OUR RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

By WESTBROOK PEGLER.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11. — The incidents of this conference thus far and the demeanor of the Russians, must remind any American with an honest memory that many offices of the national government, and many in powerful unions of the CIO are occupied by men and women who would turn against the United States in any conflict of interest with Russia. This attitude was shown during the period between the start of the war in the fall of 1939 and June 21, 1941, when Hitler attacked Russia. During that time, the American Communists and many, although not all, of their fellow-travelers, were not merely pro-Russian but anti-American. No cry for "unity" nor fear of the recorded truth can discredit the memory of picket lines denouncing the war then as an imperialist venture of Britain and France in which the American government was abetting the aggressors. The White House itself was picketed, and strikes were contrived by the Communists in CIO unions, one of which Franklin D. Roosevelt denounced as a violent insurrection inspired by an alien philosophy, namely Communism, to hinder this nation's efforts to re-arm. Throughout an early period under the New Deal, covering several years, this large and clamorous element in the union movement and in that group which had preempted the title of "liberal," opposed all proposals that the United States prepare to meet an armed challenge. The counter-proposal here was that this country remain weak militarily and rely on Russia to uphold freedom against Hitlerism and Fascism. Between the start of the war and Hitler's blow at Russia, the relations between the New Deal and the Communist front were austere. But after June 21, 1941, the Communists and the New Dealers in Washington soon became reconciled, and in a very brief period predictions that these people would be recognized again were confirmed. The National Maritime Union was given political encouragement and practical help in its purpose of assuming control of the manning and operation of a merchant fleet created by the people of the United States.

Henry Wallace, then vice president, fraternized publicly with Joseph Curran, the president of this organization which, in all the meanderings of the Communist party line, had hewn to that line. Franklin D. Roosevelt sent greetings to the CIO's union of office workers, a similar organization, whose president, calling himself Lewis Merrill, had dropped his original name after migrating to the United States from Canada.

Mrs. Roosevelt openly placed herself in social and political fellowship with such persons and, at Roosevelt's fourth inauguration, one of the guests at the White House listed by Marshall Field's New York outlet for Communist propaganda was a thief named Margois, who had changed his name to Gallmor, and now was preaching over a station of the Blue Network the current line of the Communists. His sponsor was a Russian immigrant manufacturing secret electrical equipment, who also is associated with prominent Communists.

The Dies Committee was made the target of a historic anti-American conspiracy because it had exposed the guilt of thousands of pseudo-American Communist unioners, New Deal bureaucrats, and influential government employees, and finally was blasted out of existence. Since then, its irreplaceable records have disappeared, and the only man who could have interpreted them and traced the relationships between myriad names, including aliases and organizations, has been hounded into the Army through the draft. Thus the Army wins a soldier 32 years old and of sedentary type, and Congress loses the services of a living index to a complex record of treachery. He is Robert Stripling, the committee's chief investigator.

Now, for Russia, the German war is over and Russia has no other war. The United States still has a war to win against Japan, as a result of which Russia stands in line to inherit an Asiatic empire without firing a shot or even providing military accommodations for American and British forces.

President Harry Truman has inherited from the long Roosevelt regime a dangerous domestic organization of conspirators who, in all situations in which American interests and Russian intentions disagree, may be relied on to uphold Russia.

He never has been sympathetic with this element, but he will need, a new Attorney-General, free of obligation to Sidney Hillman's Political Action Committee, and the help of a Congress now liberated from executive dictation, to enforce existing laws against revolutionary conspiracy and to provide new laws for domestic security.

Probably, as a result of the Russian attitude in the last few weeks, he and Congress will receive sudden great encouragement from a people now convinced that, just as we grant Russia the right to conduct her internal affairs without interference from us, American security requires similar freedom at home.

Throughout this conference there have been repetitious reminders that for 15 years the United States did not give Russia her confidence and did not understand Russia.

But the reason the American people could not give Russia their confidence was that in their midst an organization directed from Moscow was diligently undermining the American government under the protection of American laws.

The reason Americans could not understand Russia was that Russia purposely maintained a mystery and was understood by only a few Americans who adopted the Russian ideal of dictatorship and ruthless power as a basis of that understanding.

Now, apparently, even with Russia alone, victorious and relieved of the burdens and pains of war, the American people will be called on to continue lenience to Russia and her continental satellites. The scene has shifted without changing much.
