Firemen took a resuscitator when they roared out to the rescue of two children marooned on a ram. The chilldren stood there in helpless fright, in dazzling, rushing water not quite strong enough to wash them over the edge. It seemed all too likely that the resuscitator would come in

But the children were still there, and a fireman brought them safely ashore. Then his foot slipped, he hit his head and fell unconscious into the water. He was an excellent example of a drowning victim when found and fished out. His mates unshipped the resusci don't want us to have jurisdiction tator, set it up on a log-the thing over our land.
