HEAVY RAINS FALL HERE LAST NIGHT

FDR Sure Court Bill To Be Passed

Through the Editor's Spectacles
By GEORGE

Pampa is staging a big affair this week-end, judging from the size of the special edition which the Pampa Daily News issued to advertise the event, which is known as the "Top O' Texas Fiesta." A copy of this edition has just come to my desk. The varied industrial activities upon which Pampa depends for support are graphically portrayed in a hand-drawn frontispiece in the center of which a great lone star outlines the Pampa country map with the location and name of the sectional metropolis boldly printed thereon in red.

Live, up-and-doing people make a community, and that is what Pampa seems to have. This progressive, aggressive type of people distinguish many of the newer towns, built by oil or some other more or less sensational activity. The sweep of initiative stimulated by the battle to recover a natural resource or subdue an obstacle carries on past the point of triumph with an assurance and an enthusiasm that builds where opportunities are not apparent to the lazy or unconcerned. When this activity is directed by commonsense and foresight, it results in constant community growth. Where the wisdom does not exist, it is merely a whirlwind of wasted energy.

Most necessary in any enterprise is a goal and a plan. Without these those who have charge of such enterprises are running from pillar to post, snatching at casual things without regard for direction or order and ending up by being wound in a cocoon of confusion and futility. There is in every community where aggressive action is reaping the rewards of progress a more or less apparent plan of action. It may only be sensed, but the feel of direction and the knowledge of an aim is there. The plan may not be expressed in so many words or lines of drawing, but it is a reality within the spheres of leadership, and those who contribute to its promotion simply put down their figurative hands, so to speak, and seize the moving idea underneath, as old cable cars used to seize with grabs the cable that carried them along.

A planned program, it seems to me, would be a distinct asset to any community such as ours. Too many cities which once knew the enthusiasm of doing and pleasures of achieving now sit hopefully but helplessly, waiting for fortune to shine from some unexpected quarter. For such communities there will eventually happen that Elbert Hubbard once remarked always happens to the man totally lacking in initiative--fate will come slipping up with a

AMENDMENTS FOR MEASURE TO BE GIVEN

Administration May Accept Modification, Says

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—President Roosevelt told the press conference today that there was no question but that the court reorganization bill would be passed this session. He parried questions about compromise but indicated, by saying Senator Robinson gave a correct statement last night, that the administration might accept modification.

Robinson said that amendments would be offered to the bill when it came upon the floor, to which senator Burke of Nebraska, opponent to the legislation, answered with a no compromise stand.

Robinson's statement in which he hinted strongly of the possibility of such a compromise, came after a white house conference last night.

Robinson at the same time said he was not a candidate for the supreme court vacancy created by the retirement of Justice Van Devanter and that it had not been discussed with the president.

The Arkansas senator said after the two-hour session at the executive mansion that the bill to add new justices to the court if incumbents over 70 do not retire would be pressed for action at this session.

Amendments Promised
He quickly added, however, that some amendments would be submitted and that he may offer one himself.

Robinson would not disclose what the amendments would be, saying "You will have to wait and see."

There have been persistent reports that the bill will be passed.

HOUSE PASSES RACE REPEAL BILL 93 TO 13

Signature of Allred Is Now All That Is Needed

AUSTIN, June 4 (AP)—The house passed 93 to 13 today the bill the senate had already approved outlawing pari-mutuel wagering.

Because the bill had failed by a two-thirds majority in the senate it will be effective in ninety days, probably late in September. The governor's signature is needed to complete the legislative action.

The senate had already passed the measure Thursday.

Bringing to a climax a controversy which long had torn the legislature, it passed 17 to 14, a bill repealing the law which four years ago authorized pari-mutuel wagering at the tracks. Then it clinched the matter by refusing to reconsider the action and adjourning until Monday.

The vote at this session of the legislature, an extraordinary one called by Governor James V. Allred last week for the sole purpose of settling the issue, was a reiteration of views also expressed at the recent regular session. In the regular meeting, the bill which swept through the house on an avalanche of votes died on the senate calendar.

