, is she?" said Lee-Ramsden. "That's excellent—excellent. Mr. Mahony is a gentleman whom I am particularly anxious to meet. I shall have to try to think of something really bright with which to entertain him."

After leaving the Little's house,

Ruth and Mahony got into Ruth's car and drove to a small cafe in the King's Road. They found an empty corner and sat down. Mahony ordered coffee.

Ruth glanced speculatively at him.

"You're angry with me, aren't you," she said.

"No," said Mahony.

"No, perhaps you're not," she added. "You don't look really angry. Just a little pained and grieved, and terribly patient. I suppose you think I'm an awful half-wit."

"Well—yes, I do rather," said Mahony. "You see, as an impromptu effort, that story you put up about us at the Little's was quite a bright effort. But what good is it going to do? All that stuff about me fetching you from the cottage . . . the Inspector will disprove that in no time. And what are your people going to say about it? It seems to me you've got yourself into an unholy mix-up."

"No worse than the mix-up I was in when you fetched me out of that house," she answered. "And I couldn't very well stand by and see you arrested for a murder I knew you hadn't committed. You see, my guardian has told the police that I was staying in the country with Anne Dowson. He wouldn't believe that I'd been kidnapped."

"He wouldn't believe you'd been kidnapped?" echoed Mahony.

"Then what on earth did he think you'd been doing?"

Ruth gave him a brief account of the previous evening, and her arrangement with Anne Dowson.

"That's why I said all that about you bringing me back from the cottage in your car," she wished. "What else could I say?"

"Nothing very much," admitted Mahony. "But it's an infernally complicated situation."

It was an infernally complicated situation, and he simply could not imagine what was going to happen next.

"I wonder what your guardian is going to have to say when he finds out what's happened," he observed.

"Why not come back to lunch and meet him, and find out?" said Ruth. "After all, I've told the Inspector that we're pretty friendly; we'd better act up to it."

"I'll come," said Mahony. "Though it's rather problematical whether I shall stay to lunch."

Lee-Ramsden shrewdly sums up the case against Terence, tomorrow.

Unemployment Compensation What It Means

By L. E. HARWOOD
Regional Service Representative,
Region Ten Social Security Board.

Texas citizens, reading press accounts of the state's consideration of an unemployment compensation bill, have asked themselves: What is it supposed to do? What will it cost? How will it affect me? And many other questions.

Attempt to answer these questions must begin with a brief of the provisions of the security act, passed by the congress and approved April 14, 1935.

The president previously had the keynote of this program in his messages of 1934 and January 4, 1935: "Our objectives I place first on the men, women and children of the nation first." Further said that security for individual and for the family is itself with three factors:

Security Factors

1. That homes to live in.

2. Employment of the natural resources of the country so as to afford the fullest opportunity to employ productive work.

3. Guards against the major hazards of life.

The social security act concerns itself with the third of these factors—safeguards against misfortunes which can not be wholly eliminated in this manmade world of ours.

The provisions of the act deal with a number of distinct though related measures for social security which may be grouped under the following headings: Unemployment compensation, old age assistance, old age benefits, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, child welfare services, extension of public health services, vocational rehabilitation.

Now then, what is unemployment compensation and how does it fit into this general program of security?

Compensation

Briefly defined, unemployment compensation or insurance is a system under which contributions based upon wages are paid into a fund from which benefits are paid to workers who become unemployed through no fault of their own. Unemployment compensation is not, as sometimes supposed, a system under which every unemployed person is entitled to receive benefits for any and all unemployed time. State unemployment compensation laws ordinarily provide that benefits be based on the length of time that the employee previously has been employed during a specified period of time (usually one week of benefit to four weeks of employment) and usually provide a maximum number of weeks during the year for which an employee may receive benefits (usually from 10 to 20 weeks).

Obviously it is designed to provide protection primarily for the bona fide workers who are regularly employed for at least a minimum number of weeks each year. It takes care of employees in seasonal and unsteady businesses only for very limited periods of time. In other words, employees will earn benefit rights, up to a specified maximum, according to their abilities to obtain steady work. But, having become unemployed, the worker files his claim for unemployment compensation as a matter of right. He is thus spared the humiliation and demoralizing effects of having to apply for public relief. In normal times, the great majority of unemployed workers eligible for benefits will find employment before exhausting their benefits, and many before the end of the waiting period when benefits become payable.