When the matter of race betting repeal finally was disposed of, the governor told the senate in a special message, the subjects of outlawing betting and laws against other forms of gambling, as well as disposition of state-owned jacks and stallions financed by revenue from tracks, would be submitted.

Plans for Cisco Lobo Band's Trip to Weatherford Completed Today

Plans for the Cisco Lobo band's trip to the Weatherford Lion's club convention next week were completed this morning.

The band will leave by school bus about 11:30 Tuesday, Band Director R. L. Maddox stated today. He also reported that about 45 of the members will make the trip.

According to the director the band will play a concert at Weatherford at 3 o'clock Tuesday and immediately following the program the musicians will march and play on the streets of that town.

Another "Fun Fest" will be presented soon, the band leader also reported. Plans for the program have not been completed but they are being worked out by the band parents club. This will be presented by the Lobo band for the purpose of raising money to complete the payment for the two tympani which the club secured for the organization earlier in the year.

This will be the second "Fun Fest" for the band this year. The first one was an enjoyable program and this one is expected to be even better with the addition of several popular songs to the band's list of numbers. The complete program for the performance will be announced soon.

Maddox said that the intermediate junior band will meet every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday morning at 9 o'clock during the summer.

UNITED FRONT IS PROPOSED

Action Against Italy, Germany Sought

MOSCOW, June 4 (AP)—The Komintern of the third communist international, today ended its quarrel with the second socialist international, proposing a united front throughout the world for "action against German and Italian intervention in Spain."

George Dimitroff, Komintern secretary-general, said that the German shelling of Almeria had caused the move. He said that mobilization of masses of workers would force British and French governments to take energetic steps against fascist intervention in Spain and that Germany and Italy would be forced to withdraw their troops and ships.

Communist and socialist labor union parties in Spain appealed for a "united front to save Spain," Dimitroff said.

The Komintern proposed a pact to include a national league of labor unions.

Lightning Burns Humble Gathering Plant at Pioneer

Fire, believed to have been caused by a bolt of lightning which followed power lines into the plant, igniting oil in transformers and switches, destroyed the Fleming field gathering station of the Humble Pipe Line company about a mile south of Pioneer between 4 and 5 this morning. None of the oil on location was lost, only that left in the pumps when the plant was shut down for the night at 9 p. m. Thursday being burned.

The plant, which gathers oil from the Brown county field for delivery to the Company tank farm, was electric driven. The three pumps, one a suction bringing oil into the station, and the wooden frame and sheet iron structure and other station equipment were destroyed, with a loss in the neighborhood of $50,000. The fire occurred during a series of heavy thunderstorms.

The station had a daily delivery capacity of 11,000 barrels and was being operated on an 1,800-barrel schedule.

Perkins Doubtful of Fixed Minimum Wage

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP)—Secretary Perkins told a congressional committee today that she was not sure of the wisdom of writing a fixed minimum wage into the proposed labor standards act.

RAINFALL IS ACCOMPANIED BY LIGHTNING

Heavy Fall Is Also Reported in Eastland and Ranger

The steady downpour that fell all Thursday night after beginning about 10 o'clock resulted in 1.2 inches of rain for Cisco. This brings the total rainfall for Cisco to 2.6 inches for the past week.

All the rains have been slow soaking ones that will give full benefit to the cotton crops and pastures of this section. Though steady, Thursday night's showers were not exceptionally hard.

A heavy thunderstorm and brilliant electrical displays accompanied the rain last night.

A report this morning said that the rain was very heavy in Eastland and Ranger and that the buses were delayed 30 minutes during the night.

It was reported also that lightning struck a tree on west seventh street during the electrical storm.

THREE INJURED AT M'CAMERY

A report to the west Texas division headquarters of the Humble Pipe Line company here this morning from the tornado-stricken McCamey sector said that three people were injured, but none were killed in the storm which followed heavy rain and hail early last night.

The Humble's offices there were flooded by the rain and the big pumping plant was operated last night with hand lamps after the storm had swept over lines into a tangle of debris, shutting the community off from any source of current supply. The plant, which must be kept running, will probably continue to be operated with the use of flashlights in lieu of current for the lighting system tonight.

The town was badly damaged, the report said, many residences and other buildings being destroyed and numerous others unroofed by the wind. A ten-stall garage was lost by the Humble.

Brilliant electrical displays characterized disturbances over a wide area of west Texas. McCamey, however, was the only point reporting damage. Fifty buildings were either completely or partially wrecked.

Residents of the south section of the town were marooned when floodwaters from a hammering deluge poured across a section south of the heart of the city. Power was crippled by the blast and the town was left in blackness.

The injured were: Mrs. R. L. Bell, of Rankin, cuts and bruises; Mrs. E. E. Johnson of McCamey, cuts and lacerations about the face, and Gus Rousch, broken collar bone.

Amount of water was not estimated, but water was reported running from the main street into store buildings after the deluge fell.

Other sections were more fortunate than McCamey. Lightning, wind and hail had done no reported damage, and although the fall in two localities reached flood proportions, no ill results were immediately seen.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling. Blessed are they that put their trust in Him.—Ps. 11: 11, 12.

Remember:

Amid all life's quests There seems but worthy one—to do men good. It matters not how long we live, but how. —FESTUS.

Significant Attitude

CRITICS of the attitude of the government and the Church of England toward the wedding of the Duke of Windsor, erstwhile king of England, and the American woman for whom he gave up his throne will applaud the courage of the English vicar who braved the frowns of the Anglican prelates and possible loss of his priestly commission, to go to Monts, France, and give the marital union the blessing of the church. The vicar's remark, "I prefer to die rather than see my king married outside the church," is perhaps too significant of the real attitude of much that is English toward the former king and his bride. Another may wear the crown, but millions still feel in their hearts that Edward is king by a right more divine than the proclamation of a government. The English institution of kingship is no stronger in its essential role in the British empire than the affections of the people subject to this institution, and while the efforts and thought of those charged with the preservation and unity of the empire are laudably devoted to keeping it inviolate, it would seem that the romance of the American born woman and the former king is fraught with such tremendous interest that it is itself too rare an opportunity for inviting national harmony to risk inflaming popular sentiment by too harsh treatment of the principals.

Anglo-American Pact

THE outlook for an Anglo-American trade agreement which might be enlarged to bring the United States into trade relations with the British empire comparable to the favorable positions held by the various dominions under the Ottawa agreement is said to be favorable. While opinions in that direction are the result of interpretations of recent British cabinet changes and suggestions made at the imperial conference in London, there are indications that any move toward bringing this country into a more favored trade relationship with the empire would be met with favor by the dominions, some of which are reported willing to modify the Ottawa agreement to accomplish this purpose, if it is found that this agreement stands in the way of such a pact.

IN the case of Canada, especially, and to a somewhat less but still important extent with other British dominions, trade relationships with the United States are valued to such a degree that there is unwillingness to obstruct this intercourse, and this sentiment will doubtless prove a powerful influence upon the movement toward such an agreement.

WHAT IT MEANS---

President's Economy Move

By MORGAN M. BEATTY

AP Feature Service Writer

WASHINGTON, June 4.—President Roosevelt's demand for federal economy and the echoing fanfare in congress is merely the bitter ingredient in a new bottle of economic medicine.

And it's not the strongest stuff in the bottle, either.

The whole concoction is simply a financial sedative to keep American business from getting the jitters after four years of stimulating tonic.

The tonic was prescribed in 1933 by the president and his advisers with the aid of J. Maynard Keynes, the British economic doctor.

That formula decreed the patient needed a stiff stimulant. The tonic he got was a mixture of federal borrowing and spending for the simple purpose of getting plenty of money into the hands of the buying public.

For the After Effect

The fact is, federal borrowing and spending is a form of inflation. Every borrowed federal dollar has a germ of "wild money" in it, because it is based, not upon a gold standard, but upon government credit. And wild money can always start a runaway boom in prices, just like the boom of 1928. Everybody knows what happened after that, in 1929. The boom burst.

So, when the president put his spending policy in effect, he knew he was going to have to cook up something later to soothe business nerves after the spree was over.

Apparently the rise in prices early this year gave him the cue that the time had come to administer the sedative, so he started mixing the medicine early in March.