Tried in Europe

Unemployment insurance, although new to America, is not new to Europe. It was introduced to England in 1911 and has been in force in most of the Scandinavian countries for many years. Even in the United States, unemployment insurance plans have been in operation about fifty years in labor organizations. In addition, a number of industries and individual companies in this country have operated unemployment reserve plans. Only recently has state legislation for compulsory unemployment compensation been enacted in this country, but it is now being adopted in a number of states.

The case for unemployment compensation may be summed up as follows:

Under our economic system large numbers of workers become unemployed through no fault of their own, and, following their loss of employment, many of them become dependent on public relief and private charity, with serious economic and social consequences. It is maintained that we always have had and always will have to meet the costs of unemployment and that in the past it has been done in a haphazard, and often wasteful, manner. The taxpayer had to shoulder the burden when he was least able to do so. The landlord, unable to collect his rents; the merchant, vainly striving to carry along his unemployed debtors; professional workers such as doctors and lawyers—nearly all forms and types of businesses have felt the blight of unemployment under emergency conditions for which the country was not prepared.

Now, it is contended, the nation proposes to use insurance, a time-honored means of protection against economic hazards, to provide a first-line defense against this greatest hazard of our industrial civilization, and while it is not expected that it will eliminate the necessity for relief, it is believed that it will greatly lessen it.

Secondly, unemployment compensation will place upon business and industry itself a larger share of the responsibility for the consequence of unemployment, and provide an orderly and systematic means for building up reserves to alleviate the shock of unemployment. It should, therefore, encourage the stabilization of employment.