Four Points of Action

Here's what happened: 1. Late in that month, and again early in May the federal reserve board ordered member banks to increase their reserves, thus bottling up close to five billion dollars and holding it out of the nation's money stream. Thus there's less money to work with, now.

2. Attorney General Homer Cummings started suing the Aluminum Company of America under the anti-trust laws. This was supposed to slow up too rapid a price expansion in many lines, just like a cop arresting one speeder will slow down other drivers who see that unpleasant little drama of the highway.

3. The president warned the public and government employees to stay out of the stock market unless they are buying for investment. The theory is that every dollar borrowed to speculate in stocks stimulates abnormally high stocks, after the manner of 1929.

4. Not content to stop there, the president wrote a letter to Vice-President John Garner opposing legislation that would put a federal blessing on state laws fixing prices on trade-marked goods. Such laws, he said, would tend to raise price levels and provide an undue hazard for the average householder. (Since then prices have been declining.)

Crossed Signals

Then came the bitter stuff—that is, bitter stuff for politicians who have to run for congress next year.

The president broke the sad news that treasury experts got their signals crossed, and overestimated tax receipts for the fiscal year 1937 and 1938. Instead of a balance budget next year, he said drastic action would be required to avert a half billion dollar deficit. The 1937 deficit will cross the two billion and a half dollar mark regardless of what is done.

"I regard it as extremely important that we should achieve a balance of actual income and outgo for the fiscal year 1938," he said.

One reason is that more government deficit means adding to the $35,000,000,000 national debt. That means more federal borrowing again, more borrowing puts more money in circulation, and simply means further price inflation.

Taking Dose in Advance

For instance, more money means more pennies in people's pockets to cover the price of a loaf of bread, and bread will naturally command a higher price, and so on, until the vicious circle is repeated. Therefore, every one of the five movies made by the administration on the economic front since the Eccles statement of March 25—a statement from Mar-

A Washington Daybook

WASHINGTON, June 4.—People who are so dead set on having the federal government run everything would enjoy watching congress administer the affairs of the city of Washington.

The people here can't vote. They can only scream. So for members of congress to make a sort of governmental guinea pig of the city is as safe as playing with fireless firecrackers. There was an exception, Representative Blanton of Texas, who got the "red rider" passed.

Only within the last day or so did congress finally lift the "red rider" off the neck of the city. It was a provision tacked to an appropriation bill two years ago to prohibit school teachers "teaching" communism in the city schools. They had to sign a form each month avowing that they had let slip never a word about how 160,000,000 Russians are governed. Otherwise they got no pay.

Russia's a Blank They couldn't even "explain" communism with safety. So they just gave it up. Officially, as far as Washington school students are concerned, Russia is just a blank space on the map, like Antarctica. One biology teacher insists she was taking no risk of losing her pay check, so told her pupils that blood was composed of white corpuscles "and the other kind."

Blanton was defeated in the 1936 primaries and the unpopularity of the "red rider" was accepted as part of the reason. But there was a stout handful in the house opposed to repealing the act. They wanted to defeat communism by hiding it under a bushel.

To understand how congress can be doing these things, it must be remembered that the District of Columbia is governed by congress and the president in a manner resembling a combination of governor, state legislature, mayor and town council.

Slaughter House The same day the "red rider" finally was repealed, the house listened to an extended debate between Mrs. Norton, representative from New Jersey, and Representative O'Connor of New York over whether Washington, 250 miles from either state, should have a slaughter house. Mrs. Norton argued that slaughter house people have lost sight of the finer things for which Washington was intended but she

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

From the Rippling Wheat

By IRVIN S. COBB

WHEN Lawrence Wheat, the comedian, first came to New York from his home in West Virginia, with intent to go on the stage, he had for awhile rather rough sledding. After he had played small parts in several important productions he heard that a leading manager was casting a troupe for a new farce. His informant told him there was a part in the play which, in his opinion, Wheat was well qualified to undertake. The young Virginian lost no time in calling on the manager. He succeeded in fighting his way past the office boy to the inner office where the great man sat at his desk. Wheat told his name and voiced his ambition. "I never heard of you before," said the manager. "Are you an actor?" "I am," said Wheat. "Well," said the manager, "you don't look like an actor to me." "I don't want to look like an actor," said Wheat. "It's tough enough to have to be one." (American News Features, Inc.)

Here Is Way To Remember Court Changes

WASHINGTON, June 4. (AP)—Here's an easy way to keep in mind the various changes in the number of judges on the supreme court the next time you get in an argument.

- The formula is supplied by Representative Golden of California: 1789: Congress decided at first to fix The number of justices at six. 1801: Congress planned on a change at five, But the six remained very much alive. 1807: Six high judges, supreme as heaven— And Jefferson added number seven. 1837: Seven high judges, all in line— Two more added, and that made nine. 1863: Nine high judges were sitting when Lincoln made them an even ten. 1866: Ten high judges, very sedate; When congress got thru there were only eight. 1869: Eight high judges who wouldn't resign; Grant brought the figure back to nine.

MURDER ON THE BLUFF

SYNOPSIS: The mysterious shooting to death of attractive Jude Blinshop makes us all jittery on this wild, stormy weekend at Farrington Bluff, home of Michael's aunt. A series of strange attacks is apparently explained when we find below the bluff the body of Michael's mad father, supposedly long since dead. But our relief is brief. Aunt Martha is shot in the shoulder by an unseen hand. Who held the gun? Mike; the Skipper, his tall, tweedy younger aunt; Gay Palmer, his sweetheart; Higgins, the old butler; William the chauffeur; Cook; Annie, the maid?

Chapter 30
The Skipper Vanishes

Higgins was as much a fixture on Farrington Bluff as the old house itself. With every breath she drew, Martha Farrington defended anything that pertained to the old order of things. But would she defend her butler at the risk of involving the nephew whom she regarded almost as a son? I thought not.

In short, I came to the conclusion that if the angle of the mirror would allow a glimpse of anyone standing in the doorway, M. Farrington had seen a woman's arm. If not, she had merely imagined that she saw something. The person who had killed Jude Blinshop was the same person who had tried to kill Martha and the same person who had lured Norman Farrington over the cliff to his death. And that person must be in the house, known to every one of us.

If that individual had pried open the locked door of Jude Blinshop's room, he was a person of considerable strength. Michael had only one hand. Higgins was too feeble. Annie and M. Farrington were not conceivably strong enough. William, Cook, Gay, and myself were left—possibilities, but not probabilities. I was getting too involved in the subject.

"Mike," I said, "there'll be a boat from shore by morning at the latest. Have you decided what we'll say to people?"

His clouded eyes had a somber look. "We ought to consult everyone before we decide. For Aunt Martha's sake. I think we should hush it up as much as we can. Old George Foster's the coroner. He can tell us what to do, and we can let him handle the police."

"What about the Blinshops?"

Michael's face was growing darker and darker. "As soon as we can get across, I'll go down there. I think—I should."

I knew what he was thinking. Everything would depend upon Jude's family. We could tell them that she had been shot by accident while one of us had been playing with a gun. If they would accept that statement and the coroner in action was no different from the coroner on a fishing trip, the name of the body in the billiard room might be left out of the case altogether. We could—

Right there I stopped, struck by an unhappy thought. If we were to smooth this thing over—hush it up—we would be running a terrible risk. Either at Farrington Bluff or among us in town there would remain a dangerous homicidal maniac, unknown and therefore infinitely dangerous. On the face of the thing, I wondered that Mike could consider it.

"Do you think we have a right to risk it?"

He glanced up at me swiftly, and then back to the fire.

"Yes," noncommittally.

"But suppose something else happens?"

It was a squeamish way to put it, but he understood me. Leaning forward, he surveyed me with weary, patient eyes.

"You'll have to trust me a little, Jim. I don't think anything else will happen."

I started at him. M. Farrington shot down like a rabbit! And nothing else would happen!

"Have you any reason for thinking so?"

"No, of course not." Michael roused himself, knocked the ashes out of his pipe, and slipped the thing into his pocket. "Don't be so jittery."

Three Murders?