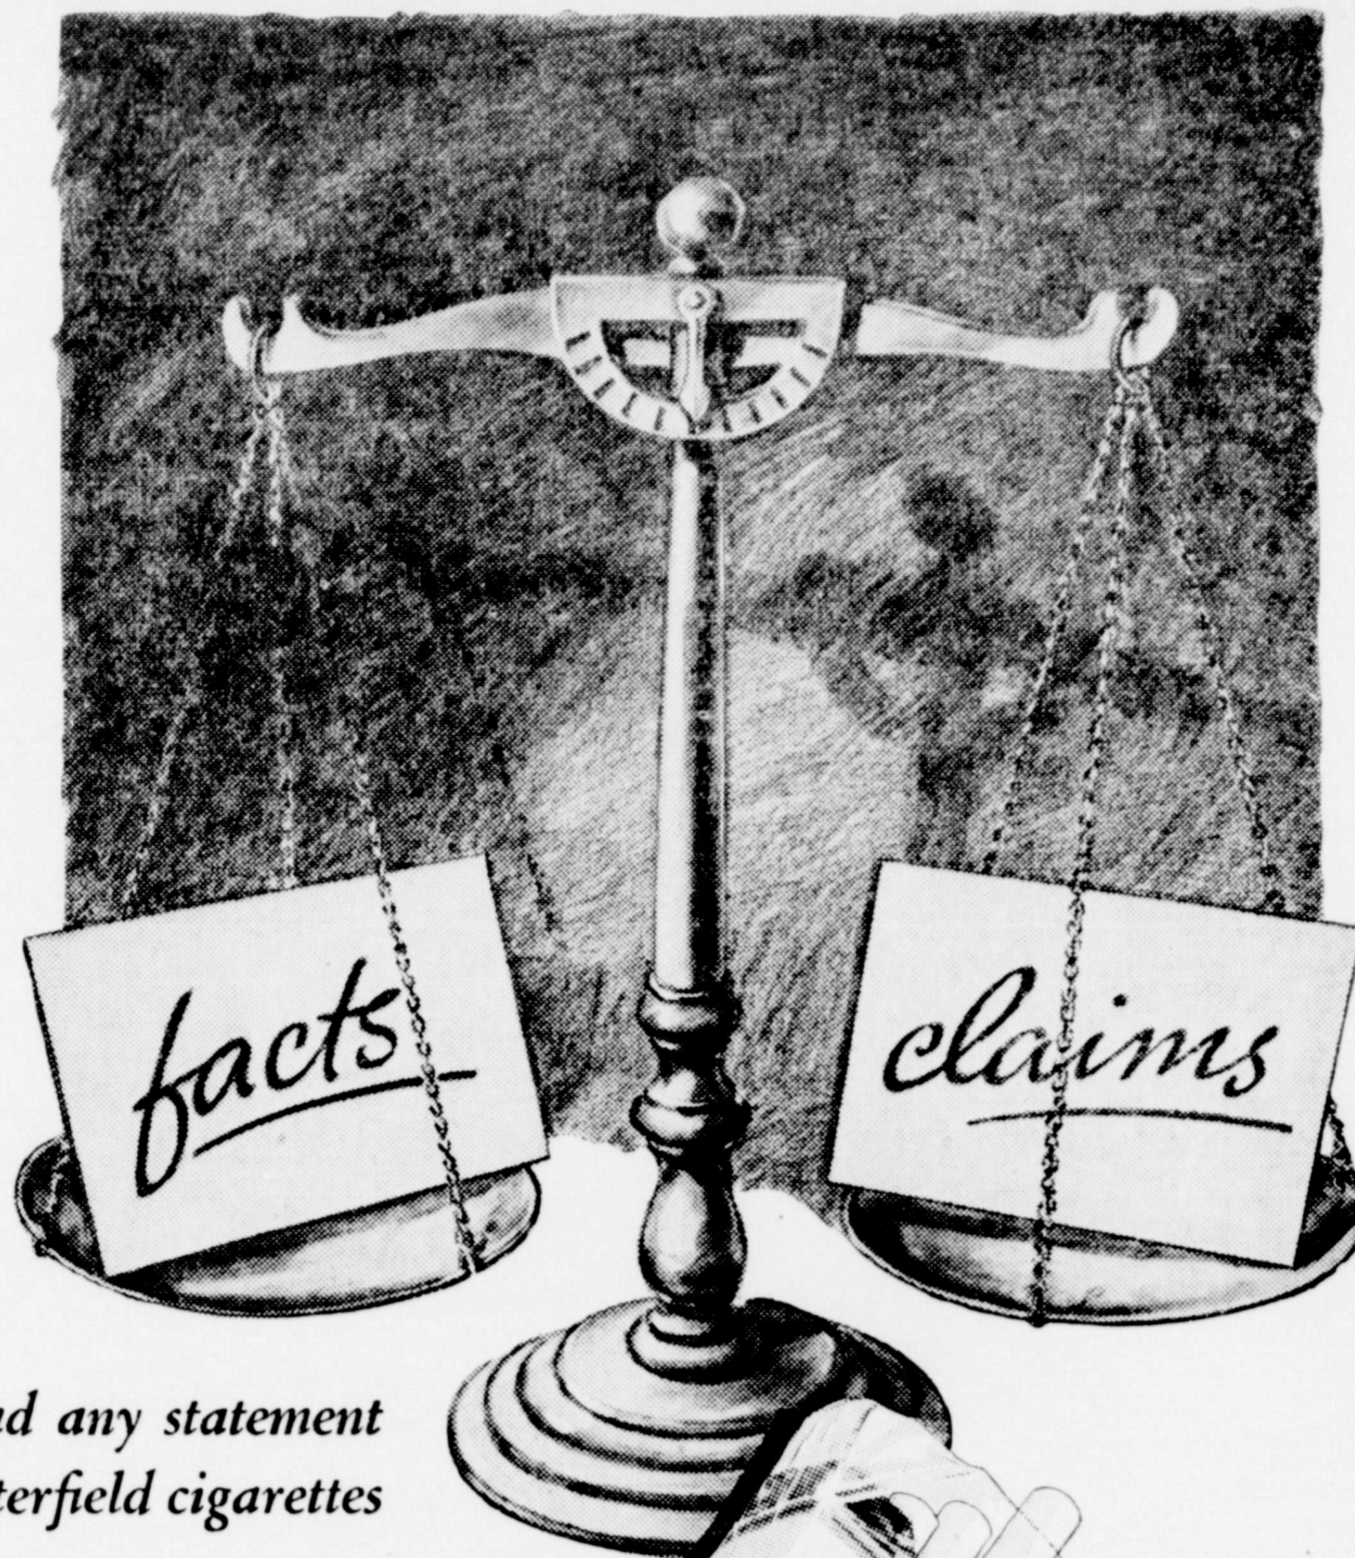

In the third place, unemployment compensation is designed not only to provide a larger degree of economic security to the worker and his family but also to stabilize conditions by maintaining the purchasing power of the worker upon which business prosperity largely depends. It is reasoned that when a period of depression sets in, unemployment compensation would, therefore, serve to mitigate the hitherto disastrous results on industry and commerce.

IN MEMORIAM

Father found a friend in Jesus,
While here on earth he trod,
He has left a world of sorrows
To dwell in Heaven with God.

No suffering and no cares,
But live in bliss, beyond all this
And with the Angels Heaven's

There is only a curtain between us,
Between the beyond and here
He whom we call dead has not

Nay, he was never so near,
Not dead but only promoted,

He has finished his labor of