"You wouldn't be so calm yourself if the police were scheduled to arrive within a few hours and everyone from the kitchen maid up suspected you of three murders."

"Three?" He shot the word at me, suddenly on the alert. "How do you figure three?"

"Well," I said cautiously, "one certainly, one possibility, and one attempt."

"So you think my father was murdered, do you?"

"I think it's damned likely that someone coaxed him out to that bluff."

"You're crazy!" said Michael roughly. "Why the devil would anyone—"

Gay's voice jumped at us from the door. "Have you seen the Skipper?" I've looked all over the house. I—I can't find her!"

"She's in Aunt Martha's room," said Michael. "What are you talking about?"

Gay leaned against the door. "But she isn't! I've looked three times. And I've been all over the

Was that Michael on the stairs? Gay had heard it, too, for she was half out of her chair. He was going down the hall in the direction of the servants' quarters. I continued the cream-puff chatter feverishly.

"Don't mention that evidence. I'll dream of it for months. I'm sure of it."

She didn't answer. Our pretense of lightness was very flat. We were sitting there, gripping the arms of our chairs, waiting—waiting for an eternity of dragging time. Then at last came Mike's steps in the dining room. Gay fairly bounced to meet him.

"Well?" she demanded before he was in the room.

He was worried. There were sharp lines around his mouth, and his scowl was bewildered.

"Aunt Martha's awfully quiet. Do you know anything about these damned drugs, either of you?"

I shook my head, but Gay was clutching his arm.

"Did you find the Skipper?"

Michael averted his face. "She's probably out feeding the dogs. Poor mutts must be nearly starved. I'll just run out and find her. I'm sure she's there."

Gay looked on the point of screaming. I shoved in my ear.

"Wait a minute, Mike. I don't mind looking. I'll take William along to guarantee my conduct. You stay here with Gay."

I knew that he wanted to do the searching himself, but one look at the chalky face at his elbow changed his mind.

"Thanks, Jim," he said. "William's getting his things on—I've already called him. You'll find us up with Aunt Martha."

I hurried into the hall, where I found a conglomerate assortment of boots and oilskins in the closet. Kicking off my shoes, I dragged on the likeliest looking pair of boots and headed for the kitchen, struggling into an oilskin as I went. At the game room door a disturbing thought halted me.

Snapping on a light, I stepped to the billiard table and lifted the white cloth. This time there was no mistake. The table held what it was supposed to hold.

I started to replace the cover, when I had another idea. One by one I went through the soggy pockets of Norman Farrington. And sure enough, in the breast pocket of his coat, I found what I was seeking—a key.

Rising Star Farmers Visit Dublin Soil Project on Observation Tour

By C. L. WILSON
In Rising Star Record

Five F. F. A. boys and thirty-four farmers from Rising Star took advantage of the opportunity offered by the Rising Star chamber of commerce to attend the federal government soil conservation project located at Dublin, Texas, last Friday. This project located on the Green's creek watershed about mid-way between Dublin and Stephenville has been underway some 2 years and comprises about 32,000 acres of land. The government has under agreement about 20,000 acres of this land and hopes to get the balance of it before the project is completed. By the term "Agreement" we mean that the government through expert soil conservation goes over the farms, makes a map of them, and plans with the farmers the cropping systems and terracing systems to be used on each farm over a period of 5 years. Each farmer agrees to adopt the plan worked out and furnish a definite percentage of the labor and expense involved in carrying out the plan.

Unlike the work carried on by some soil conservation projects the work carried on at Dublin is strictly practical regardless of its financial status. The government has entirely eliminated the use of concrete for check dams and uses rock only in such places as where they may be found abundantly close by and may be easily obtained. In fact, the men composing this group saw examples of washing being controlled in only one or two gullies by the use of rock check dams; however this is practical in many instances when rock may be easily obtained on the farm. The government has accepted a plan of using native grasses instead. In moderately steep and rigid draws and washes are sown to save small grain like oats which has a good root system and will appreciatively check washing. These oats will be cut for feed when mature. Where the draws and gullies are too steep for profitable cultivation, they are fenced off from the rest of the field and used for pasture. The gullies being sodded by bermuda and other grasses that make good pasture but eliminates further washing. Winter pasture for such places as well as for upland pasture was planned with a mixture of Bur clover, Black Medic clover, Rescue grass and Italian Rye grass while late spring and summer pasture was dependent mainly on bermuda grass. The carrying capacity of all pastures were more than double where the farmers were grazing sheep, goats, and cattle on the same pasture. The sheep grazing preferably on weeds, the goats on shrubbery and the cattle on grasses. Run off and erosion on native pasture was completely stopped through the use of contour ridges and contour furrows. The great need for holding the water on pasture land was strongly emphasized through the green and vigorous color of grasses growing along the upper and lower sides of the contour ridges.

Terraces running on cultivated land were variable graded terraces by this term we mean for the first 2 or 3 hundred feet the terrace was run lined, for the next 2 or 3 hundred feet it was given a drop of 1 inch per 100 feet, and for the next 2 or 3 hundred feet it was given a drop of 2 inches per 100 feet and so on, depending on the length of the terrace. The first year that the terraces are built they are sown to oats to help prevent the terraces from breaking before they have properly settled.

Therefore, when strip cropping with oats is practiced the oats are sowed between terraces to prevent any washing between terraces and row crops are planted along and on the terraces. If oats are not planted on the terrace the first year a mixture of cowpeas and sorghum cane may be planted on the terrace for hay. The cowpeas enriching the soil on the new terrace and the root system of the sorghum cane preventing the terrace from breaking. Other row crops or small grain being planted or sowed between terraces. All terrace outlets are sloped and sodded to bermuda grass or some other grass with a good root system to keep the terrace channel from washing where it empties into the terrace outlet ditch. Terrace outlet ditches were sodded to bermuda grass to keep them from washing. Some fields that were unfit for cultivation due to the effects of erosion, were planted to black locust trees which are legumes and enrich the soil. They have an extensive root system checking further erosion and grow rapidly and make excellent fence post, lasting even longer than cedar post. All in all, the program is very practical and let me repeat, may be adopted by every farmer in the Rising Star community through a little planning and effort put forth by the landlord. I think that every man making the trip realized the practicability of the thing. The same climatic condition and the same type of soil only about 40 miles from Rising

Anti-Advertising Bill Attacked by Publishers Brief

AUSTIN, June 4.—Dentists carried their bridge work too far, lawyers for Texas newspapers told Gov. Allred in a legal brief.

They abridged the constitution, that said, "no law ever shall be passed, abridging the freedom of the press."

Legal brief, for the publishers' association, insisted the recently-passed bill, that prohibits truthful, as well as untruthful, advertising by licensed dentists, clearly runs afoul of the constitution.

Another legal brief, prepared by lawyers for the dentists who championed the "ethical" no-advertising bill urges the act would be perfectly valid and all right, and does not curb the freedom of the press to publish truthful matter.

Gov. Allred is studying the two briefs, to decide within the next nine days whether he shall veto the dental advertising bill. Newspapers, headed by Ted Dealey, president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers association, urged the veto on these grounds:

1. It is void, infringing the freedom of the press.
2. If it were not void, it is bad. Texas has plenty of laws to prevent untruthful advertising, and the full cooperation of all legitimate newspapers to enforce them.
3. It is an anti-competition, monopolistic measure, designed to restrict practice, and having the possible effect of sustaining prices for services, since competitors could not disclose their professional charges.
4. It is bad, in giving a dental society the power to cause revocation of the license of a dentist, destroying his professional standing and his livelihood.
5. It would be the forerunner of identical "closed shop" laws against advertising by members of every profession and licensed group.

Already, sponsors of bills to protect prices of drugs and medicines have announced if this law is signed they will pass bills—designed solely for price fixing—to prohibit advertising drugs, except a reproduction of the labels on the bottles.

Gov. Allred said he has not decided what to do with the dental advertising bill. Such voluminous briefs and protests, and pressure from dentists for its approval before him, that he will take them home to read at he said. It was known he is concerned with the probable constitutionality of the act, set out in the newspaper publishers' brief; and this brief was his closest study and scrutiny.
